

UNIVERSITY OF ST. MICHAEL'S COLLEGE

3 1761 04329 8058

FOR REFERENCE

NOT TO BE TAKEN FROM THIS ROOM

DA 30
G 798
1901

1

DEC. 11. 1901.

THE LIBRARY
RESURRECTION CO.

Joan Evans with love from her father & mother
Christmas 1903.

A SHORT HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH PEOPLE

VOL I

London; Macmillan & Co. Ltd.

Stanford's Geographical Establishment

A SHORT HISTORY
OF THE
ENGLISH PEOPLE

BY JOHN RICHARD GREEN M.A.

Illustrated Edition

EDITED BY MRS. J. R. GREEN AND MISS KATE NORGATE

VOLUME I

London
MACMILLAN & CO LIMITED
JAMES FINCH & CO LIMITED

1901

THE LIBRARY
RESURRECTION COLLEGE
ST. JEROME'S COLLEGE
TRANSVALE

THE LIBRARY
RESURRECTION COLLEGE
TRANSVALE

1310

PREFACE TO ILLUSTRATED EDITION

IT was a favourite wish of my husband's to see English History interpreted and illustrated by pictures which should tell us how men and things appeared to the lookers-on of their own day, and how contemporary observers aimed at representing them. This new edition of his book is an attempt to carry out such an idea. It has seemed most fitting to choose for the purpose the work of the writer who by the brilliance of his historic imagination has recovered for Englishmen many regions of the past left waste and neglected, and brought to light costly treasures that had long lain hidden in some of its most obscure corners. The "Short History," with its vivid realization of all that goes to make up the life of a People, lends itself in a singular way to illustrations which are themselves the work of the people century by century, and the wisdom of the historian is constantly justified as the details of some vivid description, or the significance with which some incident is clothed, or the new measure and proportion given to facts that before his time were common and despised, are finely emphasized by the work of old scribes or artists to whom all these things were present realities.

And there is another reason why this book should be chosen for illustration of this kind. The very existence of the "Short History" is in itself a truly significant fact in the record of the English people. For the book, standing alone as it does among the histories of the nations, must remain as one of the most characteristic products of our English life, and is in some sort the very expression of the people among whom it was conceived and for whom it was written. With its roots sunk deep in our English soil, made of the very substance of our English life, its whole character determined by the special conditions of our English society, it has taken the very impress of the temper and qualities which have given to the struggle of this people for their national liberties its peculiar spirit and form. Nor would it be easy to measure the influence which the book has actually exerted in this generation, both in giving a new direction and method to historical study, and in giving to the people a fuller consciousness of what our Commonwealth imports. Read by hundreds of thousands of Englishmen, it has not passed through their hands without communicating something of that passion of patriotism by which it is itself inspired, as it creates and illuminates for the English democracy the vision of the continuous life of a mighty people, and as it quickens faith in that noble ideal of freedom which we have brought as our great contribution to the sum of human effort. Among English-speaking people beyond the seas, where it has a yet greater number of readers than here, it has helped to strengthen the sense of kinship and the reverence for our common past. I have known an American who, reading this History for the first time in middle life, was so stirred by the memories it brought him that he found means to leave his business in one of the Western States and travel to England, that he might visit Ebbsfleet. So strong and direct was the sense which he had gained from our history of the common tie that bound English-speaking peoples together, and so generous were the instincts which sprang from such a lofty fellowship, that it came to him as a personal shock, almost as a reproach for the wiping away of which he from his far country earnestly desired to give his efforts, to learn that at the last Mr. Green had not been laid to rest in his own land, but, by one of those infinite renunciations that death exacts, had been in death separated from his people.

I would say but a few words as to the character and sources of the illustrations themselves. In a book whose pages overflow with the abounding fulness and variety of English life, where place has been found "for figures little heeded in common history—figures of the missionary, the poet, the printer, the merchant, or the philosopher" (p. xxv), as well as for the labourer, the wandering beggar, and the artizan, no narrow limit can be set to the choice of illustrations. The selection therefore has always been determined by a desire to get at the contemporary view of men and things rather than by canons of art. Nothing has been shut out which served this purpose, and indirectly therefore the whole series of illustrations comes to be an interesting record not only of the changes that passed over English life, but of some of the changes that passed over its modes of expression as certain forms of art rose to their perfection, or falling into contempt declined to ruder forms, or were even blotted out in a temporary desolation. For the early life of our forefathers illustrations have been chosen from household implements, vessels, armour, or ornaments which have been preserved in this country, and also very largely from foreign sources, such as the Danish and Swedish collections made by Worsaae and Montelius of relics of the English kin who remained beyond sea; thus, for example, illustrations of the Old English religion, of which hardly a trace remains here, may be discovered in the personal ornaments decorated with symbols of the old Norse deities which are found in Scandinavia. So also some specimens of early Irish building, metal-work, and illuminations, have been added to those pages which have really restored to English readers the memory of "the missionary and the poet" who brought Irish art and Irish religion to Britain. From the eighth to the sixteenth century the great mass of illustrations, whether of characteristic scenes, of early buildings, of arts or industries or dress or manner of life, have been taken from illuminated manuscripts preserved in the British Museum, in the Public Record Office, at Lambeth, in the Bodleian and some of the Oxford Colleges, in the University Library of Cambridge and the Libraries of Corpus Christi and Trinity Colleges; while some others from manuscripts in private collections have been obtained, necessarily at second-hand, through the medium of the engravings in "Vetusta Monumenta," "Archæologia," &c. When the manuscripts fail their place is taken by specimens of early printing, the engraved ornamental title-pages of the sixteenth and seventeenth centuries, the woodcuts on titles of seventeenth century tracts, the figures which adorn the corners of maps, or the rich store of beautiful engravings of the later eighteenth century. Satirical prints, the rough woodcuts or engravings of broadsheets and popular ballads, common playing cards, and tradesmen's advertisements have been used as freely as the more "artistic" materials, both as giving a lively sense of the attitude of the common people towards art and politics, and as occasionally possessing in their very uncouthness much historical significance. Sometimes traces of an early fresco, or the work of the seal engraver, the coiner, the medallist, or the glass-painter, or even some fragment of needlework have been found to preserve details which would otherwise have been lost. The goldsmith and ironsmith have left examples of fine artistic work, while illustrations taken from the carvers in wood and stone range from effigies of kings and queens and great statesmen (of some of whom no other genuine portrait exists) to the signs of London taverns and shops in the seventeenth century.

The "Short History" was the first book which distinguished the great part played in the history of the English people by the burghers of the towns, and it still remains the only history where the fight of those little scattered communities is pictured in its true significance and given its just place in the developement of the national life. Since, in Mr. Green's own words, "the mill by the stream, the tolls in the market-place, the brasses of its burghers in the church, the names of its streets, the lingering memory of its guilds, the mace of its mayor, tell us more of the past of England than the spire of Sarum or the martyrdom of Canterbury" (Intr. xviii), there will be found here the circuit of ancient walls and towers that guarded the little republic, the old streets and houses, the market cross, the brass memorial of the burgher, the ancient horns which summoned the commonalty to the market-place, the mayor in his robes, the mace, the rude justice with duel and stocks and gallows, the taverners and cooks and bakers and porters and armourers at their work, and the relics of the guild, its hall, its seal, its money-box, its school-house, its "arbour." In the case of buildings which have either totally vanished, such as the old Oxford buildings, old St. Paul's, London Bridge, Osenev, Bristol Bridge, the mayor's house at Lynn, &c., or which have been restored, as Rosslyn Chapel or the archbishop's hall at Mayfield, it has often been possible to use some illumination in a manuscript, or an early print or engraving or private drawing which recalls the original state of things, or occasionally a picture has been photographed—as, for example, the three pictures of London (c. 1750) in the Guildhall Art Gallery.

So also the indications of the text have been followed where the story passes over to foreign life. "A walk through Normandy teaches one more of the age of our history which we are about to traverse than all the books in the world." (See p. 134.) "To understand the history of England under its Angevin rulers, we must first know something of the Angevins themselves" (p. 185). This principle has been acted upon by giving some illustrations from Normandy and Anjou; and again in later days pictures from the France of Mary Stuart, and portraits of the Continental sovereigns and statesmen with whom England had to deal. The same feeling may be found in the large use made of Dutch engravings in the seventeenth century, which are here significant not only as far superior in point of art to the English productions of the time, but as showing the lively interest taken by foreigners in the details of English affairs at that period, and the great place which England filled in their imaginations; if the pictures do not recall the very form and features which we actually wore, they at least show that which others saw or imagined us to be. Finally, some relics of our kin in the New England across the Atlantic have been inserted, just as in the earlier time relics were gathered from the fatherland of the English race beyond the German Sea.

The portraits, which have in almost every case been engraved specially for this book, and some of which are now for the first time copied, have been chosen under the kind advice of Mr. George Scharf, C.B., Director of the National Portrait Gallery, and the most authentic likenesses have been thus secured.

It has been a deep source of pleasure and gratitude to me to find what ready help and interest have almost invariably been offered on all sides by the officials in the libraries and collections who have generously given their sympathy and their counsel. I especially desire to thank Mr. Madan, of the Bodleian, for his many valuable suggestions and courteous assistance. I would also most gratefully acknowledge the kindness with which those who possess private drawings or who own pictures not hitherto engraved or photographed, have allowed them to be reproduced for the illustrations of this book.

In conclusion, I am bound to add that in the laborious task of searching over so wide a field for illustrations and the difficult work of selection Miss Kate Norgate has worked with a devotion and intelligent care for which I cannot render adequate thanks, but which will I have no doubt win the gratitude of many readers. My sincere thanks are due to Mr. Cooper and the artists who have worked with him for the zeal and sympathy which they have thrown into their task, and their skill in its execution.

Alice Stopford Green.

14 KENSINGTON SQUARE,
March 9th, 1892.

INTRODUCTION

THE story of how the Short History of the English People came to be written would be the story of Mr. Green's life, from the time when his boyish interest was first awakened by the world beyond himself until his work was done. So closely are the work and the worker bound together that unless the biography be fully written no real account of the growth of the book can indeed be given. But in issuing a Revised Edition of the History, a slight sketch of the historical progress of the writer's mind, and of the gradual way in which the plan of his work grew up, may not seem out of place.

John Richard Green, who was born at Oxford in December 1837, was sent at eight years old to Magdalen Grammar School, then held in a small room within the precincts of the College. The Oxford world about him was full of suggestions of a past which very early startled his curiosity and fired his imagination. The gossiping tales of an old dame who had seen George the Third drive through the town in a coach and six were his first lessons in history. Year after year he took part with excited fancy in the procession of the Magdalen choir boys to the College tower on May Day, to sing at the sunrising a Hymn to the Trinity which had replaced the Mass chanted in pre-Reformation days, and to "jangle" the bells in recognition of an immemorial festival. St. Giles' fair, the "beating of the bounds," even the name of "Pennyfarthing Street," were no less records of a mysterious past than Chapel or College or the very trees of Magdalen Walk; and he once received, breathless and awe-struck, a prize from the hands of the centenarian President of the College, Dr. Routh, the last man who ever wore a wig in Oxford, a man who had himself seen Dr. Johnson stand in the High Street with one foot on either side of the kennel that ran down the middle of the way, the street boys standing round, "none daring to interrupt the meditations of the great lexicographer." "You are a clever boy," said the old man as he gave the prize and shook him by the hand.

His curiosity soon carried him beyond Oxford; and in very early days he learned to wander on Saints' days and holidays to the churches of neighbouring villages, and there shut himself in to rub brasses and study architectural mouldings. Other interests followed on his ecclesiastical training. He remembered the excitement which was produced in Oxford by Layard's discovery of the Nestorians in the Euphrates valley. One day Mr. Ramsay gathered round him the boys who were at play in Magdalen Walk and told them of his journey to see these people; and one at least of his hearers plunged eagerly into problems then much discussed of the relations of orthodox believers to Monophysites, and the distinctions between heresy and schism, questions which occupied him many years. Knowledge of this kind, he said long afterwards, had been a real gain to him. "The study of what the Monophysites did in Syria, and the Monothelites in Egypt, has taught me what few historians know—the intimate part religion plays in a nation's history, and how closely it joins itself to a people's life."

Living in a strictly Conservative atmosphere, he had been very diligently brought up as a Tory and a High Churchman. But when he was about fourteen, orthodox Conservatism and school life came to a close which then seemed to him very tragic. A school essay was set on Charles the First; and as the boy read earnestly every book he could find on the subject, it suddenly burst on him that Charles was wrong. The essay, written with a great deal of feeling under this new and strong conviction, gained the prize over the heads of boys older and till then reputed abler; but it drew down on him unmeasured disapproval. Canon Mozley, who examined, remonstrated in his grave way: "Your essay is very good, but remember I do not agree with your conclusions, and you will in all probability see reason to change them as you grow older." The head-master took a yet more severe view of such a change of political creed. But the impulse to Liberalism had been definitely given ; and had indeed brought with it many other grave questionings. When at the next examination he shot up to the head of the school, his master advised that he should be withdrawn from Magdalen, to the dismay both of himself and of the uncle with whom he lived. The uncle indeed had his own grounds of alarm. John had one day stood at a tailor's window in Oxford where Lord John Russell's Durham Letter was spread out to view, and, as he read it, had come to his own conclusions as to its wisdom. He even declared the Ecclesiastical Titles Act to be absurd. His uncle, horrified at so extreme a heresy, with angry decision ordered him to find at once another home ; and when after a time the agitation had died away and he was allowed to come back, it was on the condition of never again alluding to so painful a subject. The new-found errors clung to him, however, when he went shortly afterwards to live in the country with a tutor. " I wandered about the fields thinking," he said, " but I never went back from the opinions I had begun to form."

It was when he was about sixteen that Gibbon fell into his hands ; and from that moment the enthusiasm of history took hold of him. " Man and man's history " became henceforth the dominant interest of his life. When he returned to Oxford with a scholarship to Jesus College, an instinct of chivalrous devotion inspired his resolve that the study of history should never become with him " a matter of classes or fellowships," nor should be touched by the rivalries, the conventional methods, the artificial limitations, and the utilitarian aims of the Schools. College work and history work went on apart, with much mental friction and difficulty of adjustment and sorrow of heart. Without any advisers, almost without friends, he groped his way, seeking in very solitary fashion after his own particular vocation. His first historical efforts were spent on that which lay immediately about him ; and the series of papers which he sent at this time to the Oxford Chronicle on "Oxford in the last Century" are instinct with all the vivid imagination of his later work, and tell their tale after a method and in a style which was already perfectly natural to him. He read enormously, but history was never to him wholly a matter of books. The Town was still his teacher. There was then little help to be had for the history of Oxford or any other town. "So wholly had the story of the towns," he wrote later, "passed out of the minds of men that there is still not a history of our country which devotes a single page to it, and there is hardly an antiquary who has cared to disentomb the tragic records of fights fought for freedom in this narrow theatre from the archives which still contain them. The treatise of Brady written from a political, that of Madox from a narrow antiquarian, point of view; the summaries of charters given by the Commissioners under the Municipal Reform Act; the volumes of Stephens and Merewether; and here and there a little treatise on isolated towns are the only printed materials for the study of the subject." Other materials were abundant. St. Giles' Fair was full of lessons for him. He has left an amusing account of how, on a solemn day which came about once in eight years, he marched with Mayor and Corporation round the city boundaries. He lingered over the memory of St. Martin's Church, the centre of the town life, the folk-mote within its walls, the low shed outside where mayor and bailiff administered justice, the bell above which rang out its answer to the tocsin of the gownsmen in St. Mary's, the butchery and spicery and vintnery which clustered round in the narrow streets. "In a walk through Oxford one may find illustrations of every period of our annals. The Cathedral still preserves the memory of the Mercian St. Frideswide; the tower of the Norman Earls frowns down on the waters of the Mill; around Merton hang the memories of the birth of our Constitution; the New Learning and the Reformation mingle in Christ Church; a 'grind' along the Marston Road follows the track of the army of Fairfax; the groves of Magdalen preserve the living traditions of the last of the Stewarts,"

Two years, however, of solitary effort to work out problems of education, of life, of history, left him somewhat disheartened and bankrupt in energy. A mere accident at last brought the first counsel and encouragement he had ever known. Some chance led him one day to the lecture-room where Stanley, then Canon of Christ Church, was speaking on the history of Dissent. Startled out of the indifference with which he had entered the room, he suddenly found himself listening with an interest and wonder which nothing in Oxford had awakened, till the lecturer closed with the words, “‘Magna est veritas et prævalebit,’ words so great that I could almost prefer them to the motto of our own University, ‘Dominus illuminatio mea.’” In his excitement he exclaimed, as Stanley, on leaving the hall, passed close by him, “Do you know, sir, that the words you quoted, ‘Magna est veritas et prævalebit,’ are the motto of the Town?” “Is it possible? How interesting! When will you come and see me and talk about it?” cried Stanley; and from that moment a warm friendship sprang up. “Then and after,” Mr. Green wrote, “I heard you speak of work, not as a thing of classes and fellowships, but as something worthy for its own sake, worthy because it made us like the great Worker. ‘If you cannot or will not work at the work which Oxford gives you, at any rate work at something.’ I took up my old boy-dreams of history again. I think I have been a steady worker ever since.”

It was during these years at Oxford that his first large historical schemes were laid. His plan took the shape of a History of the Archbishops of Canterbury; and seeking in Augustine and his followers a clue through the maze of thirteen centuries, he proposed under this title to write in fact the whole story of Christian civilization in England. “No existing historians help me,” he declared in his early days of planning; “rather I have been struck by the utter blindness of one and all to the subject which they profess to treat—the national growth and development of our country.” When in 1860 he left Oxford for the work he had chosen as curate in one of the poorest parishes of East London, he carried with him thoughts of history. Letters full of ardent discussion of the theological and social problems about him still tell of hours saved here and there for the British Museum, of work done on Cuthbert, on Columba, on Irish Church History—of a scheme for a history of Somerset, which bid fair to extend far, and which led direct to Glastonbury, Dunstan, and Early English matters. Out of his poverty, too, he had gathered books about him, books won at a cost which made them the objects of a singular affection; and he never opened a volume of his “Acta Sanctorum” without a lingering memory of the painful efforts by which he had brought together the volumes one by one, and how many days he had gone without dinner when there was no other way of buying them.

But books were not his only sources of knowledge. To the last he looked on his London life as having given him his best lessons in history. It was with his churchwardens, his schoolmasters, in vestry meetings, in police courts, at boards of guardians, in service in chapel or church, in the daily life of the dock-labourer, the tradesman, the costermonger, in the summer visitation of cholera, in the winter misery that followed economic changes, that he learnt what the life of the people meant as perhaps no historian had ever learnt it before. Constantly struck down as he was by illness, even the days of sickness were turned to use. Every drive, every railway journey, every town he passed through in brief excursions for health’s sake, added something to his knowledge; if he was driven to recover strength to a seaside lodging he could still note a description of Ebbsfleet or Richborough or Minster, so that there is scarcely a picture of scenery or of geographical conditions in his book which is not the record of a victory over the overwhelming languor of disease.

After two years of observation, of reading, and of thought, the Archbishops no longer seemed very certain guides through the centuries of England’s growth. They filled the place, it would appear, no better than the Kings. If some of them were great leaders among the people, others were of little account; and after the sixteenth century the upgrowth of the Nonconformists broke the history of the people, taken from the merely ecclesiastical point of view, into two irreconcilable fractions, and utterly destroyed any possibility of artistic treatment of the story as a whole. In a new plan he looked far behind Augustine and Canterbury, and threw himself into geology, the physical geography of our island in pre-historic times, and the study of the cave-men and the successive races that peopled Britain, as introductory to the later history of England. But his first and dominating idea quickly thrust all others aside. It was of the English People itself that he must write if he would write after his own heart. The nine years spent in the monotonous reaches of dreary streets that make up Hoxton and Stepney, the close contact with sides of life little known to students, had only deepened the impressions with which the idea of a people's life had in Oxford struck on his imagination. "A State," he would say, "is accidental; it can be made or unmade, and is no real thing to me. But a nation is very real to me. That you can neither make nor destroy." All his writings, the historical articles which he sent to the Saturday Review and letters to his much-honoured friend, Mr. Freeman, alike tended in the same direction, and show how persistently he was working out his philosophy of history. The lessons which years before he had found written in the streets and lanes of his native town were not forgotten. "History," he wrote in 1869, "we are told by publishers, is the most unpopular of all branches of literature at the present day, but it is only unpopular because it seems more and more to sever itself from all that can touch the heart of a people. In mediæval history, above all, the narrow ecclesiastical character of the annals which serve as its base, instead of being corrected by a wider research into the memorials which surround us, has been actually intensified by the partial method of their study, till the story of a great people seems likely to be lost in the mere squabbles of priests. Now there is hardly a better corrective for all this to be found than to set a man frankly in the streets of a simple English town, and to bid him work out the history of the men who had lived and died there. The mill by the stream, the tolls in the market place, the brasses of its burghers in the church, the names of its streets, the lingering memory of its guilds, the mace of its mayor, tell us more of the past of England than the spire of Sarum or the martyrdom of Canterbury. We say designedly of the past of England, rather than of the past of English towns. . . . In England the history of the town and of the country are one. The privilege of the burgher has speedily widened into the liberty of the people at large. The municipal charter has merged into the great charter of the realm. All the little struggles over toll and tax, all the little claims of 'custom' and franchise, have told on the general advance of liberty and law. The townmotes of the Norman reigns tided free discussion and self-government over from the Witenagemot of the old England to the Parliament of the new. The husting court, with its resolute assertion of justice by one's peers, gave us the whole fabric of our judicial legislation. The Continental town lost its individuality by sinking to the servile level of the land from which it had isolated itself. The English town lost its individuality by lifting the country at large to its own level of freedom and law."

The earnestness, however, with which he had thrown himself into his parish work left no time for any thought of working out his cherished plans. His own needs were few, and during nearly three years he spent on the necessities of schools and of the poor more than the whole of the income he drew from the Church, while he provided for his own support by writing at night, after his day's work was done, articles for the Saturday Review. At last, in 1869, the disease which had again and again attacked him fell with renewed violence on a frame exhausted with labours and anxieties. All active work was for ever at an end—the doctors told him there was little hope of prolonging his life six months. It was at this moment, the first moment of leisure he had ever known, he proposed "to set down a few notions which I have conceived concerning history," which "might serve as an introduction to better things if I lived, and might stand for some work done if I did not." The "Short History" was thus begun. When the six months had passed he had resisted the first severity of the attack, but he remained with scarcely a hold on life; and incessantly vexed by the suffering and exhaustion of constant illness, perplexed by questions as to the mere means of livelihood, thwarted and hindered by difficulties about books in the long winters abroad, he still toiled on at his task. "I wonder," he said once in answer to some critic, "how in those years of physical pain and despondency I could ever have written the book at all." Nearly five years were given to the work. The sheets were written and re-written, corrected and cancelled and begun again till it seemed as though revision would never have an end. "The book is full of faults," he declared sorrowfully, "which make me almost hopeless of ever learning to write well." As the work went on his friends often remonstrated with much energy. Dean Stanley could not forgive its missing so dramatic an opening as Cæsar's landing would have afforded. Others judged severely his style, his method, his view of history, his selection and rejection of facts. Their judgement left him "lonely," he said; and with the sensitiveness of the artistic nature, its quick apprehension of unseen danger, its craving for sympathy, he saw with perhaps needless clearness of vision the perils to his chance of winning a hearing which were prophesied. He agreed that the "faults" with which he was charged might cause the ruin of his hopes of being accepted either by historians or by the public; and yet these very "faults," he insisted, were bound up with his faith. The book was in fact, if not in name, the same as that which he had planned at Oxford; to correct its "faults" he must change his whole conception of history; he must renounce his belief that it was the great impulses of national feeling, and not the policy of statesmen, that formed the ground-work and basis of the history of nations, and his certainty that political history could only be made intelligible and just by basing it on social history in its largest sense.

"I may be wrong in my theories," he wrote, "but it is better for me to hold to what I think true, and to work it out as I best can, even if I work it out badly, than to win the good word of some people I respect and others I love" by giving up a real conviction. Amid all his fears as to the failings of his work he still clung to the belief that it went on the old traditional lines of English historians. However Gibbon might err in massing together his social facts in chapters apart, however inadequate Hume's attempts at social history might be, however Macaulay might look at social facts merely as bits of external ornament, they all, he maintained, professed the faith he held. He used to protest that even those English historians who desired to be merely "external and pragmatic" could not altogether reach their aim as though they had been "High Dutchmen." The free current of national life in England was too strong to allow them to become ever wholly lost in State-papers; and because he believed that Englishmen could therefore best combine the love of accuracy and the appreciation of the outer aspects of national or political life with a perception of the spiritual forces from which these mere outer phenomena proceed, he never doubted that "the English ideal of history would in the long run be what Gibbon made it in his day—the first in the world."

When at last, by a miracle of resolution and endurance, the "Short History" was finished, discouraging reports reached him from critics whose judgement he respected; and his despondency increased. "Never mind, you mayn't succeed this time," said one of his best friends, "but you are sure to succeed some day." He never forgot that in this time of depression there were two friends, Mr. Stopford Brooke and his publisher, who were unwavering in their belief in his work and in hopefulness of the result.

The book was published in 1874, when he was little more than 36 years of age. Before a month was over, in the generous welcome given it by scholars and by the English people, he found the reward of his long endurance. Mr. Green in fact was the first English historian who had either conceived or written of English history from the side of the principles which his book asserted ; and in so doing he had given to his fellow-citizens such a story of their Commonwealth as has in fact no parallel in any other country. The opposition and criticism which he met with were in part a measure of the originality of his conception. Success, however, and criticism alike came to him as they come to the true scholar. "I know," he said in this first moment of unexpected recognition, "what men will say of me, 'He died learning.'"

I know of no excuse which I could give for attempting any revision of the "Short History," save that this was my husband's last charge to me. Nor can I give any other safeguard for the way in which I have performed the work than the sincere and laborious effort I have made to carry out that charge faithfully. I have been very careful not to interfere in any way with the plan or structure of the book, and save in a few exceptional cases, in which I knew Mr. Green's wishes, or where a change of chronology made some slight change in arrangement necessary, I have not altered its order. My work has been rather that of correcting mistakes of detail which must of a certainty occur in a story which covers so vast a field ; and in this I have been mainly guided throughout by the work of revision done by Mr. Green himself in his larger "History." In this History he had at first proposed merely to prepare a library edition of the "Short History" revised and corrected. In his hands, however, it became a wholly different book, the chief part of it having been re-written at much greater length, and on an altered plan. I have therefore only used its corrections within very definite limits, so far as they could be adapted to a book of different scope and arrangement. Though since his death much has been written on English History, his main conclusions may be regarded as established, and I do not think they would have been modified, save in a few cases of detail, even by such books as the last two volumes of Dr. Stubbs' "Constitutional History," and his "Lectures on Modern History";

Mr. Gardiner's later volumes on Charles's reign, and Mr. Skene's later volumes on "Early Scottish History." In his own judgement, severely as he judged himself, the errors in the "Short History" were not the mistakes that show a real mis-reading of this or that period, or betray an unhistoric mode of looking at things as a whole; nor has their correction in fact involved any serious change. In some passages, even where I knew that Mr. Green's own criticism went far beyond that of any of his critics, I have not felt justified in making any attempt to expand or re-write what could only have been re-written by himself. In other matters which have been the subject of comments of some severity, the grounds of his own decision remained unshaken; as for example, the scanty part played by Literature after 1660, which Mr. Green regretted he had not explained in his first preface. It was necessary that the book should be brought to an end in about eight hundred pages. Something must needs be left out, and he deliberately chose Literature, because it seemed to him that after 1660 Literature ceased to stand in the fore-front of national characteristics, and that Science, Industry, and the like, played a much greater part. So "for truth's sake" he set aside a strong personal wish to say much that was in his mind on the great writers of later times, and turned away to cotton-spinning and Pitt's finance. "It cost me much trouble," he said, "and I knew the book would not be so bright, but I think I did rightly."

It was in this temper that all his work was done; and I would only add a few words which I value more especially, because they tell how the sincerity, the patient self-denial, the earnestness of purpose, that underlay all his vivid activity were recognized by one who was ever to him a master in English History, Dr. Stubbs, now Bishop of Oxford. "Mr. Green," he wrote, "possessed in no scanty measure all the gifts that contribute to the making of a great historian. He combined, so far as the history of England is concerned, a complete and firm grasp of the subject in its unity and integrity with a wonderful command of details, and a thorough sense of perspective and proportion. All his work was real and original work; few people besides those who knew him well would see under the charming ease and vivacity of his style the deep research and sustained industry of the laborious student. But it was so ; there was no department of our national records that he had not studied and, I think I may say, mastered. Hence I think the unity of his dramatic scenes and the cogency of his historical arguments. Like other people he made mistakes sometimes ; but scarcely ever does the correction of his mistakes affect either the essence of the picture or the force of the argument. And in him the desire of stating and pointing the truth of history was as strong as the wish to make both his pictures and his arguments telling and forcible. He never treated an opposing view with intolerance or contumely ; his handling of controversial matter was exemplary. And then, to add still more to the debt we owe him, there is the wonderful simplicity and beauty of the way in which he tells his tale, which more than anything else has served to make English history a popular, and as it ought to be, if not the first, at least the second study of all Englishmen."

I have to thank those friends of Mr. Green, Dr. Stubbs, Dr. Creighton, Professor Bryce, and Mr. Lecky, who, out of their regard for his memory, have made it a pleasure to me to ask their aid and counsel. I owe a special gratitude to Professor Gardiner for a ready help which spared no trouble and counted no cost, and for the rare generosity which placed at my disposal the results of his own latest and unpublished researches into such matters as the pressing of recruits for the New Model, and the origin of the term Ironside as a personal epithet of Cromwell. Mr. Osmund Airy has very kindly given me valuable suggestions for the Restoration period ; and throughout the whole work Miss Norgate has rendered services which the most faithful and affectionate loyalty could alone have prompted.

ALICE S. GREEN.

December, 1887.

PREFACE TO THE FIRST EDITION

THE aim of the following work is defined by its title ; it is a history, not of English Kings or English Conquests, but of the English People. At the risk of sacrificing much that was interesting and attractive in itself, and which the constant usage of our historians has made familiar to English readers, I have preferred to pass lightly and briefly over the details of foreign wars and diplomacies, the personal adventures of kings and nobles, the pomp of courts, or the intrigues of favourites, and to dwell at length on the incidents of that constitutional, intellectual, and social advance in which we read the history of the nation itself. It is with this purpose that I have devoted more space to Chaucer than to Cressy, to Caxton than to the petty strife of Yorkist and Lancastrian, to the Poor Law of Elizabeth than to her victory at Cadiz, to the Methodist revival than to the escape of the Young Pretender.

Whatever the worth of the present work may be, I have striven throughout that it should never sink into a "drum and trumpet history." It is the reproach of historians that they have too often turned history into a mere record of the butchery of men by their fellow-men. But war plays a small part in the real story of European nations, and in that of England its part is smaller than in any. The only war which has profoundly affected English society and English government is the Hundred Years' War with France, and of that war the results were simply evil. If I have said little of the glories of Cressy, it is because I have dwelt much on the wrong and misery which prompted the verse of Longland and the preaching of Ball. But on the other hand, I have never shrunk from telling at length the triumphs of peace. I have restored to their place among the achievements of Englishmen the "Faerie Queen" and the "Novum Organum." I have set Shakspeare among the heroes of the Elizabethan age, and placed the scientific inquiries of the Royal Society side by side with the victories of the New Model. If some of the conventional figures of military and political history occupy in my pages less than the space usually given them, it is because I have had to find a place for figures little heeded in common history—the figures of the missionary, the poet, the printer, the merchant, or the philosopher.

In England, more than elsewhere, constitutional progress has been the result of social development. In a brief summary of our history such as the present, it was impossible to dwell as I could have wished to dwell on every phase of this development; but I have endeavoured to point out, at great crises, such as those of the Peasant Revolt or the rise of the New Monarchy, how much of our political history is the outcome of social changes; and throughout I have drawn greater attention to the religious, intellectual, and industrial progress of the nation itself than has, so far as I remember, ever been done in any previous history of the same extent.

The scale of the present work has hindered me from giving in detail the authorities for every statement. But I have prefixed to each section a short critical account of the chief contemporary authorities for the period it represents as well as of the most useful modern works in which it can be studied. As I am writing for English readers of a general class I have thought it better to restrict myself in the latter case to English books, or to English translations of foreign works where they exist. This is a rule which I have only broken in the occasional mention of French books, such as those of Guizot or Mignet, well known and within reach of ordinary students. I greatly regret that the publication of the first volume of the invaluable Constitutional History of Professor Stubbs came too late for me to use it in my account of those early periods on which it has thrown so great a light.

I am only too conscious of the faults and oversights in a work, much of which has been written in hours of weakness and ill health. That its imperfections are not greater than they are, I owe to the kindness of those who have from time to time aided me with suggestions and corrections ; and especially to my dear friend Mr. E. A. Freeman, who has never tired of helping me with counsel and criticism. Thanks for like friendly help are due to Professor Stubbs and Professor Bryce, and in literary matters to the Rev. Stopford Brooke, whose wide knowledge and refined taste have been of the greatest service to me.

CONTENTS OF VOLUME ONE

	PAGE
NOTES ON THE ILLUSTRATIONS	xxix

CHAPTER I

THE ENGLISH KINGDOMS, 607—1013

Sect. 1—Britain and the English	1
„ 2—The English Conquest, 449—577	12
„ 3—The Northumbrian Kingdom, 588—685	29
„ 4—The Three Kingdoms, 685—828	66
„ 5—Wessex and the Danes, 802—880	83
„ 6—The West-Saxon Realm, 893—1013	98

CHAPTER II

ENGLAND UNDER FOREIGN KINGS, 1013—1204

Sect. 1—The Danish Kings, 1013—1042	118
„ 2—The English Restoration, 1042—1066	128
„ 3—Normandy and the Normans, 912—1066	133
„ 4—The Conqueror, 1042—1066	138
„ 5—The Norman Conquest, 1068—1071	151
„ 6—The English Revival, 1071—1127	163
„ 7—England and Anjou, 870—1154	185
„ 8—Henry the Second, 1154—1189	197
„ 9—The Fall of the Angevins, 1189—1204	213

CONTENTS

CHAPTER III

THE GREAT CHARTER, 1204—1265

	PAGE
Sect. 1—English Literature under the Norman and Angevin Kings	221
„ 2—John, 1204—1215	231
„ 3—The Great Charter, 1215—1217	240
„ 4—The Universities	247
„ 5—Henry the Third, 1216—1257	266
„ 6—The Friars	279
„ 7—The Barons' War, 1258—1265	289

CHAPTER IV

THE THREE EDWARDS, 1265—1360

Sect. 1—The Conquest of Wales, 1265—1284	305
„ 2—The English Parliament, 1283—1295	322
„ 3—The Conquest of Scotland, 1290—1305	345
„ 4—The English Towns	368
„ 5—The King and the Baronage, 1290—1327	385
„ 6—The Scotch War of Independence, 1306—1342	404

CHAPTER V

THE HUNDRED YEARS' WAR, 1336—1431

Sect. 1—Edward the Third, 1336—1360	414
„ 2—The Good Parliament, 1360—1377	444
„ 3—John Wyclif	452

NOTES ON THE ILLUSTRATIONS

MAP OF ENGLAND	Frontispiece
PORTRAIT OF JOHN RICHARD GREEN, engraved on steel by G. J. Stodart, after a drawing by Frederick Sandys	To face	p. xi
	PAGE	I
S. MATTHEW, FROM THE BOOK OF KELLS	To face
The "Book of Kells" is a MS. of the Gospels, in Latin, written in Ireland (c. A.D. 650-690). It was anciently called "the Great Gospels of Columba," as being the chief treasure of the church at Kells, of which S. Columba was the founder and patron. In 1006 the book was stolen, together with the case or shrine of gold in which it was kept according to Irish custom; the book alone was recovered, and remained at Kells till it passed into the hands of Ussher, when Bishop of Meath. Ussher's Library, bought by the English army and the State in 1656, for a proposed new College at Dublin, was given by Charles II. to Trinity College, where the Book of Kells is still preserved. The MS. is one of the finest productions of the Irish school of illumination, containing perfect specimens of the interlaced, spiral, and trumpet-patterns, and of the treatment of human and animal figures characteristic of Irish art; all these are exemplified in the page selected for the present illustration.
SHIELD (Worsaae , " Industrial Arts of Denmark ")		2
Made of wood, with bronze mountings, and a boss in the centre to protect the hand. Found in Jutland; dates from the Earlier Iron Age, A.D. 1-450.
MAILCOAT (Worsaae , " Industrial Arts of Denmark ")		3
Belongs to same period as the shield. Made of rings of iron; was found in a bog in Jutland.
SILVER HELMET (Worsaae , " Industrial Arts of Denmark ")		3
Silver, ornamented with gold. Same period.
PART OF A HELMET, IRON OVERLAID WITH BRONZE (Montelius , " Civilization of Sweden ")		4
The helmet, of which a part is here represented, was found in a grave at Vendel, North Upland. It dates from the Middle Iron Age (c. A.D. 450-700) and furnishes a curious representation of an ancient northern warrior.
SILVER CUP (Montelius , " Civilization of Sweden ")		5
Silver, partly gilded. Found in Denmark. Period, A.D. 1-450.
EARTHENWARE EWER (Montelius , " Civilization of Sweden ")		5
Found in Gotland; dates from the Earlier Iron Age, and is, like all earthen vessels of that period, unglazed.
TWO HORNS, FIFTH CENTURY (Worsaae , " Industrial Arts of Denmark ")		6
These horns were found at Gallehus, in North Jutland, the perfect one in 1639, the broken one in 1734. The former was 2 ft. 9 in. long, and weighed 6 lbs. 7 oz.; the latter, having lost its smaller end, was only 1 ft. 9 in. long, but weighed 7 lbs. 7 oz. Both were of gold, and engraved with subjects from northern mythology. They were stolen and melted down in 1802, but accurate drawings of them had been made, from which later representations have been copied.
HEAD OF THUNDER (Stephens , " Thunor the Thunderer ")		7
A pendant of silver, parcel gilt, in the shape of a hammer, the upper part wrought into the semblance of a head somewhat like that of a bird. This head, and the hammer, were both recognized emblems of Thor

(Thunder), and the numerous ornaments of this character which occur in finds of the Middle and Later Iron Age (A.D. 450—1000) were probably worn by his worshippers somewhat as a crucifix might be worn in later days. The pendant here figured was found in 1875 at Erikstorp, East Gotland.

BRACTEATES REPRESENTING NORTHERN DIVINITIES (Worsaae, "Industrial Arts of Denmark")	8
The pendent ornaments, resembling medals or coins, called bracteates (from the Latin bractea, a thin plate) seem to have been commonly used for personal adornment both by men and women, throughout the Middle Iron Age. They are of gold, usually stamped with figures, runes, or interlaced patterns, and often with a border of fine decoration made with a punch. The two bracteates here figured are decorated with religious subjects. The larger one bears a head representing Thunder, above a he-goat, an animal sacred to that god, and a "swastika" or "fylfot" (cross with bent arms), which was another of his emblems, together with the three dots symbolizing the Scandinavian trinity, Thunder, Woden, and Frea. The border is formed of the "triskele," or three-armed figure, which was the sign of Woden, the plain cross emblematic of Frea, and a zigzag to represent lightning, while the triangle below the loop is filled with suns or moons. The smaller bracteate bears a head of Thunder, having on one side Woden's "triskele," on the other a figure holding a sword, and three crosses to represent the sun or Frea.
BOAT FOR FOURTEEN PAIRS OF OARS, FOUND AT NYDAM, SOUTH JUTLAND (Montelius, "Civilization of Sweden")	11
One of two "clinch-built" boats, of the Earlier Iron Age, found in a peat-bog at Nydam in 1863. The boat here figured was of oak, the other of pine. "They were large and open, pointed at both ends, designed only for rowing, with no trace of a mast. Both boats differ from those now generally in use, by the peculiar way in which the planks are fastened to the ribs. The oak boat, which is remarkable for its very supple and graceful form, is 78 ft. between the high points at the stem and stern, and 10 ft. 9 in. broad midships; it was rowed with 14 pairs of oars. These are exactly like those still used in the North, and are 11 ft. 2 in. long. The rudder is narrow, and was fastened to one side of the boat near the stern end. . . . During the later part of the heathen times the boats were always drawn up on land for the winter, or when they were not wanted for some time. The boats found at Nydam have holes at the ends, for the rope by which they were hauled on land." (Montelius, trans. Woods, pp. 115-117.)
EBBSFLEET	13
From a sketch made in 1890.
RICHBOROUGH	14
Showing part of the Roman wall.
KIT'S CÔTY HOUSE	16
ROMAN KENT	18
BRITAIN AND THE ENGLISH CONQUEST	21
OLD ENGLISH COMBS (Akerman, "Pagan Saxondom")	24
Made of bone; found in the last century, in graves of women, on Kingston Down.
OLD ENGLISH BUCKLES	25
Found in barrows on Breach Down and at Sittingbourne. The small buckles were in the grave of a child.
OLD ENGLISH KEYS (Akerman, "Pagan Saxondom")	25
Found in a woman's grave, in the cemetery on Ozengall Hill, Kent. The keys are hung on a ring formed by a bronze wire twisted through a bronze fibula.
PLATINGS OF AN OLD ENGLISH BUCKET (Akerman, "Pagan Saxondom")	26
Found in a woman's grave, at Linton Heath, Cambridgeshire.
OLD ENGLISH FIBULÆ	26
The first of these fibulæ, or brooches, is of gilt bronze, and remarkable for the purely Teutonic character of its ornamentation, which includes an early form of what was afterwards known as the fleur-de-lis. It was found in one of the ancient graves at Fairford, Gloucestershire, and is here engraved from Akerman's "Pagan Saxondom." The second fibula (now in the Collection of the Society of Antiquaries) is also of bronze gilt; it was found in 1785 near Rothley Temple, Leicestershire. The third was found at Abingdon, and is now in the British Museum. Its surface is encrusted with garnet-coloured glass laid on a background of gold foil, and interspersed with plates of thin gold with gold wire laid on; the round bosses are of ivory or bone, with garnet-coloured glass on the apex. The back has been drawn to show the mode of fastening.

	PAGE
OLD ENGLISH GLASS VESSELS (Akerman , "Pagan Saxondom")	27
Pale blue glass; found at Cuddesdon.
OLD ENGLISH SPOON	28
This spoon is of silver, ornamented with garnets. It was found in a barrow at Chatham, and is now in the Ashmolean Museum, Oxford.
OLD ENGLISH FORK (Akerman , "Pagan Saxondom")	28
Of iron, with handle of deershorn. Found in an Old English burial-ground at Harnham, near Salisbury, in the grave of a young man, whose remains were lying with this fork, a knife, flint and steel, all within the extended right arm.
BRITAIN IN 593	30
S. LUKE THE EVANGELIST	32
From a book of the Gospels traditionally believed to have been brought to Canterbury by S. Augustine; now in the library of Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, to which it was given by Parker; probable date, seventh century.
SCEATTAS	33
The earliest known English coins are small silver pieces called sceattas , of uncertain value and date; it is doubtful whether they were brought over by the English settlers, or struck by them after their settlement. They form, however, a connecting link between the genuine Roman coins and those of ascertained English origin. The only coins on which Runic characters are found unaccompanied by any Roman legend are some of these sceattas , one of which is figured here. The other two examples are clearly imitations of Roman types.
BRITAIN IN 626	36
OLD ENGLISH GLASS VESSELS (Akerman , "Pagan Saxondom")	37
The first of these was found at Wodnesborough, and is of a delicate brown tint, like the colour of a dead leaf. The second was found at Gilton, near Sandwich, and is of a transparent light green hue. The third, of a pale yellowish green colour, was found at Reculver and is now in the museum at Canterbury.
OLD ENGLISH PATERA (Akerman , "Pagan Saxondom")	38
Found at Wingham. It is of bronze, and shows traces of Roman influence.
BRITAIN IN 634	40
OLD ENGLISH CROSS	41
A pendent ornament in shape of a cross; gold inlaid with coloured glass. Found in Norfolk; now in British Museum.
FRAGMENT OF A SUIT OF BRONZE RING MAIL, IRISH	41
Now in Museum of Royal Irish Academy, Dublin. This fragment was found, 3 ft. under the surface, in burning a reclaimed bog adjoining the old castle of the O'Conors, near the town of Roscommon. Such an ornamental suit of mail as that of which it once formed part "probably served, when worn over or attached to a buff-coat, the double purpose of defence and decorative costume; and was, in all likelihood, a portion of the paraphernalia of office in days gone by." (Wilde, Catal. of Antiqu. in Museum of R. I. A. , p. 576.)
NIELLO PENDENT HOOK, IRISH	42
This hook, also in the Museum of the Royal Irish Academy, is one of the most beautiful specimens of Irish skill in the art of inlaying bronze with silver and some dark-coloured metal. It is thought that its use may have been to suspend a sword.

	PAGE
LATE CELTIC BRONZE DISC	42
A large number of bronze discs, whose workmanship shows that they belong to the later period of Celtic art, have been found in Ireland and in no other country. It is thought that they may have formed portions of shields. The disc here figured is in the Museum of the Royal Irish Academy; it is about 11 in. in diameter, and furnishes a good example in metal-work of the divergent spiral or trumpet-pattern seen in the illuminations of the Book of Kells and other MSS. of the Irish school.
ORNAMENT OF GILDED BRONZE, FOUND IN GOTLAND (Montelius, "Civilization of Sweden")	42
PLATE OF GILDED BRONZE (from the same)	43
These two objects, both found in Gotland and dating from the Earlier Iron Age (C. A. D. 1—450), show a remarkable resemblance with the forms of ornamentation common in Irish art.
INITIAL N (Stokes, "Early Christian Art in Ireland")	44
From the Book of Kells.
BRITAIN IN 640	45
IRISH OGHAM STONE	46
Two views of a stone 4½ ft. high and about 11 in. across, bearing an inscription in the ancient Celtic or Ogham characters, which prevailed in Ireland down to its conversion to Christianity, and remained in use for some time after the introduction of the Roman alphabet. The Ogham letters were formed of groups of incised lines and dots arranged along a stem line. The stone here figured, now in the Museum of the Royal Irish Academy, was found with three others built into the walls of a house in county Kerry; they are believed to have been removed thither from the underground chamber of a neighbouring rath (fort).
COIN OF PEADA	47
An unique coin (silver), in the British Museum; attributed to Penda's son Peada, whom he set over the Middle English in 652.
MONASTIC CELL, SKELLIG MICHAEL (Anderson, "Scotland in Early Christian Times")	48
One of the very ancient monastic buildings on the Great Skellig (an island off the coast of Kerry). These form a good example of the method of building common to the forts of heathen Ireland in the age before its conversion, and to its earliest Christian establishments, viz., a building, or group of buildings, surrounded by a wall (cashel), all built of dry stone without cement. The original monastery at Iona must have been of this type. The hut here figured is built of slate; its religious character is marked by the cross of white quartz-stone inserted above the door. The projecting stones in the wall and roof may have served for standing on, or putting planks across, while building. The beehive shape of the hut seems to be a transition towards a more convenient form, shown in the next illustration.
ORATORY AT GALLARUS, CO. KERRY (Stokes, "Early Christian Art in Ireland")	49
A higher development of the type shown in p. 48. This oratory is 15 ft. 3 in. long, 10 ft. 2 in. wide, and 10 ft. high; the dome is formed by the projection of one stone beyond another till they meet at the top. At the east end is a window, 1 ft. wide, with a round-headed arch cut out of one stone; at the west end is a door, with sides and lintel of dressed stone. Over the lintel, inside, are two projecting stones pierced at each end vertically by large holes, probably to suspend a wooden door by a hinge.
BRITAIN IN 658	50
BELL OF CUMASCACH MAC AILLELLO (Stokes, "Early Christian Art in Ireland")	51
Cumascach Mac Aillello was steward to the monastery of Armagh, and died 908. This bell, on which his name is inscribed, is of cast bronze, 11¼ in. high, and 8 in. across at base; the handle and clapper are of iron.
OLD ENGLISH CLASPS (Akerman, "Pagan Saxondom")	55
Found at Crondale, in Hampshire.

	PAGE
OLD ENGLISH NECKLACES	56
Made of glass beads of various colours. Both necklaces are now in the British Museum. The one with coins or bracteates attached was found at Sarre, the other at Faversham.
BRITAIN IN 655	61
COIN OF ECGFRITH	62
A styca of copper, the usual coinage of Northumbria, of which Ecgrith's coins are the earliest examples. The Northumbrian coinage seems to have been more directly connected with the old Roman currency than that of the southern kingdoms, and the use of copper was probably due to the existence of a greater number of Roman copper coins in the district north of the Humber. Ecgrith's styca bears on its obverse "Ecgrith Rex" and a small cross; on the reverse, an irradiated cross with the word "Lux," possibly symbolical of his efforts to spread the light of the true faith among his people.
OGHAM STONE AT NEWTON, ABERDEENSHIRE (Anderson, "Scotland in Early Christian Times")	62
This stone, which originally stood on the moor of Pitmachie, about a mile from its present site, is the only monument of its kind in Scotland which bears inscriptions in two different alphabets: that on its edge being in Ogham characters, while that on its flattest side is in debased Roman minuscules. In the middle of this latter inscription is cut the fylfot, or cross with bent arms, the old northern symbol of Thunder, which seems to have been used in Christian monuments of Celtic origin.
DAVID AND HIS CHOIR	64
From an early eighth century MS. (Cotton Vespasian A. i., British Museum). It formerly belonged to S. Augustine's Abbey, Canterbury, but was written and illuminated by an Anglo-Irish scribe, as may be clearly seen in the trumpet-pattern of the canopy over the group of minstrels and dancers. The two upper figures on each side of David are thought to be scribes holding styles, one having in his left hand a roll, the other an open book, or a waxen tablet for writing. The figures are of Roman or Byzantine character.
S. JOHN THE EVANGELIST to face p.	66
From the "Lindisfarne" or "Durham" Gospel-book (MS. Cotton Nero D. iv., British Museum). This book, once the property of the cathedral church of Durham, is the finest extant specimen of early English illumination. It was written at Lindisfarne, "for God and S. Cuthbert," by Eadfrith, who was bishop of that see, A.D. 698-721; and adorned with paintings by Æthelwald, who was a monk there under Eadfrith and succeeded him as bishop. These paintings consist of elaborate designs in spiral and interlaced work after the Irish manner, and figures of the Evangelists. The figures are curious as showing the beginnings of a native English school of art, founded on late Roman or rather Byzantine models, but marked by a new freedom and boldness of treatment which from the first gives it a distinct character of its own.
CHURCH AT BRADFORD ON AVON (Journal of the Archeological Association).	68
One of the foundations of Bishop Ealdhelm of Sherborne, "the church which he erected on the scene of Cenwealh's victory at Bradford-on-Avon, stands in almost perfect preservation to-day" ("Making of England," p. 341). This little building lay hidden for centuries behind a pile of modern buildings till in 1857 it was re-discovered. It represents the "little church" (ecclesiola) dedicated to S. Laurence and built by Ealdhelm, which William of Malmesbury mentions (Gesta Pontif., l. v. c. 108) as existing at Bradford in his time, though the monastery once attached to it had perished.
BEGINNING OF S. LUKE'S GOSPEL (Lindisfarne Gospel-Book)	70
No reproduction in black and white can convey an adequate idea of the beauty of the decorative work in this MS., and of the marvellous effect given to the interlaced patterns by an exquisite use of colours. This page is given as a specimen of the large decorated initials, whose form and style show how strong was the Irish influence still abiding at Lindisfarne, and also of the calligraphy of the book. To the Latin text, written by Bishop Eadfrith, the inter-linear gloss in the Northumbrian dialect was added, seemingly about the middle of the tenth century, by a priest named Aldred, who also inserted in the volume two notes which are the authority for its history.

	PAGE
DAVID AS PSALMIST	72
From a MS. of Cassiodorus on the Psalms, dating from the eighth century, and traditionally said to have been written by Bæda's own hand. It belongs to the library of Durham Cathedral.
DAVID AS WARRIOR	75
From the same MS.
COIN OF OFFA	76
In the latter part of the eighth century the scatta was superseded by a thinner broader coin, also of silver, and called a penny. The idea of these coins seems to have been derived from the "new denarii" introduced in Frankland by Pepin, c. 750, and they thus illustrate the new connexion between the English kingdoms and the Frankish court which is described in pp. 78-82. The English coiners, however, developed a type of their own by introducing the king's head, which scarcely ever appears on the Carolingian coins, and for which models were found in the Roman or Byzantine solidi, then almost the only gold coins current in northern Europe. On its reverse the penny bore the name of the moneyer. The series of pennies begins with Offa; henceforth they are the usual coinage of English kings.
BRITAIN IN 792	77
S. MATTHEW, FROM THE GOSPEL-BOOK OF S. BONIFACE	79
S. Boniface, having resigned his bishopric of Mainz, went in 754 as a missionary to Frisia, and was there martyred on June 5, 755. His remains were afterwards removed to Fulda, an abbey which he had founded in Bavaria. On the site of his martyrdom were found three little books; one a New Testament of Italian origin, bearing the autograph of Victor, bishop of Capua in 546; another a treatise of S. Isidore, in Lombardic characters, pierced, cut, and stained with blood; the third a small octavo volume containing the Gospels written in a very small minuscule Irish character, and adorned with figures of the four Evangelists, one of which is reproduced here. The monks of Fulda, where the book is still preserved, have added at the end an inscription stating that Abbot Huoggi received it from King Arnulf, and that it was written with S. Boniface's own hand; this last statement however is wrong, for the real scribe has concluded his work with his name, in the usual Irish fashion: "Finit. Amen. Deo gratias ago. Vidrug scripsit."
BEGINNING OF THE BOOK OF EXODUS, FROM ALCUIN'S BIBLE	80
One of the works undertaken by Alcuin at the desire of Charles the Great was a revision of the Latin text of the Bible, already much corrupted since S. Jerome's day by the carelessness and ignorance of copyists. A magnificent copy of the Vulgate, thus "diligently emended," was prepared under Alcuin's personal superintendence, if not actually by his own hand, and sent by him as a gift to Charles on the day of his crowning at Rome. The volume numbered 10546 among the Additional MSS. in the British Museum is probably a sumptuous copy made in the next generation. It is a large folio, written in double columns on extremely fine vellum, in small minuscule characters of what is known as the Caroline type. From this splendid example of the improved style of writing which came into use under Charles, the initial letter and opening words of the Book of Exodus are given with two lines of the minuscules.
MOSES GIVING THE LAW	81
Part of a full-page illumination placed opposite the beginning of Exodus in Alcuin's Bible. The upper half of the picture represents Moses receiving the Law on Mount Sinai; the lower, here reproduced, shows him delivering the Law to Aaron and the people of Israel. The colouring of the original is most brilliant; the mountain seems indeed to "burn with fire." But the chief interest lies in the figures of Moses and Aaron. The latter is arrayed rather as a king than as a priest; and it is thought that these two figures may be identified with Alcuin and Charles, the great teacher presenting his work to the Emperor. The sons of Israel are in the garb of Roman senators.
COIN OF ECGBERHT	82
The earliest West-Saxon coins are those of Egberht. From him the series of silver pennies is continued without a break, as the sole coinage of the English realm and almost the sole currency of the British Isles, till the time of Henry III.

	PAGE
BRONZE PLATE WITH FIGURES OF NORTHERN WARRIORS (Montelius, "Civilization of Sweden")	84
Four of these plates, with figures in relief, were found in 1870 in a cairn at Björnshofda in Öland (Sweden); they furnish a curious illustration of a Swedish warrior's accoutrements in the early wiking days.
LINES OF NORTHERN INVASIONS	85
SOLDIER, NINTH CENTURY	86
From a MS. in the archiepiscopal library at Lambeth, known as the Gospel-book of MacDurnan, who was abbot of Derry before 885, and archbishop of Armagh 885-927. The figure here given occurs in a picture of the Betrayal, and forms one of a group of soldiers whom the artist has clothed and armed as warriors of his own day.
COIN OF EADMUND OF EAST ANGLIA	87
ÆLFRED'S JEWEL	90
A jewel of blue enamel inclosed in a setting of gold, with the words round it, "Ælfred had me wrought"; found at Athelney in the seventeenth century, and now preserved in the Ashmolean Museum at Oxford.
ENGLAND AT TREATY OF WEDMORE	91
COIN OF ÆLFRED	93
TOMBSTONE OF SUIBINE MAC MAELÆHUMAI (Petrie and Stokes, "Christian Inscriptions in Ireland")	94
Suibine Mac Maelæhumai was an "anchorite and scribe of Clonmacnois," who died, according to the Irish annals, in 887. The English Chronicle , however, records the death of "Swifneh, the best teacher that was among the Scots," in 891 or 892, the same year in which three "Scots from Ireland" came to visit Ælfred. Suibine's tombstone is a "perfect type of the highly ornamental Irish cross . . . offering fine examples of the divergent spiral and diagonal patterns peculiar to the early Celtic art of these islands." (Petrie and Stokes, i., 40.)
ST. MATTHEW	96
From the Gospel-book of MacDurnan (see above). This MS. illustrates a variety of Irish art differing from that represented by the Book of Kells; it contains no examples of the spiral pattern. The figures of the Evangelists are remarkable as giving early representations of the pastoral staff.
COIN OF EADWARD THE ELDER	99
THE CAMPAIGNS OF EADWARD AND ÆTHELFLED	100
ARCHER, TENTH CENTURY	100
One of the initial letters in a calendar, designed by an English hand, and prefixed to a Psalter traditionally said to have belonged to Æthelstan (MS. Cotton Galba A. xviii., British Museum).
FIGURE OF CHRIST, AND SILVER CUP (Worsaae, "Industrial Arts of Denmark")	101
Found in the huge double barrow in which the heathen king Gorm the Old, founder of the Danish monarchy (c. 900-936), and his Christian wife Thyra, were buried side by side at Jelling in Jutland. The figure is of wood; it represents Christ, but is surrounded by the triskele, the old symbol of Woden. The cup is of silver, gilt inside, and ornamented with an old half mythological pattern of twisted snakes and fantastic animals.
COIN OF ÆTHELSTAN	101
S. JOHN THE EVANGELIST	102
From a Gospel-book (MS. Cotton Tiberius A. ii., British Museum) seemingly written in Germany, presented by the Saxon king, Otto I., to his brother-in-law Æthelstan, who—according to an inscription added in the fifteenth century—destined it for use at the crowning of English kings. A charter of Æthelstan to Archbishop Wulfhelm of Canterbury has been copied, in a contemporary hand, between the table of contents and the Eusebian Canons; and prefixed to the Gospel of S. Matthew, beneath an inscription in large golden Roman capitals, "Incipit Evangelii secundū Mattheū," are the signatures

	PAGE
“Odda Rex” and “Mihtild mater Regis.” The figures of the Evangelists are placed each at the opening of his Gospel, within a border or canopy of classical design—almost Jacobean in character—but very rudely executed, S. John being by far the best. The great inferiority of German art to that of Ireland and England at this time is still more apparent in the writing of this book.
S. DUNSTAN AT THE FEET OF CHRIST	105
A drawing now in the Bodleian Library. The inscription at the top, in characters of the twelfth century, states that “the drawing and writing on this page are by S. Dunstan’s own hand.”
COIN OF EADGAR	107
NOAH’S ARK	108
From a MS. of Cædmon (Junius II, Bodleian Library), written c. A. D. 1000. The Ark is represented in the form of a Danish ship.
EADGAR OFFERING UP HIS CHARTER FOR NEW MINSTER	109
From MS. Cotton Vespasian A. viii. (British Museum), a grant of privileges and benefits made by Eadgar in 966 to the New Minster founded by Ælfred at Winchester. This illumination forms the frontispiece to the Charter, and represents the King, with the Virgin on one side and S. Peter on the other, offering up his gift to our Lord in glory.
KING AND COURT	111
This scene, from MS. Bodl. Junius II, represents Enos, son of Seth, and his family, under the guise of an English king of the tenth century, seated on his throne, sword in hand, with his thegns standing before him.
SILVER PENDANT (Montelius , “ Civilization of Sweden ”)	114
This little figure of a woman holding a drinking-horn illustrates the old northern custom, so often mentioned in the Wiking Sagas, of women carrying the horn round to the warriors seated at the feast.
THE RAMSUNDSBERG, WEST SÖDERMANLAND (Montelius , “ Civilization of Sweden ”)	114
A carving on the rock, consisting of scenes from the Saga of Sigurd Fafnissbane, or the Dragon-slayer. Sigurd is seen plunging his sword into the dragon Fafni, whose long snake-like body, marked with runes, forms a sort of frame round a series of designs, representing the dwarf Regin with his forge, tongs, hammer, and bellows, Sigurd’s horse Grane laden with the dragon’s spoils, a tree on which are perched the two hawks who warned Sigurd of Regin’s treachery, and the headless body of Regin, whom Sigurd slew.
OAK SHIP FROM TUNE, SOUTH NORWAY (Montelius , “ Civilization of Sweden ”)	115
A Wiking ship, found in 1867 in a barrow at Tune, near Frederikstad. It was built nearly in the same fashion as that found in the Nydam bog (see p. 11), but had a mast. In this ship was found buried a man with his weapons and two horses.
SHIP FROM GOKSTAD (Montelius , “ Civilization of Sweden ”)	115
Another ship of the same period, found in 1880, in a barrow at Gokstad, South Norway. It was seventy-eight feet long, pointed at both ends, had a mast and sixteen pairs of oars, and was decorated along the gunwale with a row of shields, of which there had been thirty-two on each side. The owner had been buried in a grave-chamber just behind the mast, with his weapons, twelve horses, six dogs, and a peacock. These two ships are now in the museum at Christiania.
NOAH’S ARK	116
From the MS. of Cædmon, Bodl. Junius II. Here, as in the illustration from the same MS. given in p. 108, the Ark is represented as a Danish ship similar to those figured in p. 115, and steered, like them, by a rudder fastened near the stern on the side thence still called the starboard.
FIGURE OF CHRIST	119
An example of artistic treatment of figure and drapery, from a MS. of Ælfric’s Paraphrase (MS. Cotton Claudius B. iv., British Museum); English work of the eleventh century.

	PAGE
BOOK-SHRINE OR CUMDACH OF MOLAISE (Stokes, "Early Christian Art in Ireland")	120
While in other lands the sacred books of the churches were often covered with splendid jewelled bindings, in Ireland the practice was to treat them as relics and enclose them in boxes or shrines. Such a box was called cumdach. The oldest now extant is that of the Gospel-book of Devenish. Its date is shown by an inscription round the bottom of the box: "Pray for Cenn[failad], for the successor of Molaise, for whom this case [was made], and for Gillabaithin, the artist who made the . . ." Cennfailad was abbot of Devenish 1001-1025. The case, formed of plates of bronze, is adorned with plates of silver with gilt patterns, riveted to the bronze foundation. On the face of the box are the symbols of the four Evangelists, with their names.
WOODEN CHURCH AT GREENSTEAD, ESSEX (Vetusta Monumenta)	121
In A. D. 1010 the body of S. Edmund was removed from Bury to London for fear of the Danes. Three years later it was brought back, and on its way rested at Greenstead, near Ongar, in Essex, where a wooden chapel was built in its honour. The remains of this chapel still exist; in 1748, the date of the engraving from which this illustration is copied, the building was entire, though much decayed. It formed the nave of the church, a small chancel having been added. The original fabric was 29 feet 9 inches long, 14 feet wide, and 5 feet 6 inches high at the sides, which supported the primitive roof. The walls were composed of the trunks of large oak trees, split and roughly hewed on both sides, set upright close to each other, let into a low sill of brickwork at the base, and fastened by wooden pins into a frame of rough timber at the top. The window in the roof was no part of the original structure, which had no inlet for the light, having been designed only as a temporary resting-place for the body of the saint.
COIN OF CNUT	122
CNUT AND EMMA MAKING A DONATION TO NEW MINSTER	123
This illustration, similar in character and subject to that on p. 109, occurs in the MS. Stowe 944 (British Museum), a Register of New Minster written in the time of Cnut. "Cnut Rex" and "Ælgyfu Regina" (Emma, Æthelred's widow and Cnut's wife) are shown confirming their donation, according to custom, on the altar of the Minster.
CARTS, ELEVENTH CENTURY	124
Drawn by oxen, driven by means of a goad; from MS. Cotton Claudius B. iv.
AGRICULTURE	125
From the same MS. This drawing shows some of the implements used in the fields—the rake, the reaping-hook, the pitchfork—and the peasants carrying their burthens home when the day's work is done.
AGRICULTURE	125
PLOUGHING	126
MAKING WATTLED ENCLOSURE	126
SAILING VESSELS AND BOATS	127
All from MS. Harleian 603 (British Museum); a Psalter, English work of the eleventh century, with drawings imitated in a larger and more vigorous style from those in the Utrecht Psalter, a work of the eighth or ninth century, probably written in Northern Gaul. The wattled enclosure is not in the Utrecht MS., and therefore really represents the making of an old English "burh." The boats are copied, but the English artist has much improved the insignificant cherubs' heads of the original, adding wings and the breath coming from their mouths.
KING AND MINISTER DOING JUSTICE AT A GATE	129
An illustration, from MS. Cotton Claudius B. iv., of the practice common to all early civilizations, of rulers "sitting in the gate" of city or palace, to receive suitors and administer justice.

	PAGE
BEDS, ELEVENTH CENTURY (MS. Cotton Claudius B. iv.)	132
CHARIOT (MS. Cotton Claudius B. iv.)	132
ABBEY CHURCH OF S. STEPHEN AT CAEN	134
Built by William the Conqueror, who was buried in it. The choir has been rebuilt; the nave, here represented, stands exactly as he left it.
CASTLE OF ARQUES	139
"A fortress which is undoubtedly one of the earliest and most important in the history of Norman military architecture." "One of the few examples still remaining of the castles which were raised by the turbulent Norman baronage in the stormy days of William's minority" (Freeman, Norman Conquest , iii. 122). It was built, in defiance of the boy-duke, by his uncle William of Arques.
ABBEY CHURCH OF JUMIÈGES	143
Begun in 1040 by Abbot Robert, who became Bishop of London 1044, was Archbishop of Canterbury 1051-1052, and died 1058. The church was finished then, but not consecrated till 1067 by Archbishop Maurilius of Rouen. The choir was rebuilt in the next century.
SCENES FROM THE BAYEUX TAPESTRY	145, 147
This tapestry is now in the Public Library at Bayeux. The earliest known mention of it occurs in an inventory of the goods of the cathedral church of Bayeux in 1476: "Item. Une tente tres longue et étroite de telle à broderie de ymages et escripteaulx [escripteaulx] faisans representation du Conquest d'Angleterre, laquelle est tendue environ la nef de l'Eglise le jour de l'Eglise le jour et par les octaves des Reliques." It begins with Harold's journey to Normandy and ends abruptly with the flight of the English rustics at Senlac after his fall. The original end has evidently been cut or torn off; but the work was never finished, for many of the figures in its latter part are merely traced in outline, not filled in like the rest. Its date has been much disputed; all that can be said with certainty is that it must lie between 1066 and the early years of the thirteenth century.
SEAL OF WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR	151
The reverse of his second great seal; reproduced as giving the best authentic portrait of our first Norman King.
ARCHER, ELEVENTH CENTURY (MS. Cott. Claud. B. iv.)	152
THE TWELVE MONTHS	155, 157, 159
From a calendar prefixed to a Hymnarium, English work of the eleventh century (MS. Cotton Julius A. vi.). The scenes represent the occupations of men in each month of the year.
CHAPEL OF S. JOHN THE EVANGELIST IN THE WHITE TOWER, LONDON.	160
Built by William the Conqueror.
TOWER OF EARL'S BARTON CHURCH	162
The primitive Romanesque architecture of England before the coming of the Normans is now represented only by the little church at Bradford (see p. 68) and by a few church towers, of which Earl's Barton, in Northamptonshire, is the finest. They are distinguished by their tall square form, by the absence of buttresses, by their decoration of pilaster strips, and especially by their windows, which usually consist of two or more round-headed lights grouped together and divided by a mid-wall shaft or baluster. The parapet at Earl's Barton was added later.
TOWER OF TASEBURGH CHURCH, NORFOLK	162
This seems to be the earliest of the round towers, built of rough flint, which are peculiar to the ecclesiastical architecture of East Anglia. It probably dates from the twelfth century; the upper part was rebuilt in 1385.

	PAGE
A BANQUET	163
From MS. Cotton Tiberius C. vi. (British Museum), a Psalter, English work of the eleventh century. To face p.
BUILDING, ELEVENTH CENTURY (MS. Cott. Claud. B. iv.)	164
Illustrates the insertion of a timber gable into stone-work.
DIGGING, ELEVENTH CENTURY (MS. Cott. Claud. B. iv.)	165
SEAL OF ST. ANSELM (Ducarel, "Anglo-Norman Antiquities")	167
GREAT SEAL OF HENRY I.	169
Reverse of Henry's fourth seal. The legend, "Henricus Dei gratia dux Normannorum," shows that it dates from after 1106.
MILKING AND CHURN, A.D. 1130—1174	170
WEAVING, A.D. 1130—1174	171
From MS. Trinity College, Cambridge, R. 17, 1, a Psalter, written and illustrated between 1130 and 1174 by Eadwine, a monk of Christ Church, Canterbury, who has placed his own portrait at the end of his work. It contains three different Latin versions of the Psalms, Gallican, Roman, and Hebraic, in parallel columns; the Gallican version has an interlinear gloss in Latin, the Roman has one in old English, and the Hebraic one in Norman French. Philologically it is of great value; and the writing is scarcely less interesting, as it shows a transition from the square forms of the earlier MSS. to the more ornate style of the modern Gothic hand. It is, like MS. Harl. 603 (see above, p. ix), a copy of the Utrecht Psalter, but more freely treated. The milking and churn seem to be original, and therefore English. In the weaving new details are added in Eadwine's copy.
LOOM AND DISTAFF FROM THE FÆROE ISLES (Montelius, "Civilization of Sweden")	172
The distaff and loom still used by the women of the Færoe Isles preserve the primitive forms which their ancestors used a thousand years ago.
BUILDING	173
GROUP ROUND A TABLE } (MS. Harl. 603, after Utrecht Psalter)
The fortification is after the Roman manner, as in the Utrecht MS. The table is Roman; the figures have been added and are English.
MAP OF EARLY LONDON	174
NORMAN TOWER, S. EDMUNDSBURY (from a photograph)	176
This tower, probably built by Abbot Baldwin (1067—1097), formed the entrance into the churchyard opposite the west end of the Abbey Church, and may have served as a campanile.
THE ABBOT'S BRIDGE, S. EDMUNDSBURY	177
Built early in the thirteenth century.
MEN IN PRISON AND IN STOCKS, A.D. 1130—1174 (Eadwine's Psalter)	178
English; not in Utrecht Psalter.
SCENES FROM THE LIFE OF S. GUTHLAC (MS. Harleian Roll Y. vi.)	179
Anglo-Norman pictures, twelfth century, of S. Guthlac's life. For his cell at Crowland, c. A.D. 700, see p. 60, and for Æthelbald's visit p. 69.
HOSPITAL OF S. GILES-IN-THE-FIELDS, LONDON	180
Drawn by Matthew Paris in his Chronicle, MS. Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, xxvi. This hospital for lepers was founded by Matilda, wife of Henry I.
SEAL OF S. BARTHOLOMEW'S PRIORY, SMITHFIELD	180
From the impression attached to the deed of surrender of the Priory to Henry VIII., Aug. Deeds of Surrender of Monasteries, 136 (Public Record Office).

	PAGE
CHURCH OF THE HOLY SEPULCHRE, CAMBRIDGE	181
Built by a Brotherhood of the Holy Sepulchre, to whom the Abbot and Convent of Ramsey gave for that purpose, between 1114 and 1130, a burial-ground which they possessed at Cambridge. This Brotherhood was probably a band of pilgrims who had gone to the Holy Land together; for the church which they built is clearly imitated from that which covers the traditional site of our Lord's Sepulchre at Jerusalem.
ORGAN, A.D. 1130—1174 (Eadwine's Psalter)	182
A somewhat unusual representation of an organ with two players and two bellows; copied from the Utrecht Psalter.
THE EXCHEQUER, A.D. 1130—1174 (Eadwine's Psalter)	184
Better drawn than the original in the Utrecht Psalter; the headgear of the presiding officer is altered from the crown with balls on it given in the Utrecht MS. The picture illustrates the weighing of the money received at the Exchequer, which was customary under Henry I. and Bishop Roger and is described in the Dialogus de Scaccario, written by Roger's grand-nephew, towards the end of the century.
ARCHES OF CLOISTER OF S. AUBIN'S ABBEY, ANGERS	187
The Abbey of S. Aubin, founded in Merovingian times, seems to have been rebuilt by Geoffrey Greygown and Fulk the Black. "Only one huge tower remains, but fragments of it are still to be seen embedded in the buildings of the Préfecture—above all a Romanesque arcade, fretted with tangled imagery and apocalyptic figures of the richest work of the eleventh century" ("Stray Studies," p. 369). This arcade, here figured, seems to have been part of the cloister.
DURTAL, ANJOU	189
Most of Fulk Nerra's castles were rebuilt in the fifteenth century, Durtal among them, but some of his work still remains in the keep. The little town has kept a remarkably old-world aspect, and town and castle together form one of the most picturesque illustrations of the peculiar character stamped on the country by its early counts, especially by Fulk the Black.
EFFIGY OF GEOFFREY PLANTAGENET, COUNT OF ANJOU	191
Geoffrey was buried in Le Mans Cathedral. The richly enamelled tablet that covered his tomb is now in the local museum.
THE "STANDARD," A.D. 1138	193
From MS. Arundel 150 (British Museum), an early thirteenth century copy of part of the Chronicle of Roger of Howden.
GREAT SEAL OF THE EMPRESS MATILDA	194
This is the only seal which Matilda is known to have used; its legend, "Mathildis Romanorum Regina," shows that it was made for her in Germany before her first husband's crowning at Rome, A.D. 1111.
SEAL OF BISHOP HENRY OF WINCHESTER (Journal of the Archaeological Association)	196
MAP OF THE DOMINIONS OF THE ANGEVINS	To face p. 197
CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL MONASTERY, A.D. 1130—1174 (Eadwine's Psalter)	200
This plan or bird's-eye view, which covers two pages of a large folio volume, represents church and monastery as they were from 1130, when the church, rebuilt by Lanfranc and his successors, was consecrated by William of Corbeil, till 1174, when the choir was burnt down.
SEAL OF S. THOMAS OF CANTERBURY (Journal of Archaeological Association)	201

MITRE OF S. THOMAS	PAGE 201
------------------------------	-------------

Of white silk, embroidered with gold braid; one of a set of vestments now in the Cathedral at Sens, and traditionally said to have belonged to the martyr.

S. THOMAS AND HERBERT OF BOSHAM	202
---	-----

Initial at the beginning of a thirteenth century MS. (Trinity College, Cambridge, B. 5. 4) of Herbert's Gloss on the Psalter. Herbert was the favourite secretary of St. Thomas, and strongly encouraged his opposition to the King.

SANCTUARY KNOCKER, DURHAM	203
-------------------------------------	-----

FRITHSTOOL, HEXHAM PRIORY (Jusserand , "Wayfaring Life")	203
--	-----

The regulations as to sanctuary varied in different places. At Durham the fugitive had to knock at the door on the north side of the nave of the Cathedral with the bronze knocker (twelfth century work) which hangs there still. As soon as he was admitted, the bell of the Galilee was tolled, to give notice that some one had taken sanctuary; a black robe with a yellow cross on the left shoulder was given him, and he was lodged "on a grate on the south side, near the door and near the altar"—i.e. apparently the altar of the Galilee. At Hexham the limits of the sanctuary were marked by four crosses, but the fugitive was not absolutely safe from pursuit till he reached the frithstool or peace chair. The Hexham frithstool dates from the twelfth century. Only one other now remains in England, at Beverley Minster.

S. THOMAS EXCOMMUNICATING HIS ENEMIES, AND ARGUING WITH HENRY AND LEWIS	} 205, 206
PARTING OF S. THOMAS AND THE TWO KINGS
CROWNING OF THE YOUNG KING; HIS CORONATION-BANQUET
S. THOMAS EMBARKING FOR ENGLAND

Four out of eight pictures forming the earliest series of illustrations of the history of S. Thomas, and also one of the best examples of the development of the French style of illumination in English hands. They occur in a French life of the saint, written in England 1230—1260, and are far superior in drawing to contemporary illuminations of French workmanship. They are here reproduced from the facsimiles in M. Paul Meyer's edition of the "Vie de S. Thomas" (Société des anciens textes français), the MS. being in a private collection at Courtrai. The second half of the third picture represents an incident at the coronation-banquet of the young King, when his father chose to serve him at table, and the youth remarked that it was but just for the son of an earl to serve the son of a king.

MARTYRDOM OF ST. THOMAS	207
-----------------------------------	-----

Owing to the order issued by Henry VIII. in 1538 for the destruction of all pictures and images of "Bishop Becket," and the erasure of all mention of him from the service-books, medieval representations of S. Thomas of Canterbury are extremely rare in England. The earliest now remaining is here for the first time reproduced, from MS. Harleian 5102 (British Museum), a Psalter written in Normandy, and illuminated by an English hand, early in the thirteenth century. It tells the story of the martyrdom in graphic detail, and in close agreement with the contemporary accounts. The two foremost murderers, Fitz Urse and Tracy, are in the full armour of their time, a whole suit of ring-mail; each carries an enormous shield; the third knight, partly hidden behind them, and also clad in ring-mail, is doubtless Richard le Breton, while the fourth, whose bare head alone is visible, represents Hugh de Morville, who took no part in the murder, but merely guarded the door. The archbishop's cap is falling to the ground, struck off, as stated by William of Canterbury (an eye-witness), by the first blow of Fitz Urse, whose sword just touches the head of Thomas, and who is identified by the rampant bear on his shield. Tracy's shield is blank, evidently unfinished; he is striking the blow which wounded the arm of Grim, a clerk who on this occasion carried the archbishop's cross. This blow is described by all the contemporary biographers of S. Thomas, though there is some question as to the identity of the striker; the weight of evidence, however, goes to show that he was Tracy. It has been asserted that there is no authority for the introduction of the cross, whether held by Grim or by Thomas himself—a detail which, in one form or the other, occurs in all extant pictures, and all later medieval accounts of the scene; but the assertion is incorrect; the Icelandic Thomas Saga, which, though compiled in the fourteenth century, represents two very early biographies now lost, states distinctly that Grim "bore the cross," and a letter written within a few weeks of the event describes Thomas as dying "cross in hand"; evidently he took it from Grim when the latter was disabled by the blow represented here. The round arches over the heads of the group are, like the accoutrement of the knights, evidence of the early date of the picture. The hanging lamp is also worth notice. The walls and towers above are probably meant for those which encircled the cathedral precincts.

	PAGE
"CAPUT THOMÆ"—SIGN OF A CANTERBURY PILGRIM (Wright, "Archæological Album")	208
Gerald of Wales tells how he and his fellow-pilgrims returned from Canterbury "with the signs of S. Thomas hung round their necks." Chaucer's pilgrims "set their signys upon theyr hedes, and som oppon theyr capp." These signs, or brooches, were common at places of pilgrimage, and consisted of thin sheets of lead having figures or devices stamped on them, and mostly showing traces of having had a pin at the back. The one here figured was found in the Thames at London.
GREAT SEAL OF THE YOUNG KING HENRY, SON OF HENRY II.	208
Only one impression of this seal is known; it is attached to a charter in Canterbury Cathedral Library.
TOWER OF HADISCOE THORPE CHURCH, NORFOLK	210
A round tower of the later twelfth century. It is built of flint, squared and arranged in a pattern at the top. The transition from Romanesque to Gothic is shown in some of the windows, with pointed arches and square abaci.
EFFIGY OF HENRY II. (Stothard, "Monumental Effigies")	212
From his tomb at Fontevraud.
GREAT SEAL OF RICHARD I.	214
Obverse of his first seal, 1189-1198.
SEAL OF LES ANDELYS	215
This seal, in the collection of the late Rev. S. S. Lewis, dates from the English re-conquest of Normandy in the fifteenth century. The castle figured on it is probably meant for a conventional representation of Château-Gaillard, the head of the lordship of Les Andelys; the armorial bearings are those adopted by the English kings as claimants of the Crown of France.
CHÂTEAU-GAILLARD FROM THE EAST (After J. M. W. Turner)	217
CHÂTEAU-GAILLARD FROM THE SOUTH (After J. M. W. Turner)	220
ANCIENT SWORD OF STATE, ISLE OF MAN (Publications of Manx Society) . .	221
Formerly borne before the kings or lords of Man, and still borne before the governor at the promulgation of laws in the Tynwald. The Isle of Man is the only place where the ancient Scandinavian custom of proclaiming the laws on a hill, in the open air, has been preserved; it has been practised there since the time of the Scandinavian Kings. The sword is of late twelfth or early thirteenth century work, exactly like that represented on King John's tomb at Worcester. It is 3 ft. 6 in. long, and was once 4 or 5 in. longer, but its point is broken. Near the rest on each side of the hilt are the arms of Man, with a curious triangle in the centre.

	PAGE
NAMING OF S. JOHN THE BAPTIST	To face p. 221
Copied, by permission of the Kent Archæological Society, from a reproduction in "Archæologia Cantiana" of an early twelfth century painting in tempera, on the wall of the crypt under the chapel of S. Anselm in Canterbury Cathedral.
MONK ILLUMINATING	223
From MS. Bodleian 602, a Bestiarium, written about A.D. 1200. The artist is scraping the surface of the vellum with his left hand, ready to draw on it with the right.
FAUNA OF IRELAND ACCORDING TO GERALD OF WALES	225
The birds, beasts and fishes here grouped together are marginal illustrations in a contemporary MS. of Gerald's Topography of Ireland (MS. Roy. 13 B. viii., British Museum). They are a fox, two rats, a wolf, barnacle-geese, a beaver, a martin, a mole, a stag, a black stork, a marvellous fish found at Carlingford, having three golden teeth, a crane, a badger, a weasel, a hind or doe, two kingfishers perched on a shamrock plant, a spider, a snake, and a mouse. Three of these animals, the beaver, the mole, and the snake, Gerald specially notes as not existing in Ireland.
HEDGEHOGS AND TREES	226
From MS. Bodleian 602.
SHOOTING BIRDS IN TREE	227
From MS. Ashmolean 1511 (Bodleian Library), a Bestiarium, c. A.D. 1200.
GLUTTONY	228
This little picture of a priest greedily eating cakes or tarts out of a dish held up to him by a demon is from a book of Saints' Lives (MS. Arundel 91, British Museum), English work, of about the same date as the "Goliath" writings.
MAP OF LONDON IN THE THIRTEENTH CENTURY	231
From the Rev. W. J. Loftie's "History of London."
KNIGHT AND SLINGER	235
From MS. Roy. 1 D. x. (British Museum); a Psalter, English work, early thirteenth century.
THE BATTLE OF BOUVINES	236
From MS. Corpus Christi College, Cambridge, xvi., the second volume of the Chronica Majora , written and illustrated by the hand of Matthew Paris. The drawing represents the turning-point in the battle. In a charge led by one of John's captains, Hugh de Boves, the King of France was unhorsed and nearly slain. One of his soldiers saved him at the cost of his own life, and a rally of the French put Hugh and his followers to flight.
SEAL OF STEPHEN LANGTON	237
From an impression attached to Harleian Charter 75 A. 14, British Museum.
SEAL OF ROBERT FITZWALTER	239
From the original seal, in the British Museum.
THE GREAT CHARTER	241
Four contemporary copies of the charter remain; one at Lincoln, one at Salisbury, two in the British Museum. The facsimile, reduced to rather more than a third of the original size, is from one of these last; the other, which alone of the four has "the royal seal still hanging" from it (see p. 240), is so "injured by age and fire" as to be illegible.
EFFIGY OF KING JOHN, ON HIS TOMB (Stothard , "Monumental Effigies")	243
John's tomb now stands in the middle of the choir of Worcester Cathedral. It was originally in the Lady Chapel at the east end, between the graves of S. Oswald and S. Wulfstan, Bishops of Worcester, who are therefore represented on either side of the King.
EFFIGY OF WILLIAM MARSHAL, ON HIS TOMB	245
In the Temple Church, London. The figure is sculptured in Sussex marble; it is here copied from Richardson's "Monumental Effigies in the Temple Church."

NOTES ON THE ILLUSTRATIONS

	PAGE
MAP OF EARLY OXFORD	248
SOUTH VIEW OF BOCARDO, AND TOWER OF S. MICHAEL'S CHURCH, OXFORD (Skelton, "Oxonia Antiqua Restaurata")	249
The north gate of Oxford, made strong for purposes of defence, passed after the Barons' War into the hands of the mayor and bailiffs; under Henry III. it was already used as a prison for town malefactors, and under Edward II., if not earlier, "for scollers for little faults." In 1555 it was the prison of Latimer and Ridley, and in 1556 of Cranmer. Its common name, Bocardo (of unknown meaning), dates from the time of Henry III. It was taken down in 1771. The tower of S. Michael's Church, seen behind it, was built temp. Henry I.
OLD CHURCH OF ST. MARTIN, OXFORD (Skelton, "Oxonia Antiqua Restaurata")	249
From Oxford's earliest days "the church of S. Martin in the very heart of it, at the Quatrevoix or Carfax where its four roads meet, was the centre of the city's life. The Town-mote was held in its churchyard" ("Stray Studies," p. 356). The original church was, as Anthony Wood says, "of a most ancient erection and beyond all record." The view here reproduced shows that its exterior must have been greatly altered, if not rebuilt, about the time of Edward III. Wood says that "the tower, which of old time was high, and of a more statly bulke, as also some part of their church, was by the command of King Edward III., in the fourteenth year of his reign (1340), taken downe lower, as now it is; because upon the complaint of schollers the townsmen would in times of combat with them retire up there as their castle and from thence gall and annoi them with arrows and stones, &c." This tower is the only part of the church now remaining.
WATCH-TOWER ON HYTHE BRIDGE, OXFORD, CALLED "FRIAR BACON'S STUDY" (Skelton, "Oxonia Antiqua Restaurata")	250
Built in twelfth or early thirteenth century; taken down 1779.
HYTHE BRIDGE AND CASTLE TOWER, OXFORD (Skelton, "Oxonia Antiqua Restaurata")	251
Hythe Bridge (so called from the hythe or landing-place) gave entrance to Oxford on the west. It seems to have been first built in 1085; the present bridge dates from about 1383. The tower of the castle, seen in the distance, was built in 1091.
HOME FOR CONVERTED JEWS, OXFORD (Skelton, "Oxonia Antiqua Restaurata")	251
In 1228 a house which lay on the western edge of the Lesser Jewry, in Fish Street a little below Carfax, was owned by a Jew named David. From him it passed to Henry III., who founded there, in 1235, a home for converted Jews. In the sixteenth century the Guildhall was built next it, and in 1750 both were taken down for the erection of a new Town Hall.
RUINS OF OSNEY ABBEY	252
Osney was an Augustinian house, founded 1129, rebuilt 1247. Not a stone of it remains; the view here given is from an engraving by Hollar, in the seventeenth century.
S. FRIDESWIDE'S PRIORY CHURCH, OXFORD	253
This view is reproduced from Ingram's "Memorials of Oxford," to show as much as possible of the church in its original state, temp. Henry I., and as little as possible of the changes which it has since undergone. It was first altered by Wolsey to form the chapel of Cardinal College, founded on the site of the old Austin priory. Henry VIII. changed the name of the college to Christchurch, and in 1545 made its chapel the cathedral church of the new diocese of Oxford.
SEAL OF OXFORD UNIVERSITY, c. 1300 (Ingram, "Memorials of Oxford")	254
SEAL OF OXFORD CITY (Ingram, "Memorials of Oxford")	255
HOSPITAL AT OXFORD, BUILT BY HENRY III.	256
A drawing by Matthew Paris, in his autograph "Historia Anglorum," MS. Roy. 14 C. vii. (British Museum). A hospital for sick persons and pilgrims was founded in John's reign outside the east gate of Oxford, and dedicated to S. John the Baptist. Henry III. rebuilt it in 1233. In 1456 its site was granted by Henry VI. to Waynflete, Bishop of Winchester, for the erection of Magdalene College.

	PAGE
AUSTIN FRIARY, OXFORD (Skelton, "Oxonia Antiqua Restaurata")	257
Founded in 1268 by Henry III.; dissolved 1539. Wadhams College was founded on its site in 1613. The buildings here pictured, the last remnant of those erected for the Friars by Henry III., were taken down in 1801.
BIHAM HALL AND POSTMASTERS' HALL, OXFORD (Skelton, "Oxonia Antiqua Restaurata")	258
Postmasters' Hall (the high building with dormer windows) was founded c. 1380 by Dr. John Williyott as a residence for certain exhibitioners of Merton, called Portionists and afterwards Postmasters. In 1595 these Postmasters moved into Merton College; their house became a private residence, and the Oxford historian Anthony Wood was born there in 1632. Biham Hall, which stood next it, seems to have been a lodging-house for clerks or students as early as Henry III.'s time. It is now used as stables for Merton College.
GLOUCESTER HALL (NOW WORCESTER COLLEGE), OXFORD	259
This college was founded in 1283, as a residence for thirteen monks to be chosen out of the brotherhood at Gloucester and sent to study at Oxford. It was afterwards empowered to receive Benedictine students from other monasteries, and the buildings were enlarged to that end in 1298. After the dissolution of the monasteries it became a dependency of S. John's College, till in 1714 it passed to Sir Thomas Cookes, a Worcestershire gentleman, who re-established it on a new footing under the title of Worcester College. A considerable part of the buildings erected in 1298 still remains; the present illustration is from a drawing made by David Loggan c. 1673, when they were very little altered, save by decay—for the college went to ruin after the Civil War—and the building of a new chapel.
OLD BUILDINGS OF MERTON COLLEGE, OXFORD (Skelton, "Oxonia Antiqua Restaurata")	260
Walter de Merton, Bishop of Rochester 1274, Chancellor to Henry III. 1260-3, and to Edward I. 1273-7, founded in 1264 a House of Scholars at Malden in Surrey, for the support of twenty students, who were to live together, under certain rules or statutes, at Oxford or some other University. In 1274 he settled the students definitely at Oxford, transferred the Malden house thither, and drew up for the college thus established a set of statutes which laid the foundation of the collegiate system. It is doubtful whether any part of his building now remains. That here represented seems to have been erected early in the fourteenth century, perhaps for a refectory, on the site of two houses which he purchased to form the nucleus of his college. It stood on the west side of S. Alban's Hall, facing the present college buildings, and was demolished in 1812.
CORONATION AND UNCTION OF A KING	267
From MS. Cambridge University Library Ee. iii. 59; a French Life of S. Edward the Confessor, written and illuminated in England, dedicated to Queen Eleanor of Provence, and probably presented to her at the restoration of Westminster Abbey in 1245. The coronation here intended is that of Edward, but the youthful figure of the king is probably a portrait of Henry III.
CONSECRATION OF A BISHOP	269
From Matthew Paris's " Vitæ Duorum Offarum ," MS. Cotton Nero D. i. (British Museum); probably by Matthew's own hand.
HENRY III. SAILING TO BRITANNY, 1230 (MS. Roy. 14 C. vii.)	270
HUBERT DE BURGH IN SANCTUARY AT MERTON, 1232 (MS. Roy. 14 C. vii.)	271
HENRY III. CARRYING THE HOLY BLOOD IN PROCESSION TO WESTMINSTER (MS. C. C. C. Camb. xvi.)	271
These illustrations are from drawings by Matthew Paris. In 1247 Henry received from the Holy Land a crystal vessel said to contain some drops of the Blood of Christ. The King carried it in procession to Westminster on S. Edward's Day, October 13.

	PAGE
MARRIAGE OF HENRY III. (MS. Roy. 14 C. vii.)	272
By Matthew Paris
A ROYAL MARRIAGE (MS. Cott. Nero D. i.)	273
Probably by Matthew Paris.
EDMUND, SON OF HENRY III., IN HIS CRADLE, 1244 (MS. Roy. 14 C. vii.) .	273
By Matthew Paris.
KING AND COURT (MS. Cott. Nero D. i.)	274
Probably by Matthew Paris.
CONSECRATION OF ARCHBISHOP EDMUND (MS. Roy. 14 C. vii.)	275
This illustration and the three following are from drawings by Matthew Paris.
HENRY III. SAILING HOME FROM GASCONY, 1243 (MS. Roy. 14 C. vii.) . .	276
LEGATINE COUNCIL IN LONDON, 1237 (MS. Roy. 14 C. vii.)	277
MATTHEW PARIS AT THE FEET OF THE VIRGIN AND CHILD (MS. Roy. 14 C. vii.)	278
To face p.
THE PAPAL COURT (MS. Camb. Univ. Lib. Ee. iii. 59.)	279
FOUNDATION OF A MINSTER (MS. Cott. Nero D. i.)	280, 281
Probably by Matthew Paris.
JOHN OF WALLINGFORD	283
Monk of St. Alban's, 1231-1258, and writer or transcriber of the Chronicle (MS. Cotton Julius D. vii. , British Museum) in which this portrait is inserted, probably by Matthew Paris.
A FRANCISCAN (MS. C. C. Camb. xvi.)	284
By Matthew Paris.
ALEXANDER HALES, FRANCISCAN	287
From a MS. in Cambridge University Library, Mm. v. 31—a contemporary, possibly autograph, MS. of a Commentary on the Apocalypse by Alexander of Hales, who is here portrayed in his Franciscan habit, and in the act of receiving the Holy Communion. Born at Hales in Gloucestershire, Alexander studied in Paris and became a famous teacher of philosophy. He joined the order of S. Francis in 1228 and died in 1250.
SIMON DE MONTFORT	289
From a glass-painting in a window of Chartres Cathedral, c. 1231.
SEAL OF SIMON DE MONTFORT	291
From an impression in the British Museum.
KINGS IN ARMOUR (MS. Camb. Univ. Lib. Ee. iii. 59.)	293
This illumination represents a single combat between Eadmund Ironside and Cnut. It is here given as an illustration of armour and horse-trappings c. 1245.
THE TOWER OF LONDON	295
From a reproduction in "Vetusta Monumenta" of "A true and exact draught of the Tower Liberties, surveyed in the year 1597 by Gulielmus Hayward and J. Gascoyne," to illustrate "A Description of the Tower . . . made by direction of Sir John Peyton." There is every reason to believe that the Tower and its surroundings were (save for the guns) virtually unaltered since the thirteenth century.
KING OF FRANCE	297
An illumination inserted at the end of a Psalter, MS. Roy. 2 A. xxii. (British Museum). It is of the thirteenth century, and is supposed to represent a French king, from the fleur-de-lis on the robe.
VIEW OF LEWES, FROM THE DOWNS NEAR MOUNT HARRY	299
Mount Harry, popularly supposed to be named after Henry III., is the highest point of the Downs north-west of Lewes. The castle stood on the north side of the town, the priory on the south.
KNIGHT IN ARMOUR (MS. Roy. 2. A. xxii.)	303

	PAGE
THE VIRGIN AND CHILD (MS. Roy. 2. A. xxii.) To face p.	305
FACSIMILE FROM RED BOOK OF HERGEST	307
This book, now in the Bodleian Library, but belonging to Jesus College, Oxford, contains the best existing text of the Mabinogion. It is a fine Welsh MS. of the fourteenth century. The page here given is the opening of the story of Geraint and Enid.
MAP TO ILLUSTRATE THE WELSH WARS OF WILLIAM RUFUS AND HENRY I. From Mr. Freeman's "William Rufus."	310
KEEP OF BRIDGENORTH CASTLE	311
Built by Robert of Belesme in 1101-2; known as "the leaning tower of Bridgenorth," the castle having been blown up by the Parliamentary troops in the Civil War, and the tower thus thrown out of perpendicular.
CARDIFF CASTLE.	312
The polygonal shell-keep was probably built by Earl Robert of Gloucester, son of Henry I. and son-in-law and successor to Robert Fitz-Hamo. The mound on which it stands was either Fitz-Hamo's own work, or was already there before his time. The rest of the building here shown, a gate-tower leading to the keep, dates from the early fifteenth century.
PEMBROKE CASTLE	314
The finest example in England of a very rare type of military architecture. The keep is not a shell, as circular keeps usually are, but a real donjon, as solid as the square keeps of Richmond or Rochester. It was built by the De Clares or the Marshals, early in the thirteenth century.
WELSH FOOTSOLDIER AND ARCHER	315
From an entry-book of Edward I.'s time, formerly among the documents pertaining to the Treasury of Receipt of Exchequer, and kept in the Chapter-house at Westminster; now transferred to the Public Record Office, where the book is known as Chapter-house Liber A.
LADY CHAPEL, GLASTONBURY	316
Glastonbury abbey church was burnt down in 1184. The rebuilding was begun at once, and the first part completed was the Lady Chapel at the west end. In the fifteenth century it became better known as the chapel of S. Joseph of Arimathea, who was regarded as the original founder of the church on whose site it stood—the "ancient church" beside which Ine had reared his abbey (see p. 67). Its architecture is extremely interesting; Norman ornamentation is combined with a French type of capitals and mouldings to produce a style which as a whole is thoroughly English, a peculiarly graceful form assumed in Somerset, and especially at Glastonbury, by the transition from Romanesque to Gothic which was taking place in the later years of Henry II.
LLANTHONY PRIORY, GLAMORGANSHIRE	317
An Austin priory, founded in 1108. The establishment was removed to Gloucester in 1139, but the old house (near Abergavenny) lived on as a cell to the new one, and was rebuilt c. 1200-1220. It is an interesting example of a peculiar type of Transition architecture, seen in its perfection in South Wales.
GRIFFIN ESCAPING FROM THE TOWER	318
Griffin, a son of Llewelyn ap Jorwerth, was betrayed by his brother David to the English, and imprisoned in the Tower. In 1243 he tried to escape, but the rope broke and he fell and broke his neck. The drawing is by Matthew Paris (MS. Corpus Christi College Cambridge xvi.).
REMAINS OF BISHOP'S PALACE, S. DAVID'S	319
Built c. 1342 by Gower, who was bishop 1328-1347. The finest specimen of a peculiar and very beautiful type of Decorated architecture, of which Bishop Gower seems to have been the inventor, and which may be traced in several other buildings in Pembrokeshire.
CONWAY CASTLE	321
Begun 1285, and finished before the death of Edward I.
CAERNARVON CASTLE	321
Built 1283-1322.
GREAT SEAL OF EDWARD I.	323

	PAGE
THE CHANCELLOR'S SEAL BAG (Journal of Archaeological Association)	325
Sculptured on the tomb of Walter de Merton, in Rochester Cathedral. Walter died in 1277.
SEAL OF STATUTE MERCHANT, GLOUCESTER, 1307—27 (Collection of Society of Antiquaries)	327
Under the Statute of Merchants, issued in 1283 and re-issued in 1285, merchants could have their debts enrolled before the Mayor of London or of some other appointed town; the obligation was sealed with the seals of the debtor and of the king, and if the debtor failed to pay in due time it served as a warrant for his attachment. The seal here figured bears the image not of Edward I. but of his son, and was made for the purposes of this statute under Edward II.
SEAL OF WILLIAM MORAUNT (Archaeological Journal)	328
This seal, representing the owner's manor-house, is attached to a deed dated June, 1272, whereby William Moraunt grants to Peter Picard one acre of land at Otford, in Kent.
MANOR-HOUSE, ACTON BURNELL, SHROPSHIRE (Archaeological Journal)	328
Built by Robert Burnell, Bishop of Bath and Chancellor to Edward I. The king's license to crenellate is dated 1283; the Parliament of Acton Burnell therefore was probably not held in the new manor-house, which could hardly have been finished in a year, but, according to local tradition, in a neighbouring building still called "the Parliament-house," of which only the two end gables now remain.
SIR JOHN D'ABERNON, 1277 (Macklin, "Monumental Brasses")	332
This is said to be the earliest existing English brass. It is in Stoke D'Abernon Church, Surrey.
MAN WITH BOW AND ARROWS, WOMAN WITH DISTAFF, FOURTEENTH CENTURY	333
From a Psalter known as Queen Mary's (MS. Roy. 2 B. vii., British Museum). This and the two following illustrations are given here to show the dress of English peasants in the time of the Edwards.
BOB-APPLE (MS. Roy. 2 B. vii.)	334
CLUB-BALL	334
From MS. Roy. 10 E. iv. (British Museum), a splendid copy of the Decretals, once the property of S. Bartholomew's Priory, Smithfield. The margins are covered with illustrations of fables, &c., added by an English hand to a MS. written for French use, early in the fourteenth century. The game here represented seems to be a variety of club-ball, though what the players hold are not exactly clubs.
TOLL-HOUSE, GREAT YARMOUTH (Journal of Archaeological Association)	335
This building, of which the greater part dates from the thirteenth century, was called the Toll-house, from the great chamber on the first floor where the bailiffs received their tolls. It "was also called the Host-house, because in the great chamber the hosts, to whom foreign fishermen entrusted the sale of their herrings, were accustomed to assemble and pay their "heighning money," being the difference between the "tide price" fixed by the Corporation when the fish was first landed and the selling price; which difference the Corporation claimed as part of the town revenue. Hence the above apartment was also called the Heighning Chamber . Beneath the main building is an underground room, 20 feet long, 12 wide, and 16 high, called "the hold," originally used as a dungeon into which all prisoners were thrust without distinction. It had a huge beam placed along the centre, with iron rings at intervals, to which prisoners were chained" (Palmer, "Perlustration of Great Yarmouth," ii. 241); a "gaol for prisoners and malefactors" having been granted to the town by Henry III. in 1261. This prison was in use till the beginning of the present century. The great chamber also served for the weekly Borough Court (held ever since John's time) and for the trial of prisoners before the bailiffs. Since 1622 it has also been used instead of the old Guildhall for the meetings of the Corporation, and for the Assizes.

	PAGE
TOWN-WALL AND TOWER, KING'S LYNN	336
From an engraving, in William Taylor's "Antiquities of King's Lynn," of a drawing made just before the wall was taken down. From the close resemblance of the arches to some still remaining at Castle Rising, and known to be of the early thirteenth century, it is believed that the Lynn walls were of about the same date. They were possibly built by Savaric de Mauléon, to whom John intrusted the fortification of Lynn in 1216.
SEAL OF ROCHESTER, c. 1300 (Society of Antiquaries)	337
Obverse, S. Andrew, patron saint of the cathedral and town; reverse, a very good representation of Rochester Castle.
OLD BRISTOL BRIDGE	338
Built in 1247; taken down 1762-3, when there were found, inside one of the piers, remnants of timber construction which had evidently formed part of a still older wooden bridge, round which the new piers were built. The bridge appeared to have been originally designed to have houses on it, though none of those actually remaining could be traced further back than Edward IV. The view here reproduced from Seyer's "Memorials of Bristol" was taken from a drawing made shortly before the demolition.
SEAL OF DOVER, 1305 (Society of Antiquaries)	339
Obverse, S. Martin, the patron saint of the town, cutting his cloak in halves to share it with a beggar; reverse, a ship, the usual emblem of a sea-port.
SCYPTRE OF THE LORD MAYOR OF LONDON (Jewitt and Hope, "Corporation Plate")	340
Every year, when a new Lord Mayor of London is elected, this sceptre is formally handed to him by the City Chamberlain, who is its custodian. Except for this annual ceremony, it is only used on great occasions of state, such as a coronation, when it is carried by the Lord Mayor. It is 1 foot 6 inches long, made of crystal mounted in gold. The gold head, in the form of a coronet composed of alternate crosses and fleurs-de-lis rising from a fillet set with large pearls, rubies and sapphires, dates from the fifteenth century, as is shown by the royal arms (France modern and England quarterly) on the flat top; while the large glass knot in the middle of the shaft was inserted about fifty years ago in the place of an earlier one. But the shaft and base are of far older date. They are of crystal, cut into spiral grooves, along each of which runs a thread of gold wire, and adorned with bands of gold, each encircled by a ring of pearls. These pearls are set in a manner peculiar to Byzantine work, being strung on gold wire. It is therefore quite possible that this shaft dates from before the Norman conquest of England, and has been in continuous use not only from the very beginning of the London mayoralty, but even from the days of the Portreeves, down to the present time.
MOOT HORN OF THE CORPORATION OF FAVERSHAM (from a photograph)	341
This horn served for the calling of local assemblies. It is one of the oldest existing moot-horns, and dates from the early fourteenth century.
S. ETHELBERT'S GATE, NORWICH (from a photograph)	343
This is one of two gates leading from the town into the Cathedral precincts or Close. The citizens of Norwich and the monks of the Cathedral monastery were constantly at strife as to disputed jurisdiction, tolls, market-rights, and so forth, and in 1272 there was a furious fight, in which the monastery was burnt, the church plundered, and the monks were all slaughtered or put to flight. The prior gathered troops at Yarmouth and retaliated upon the town; for more than two years the strife went on; at last King Edward enforced a pacification, gave the monks leave to make new gates to their Close and to keep them closed at their pleasure, and ordered the citizens to pay 500 marks yearly for six years towards the cost of the new building. S. Ethelbert's Gate was built accordingly in 1275. It took its name from a neighbouring church, which had also been burnt in 1272. Over the gate was a chapel, with a window on the east side; the side here figured is the western, facing the town, and this had originally four small windows, now blocked up, which served as loopholes to shoot from in case of attack. The lower part of the gateway is of stone, the upper part of faced and squared flint, with stone tracery let in; this has been restored, but exactly after the old pattern.

	PAGE
ELEANOR OF CASTILE (Stothard, "Monumental Effigies")	346
From her tomb in Westminster Abbey.
TWO KNIGHTS TILTING, AND HERALDS BLOWING TRUMPETS (MS. Roy. 10 E. iv.)	348
A ROYAL BANQUET, A.D. 1338-44	348
From MS. Bodleian Misc. 264, the Romance of Alexander, illuminated A.D. 1338-44 by Jehan de Grise, a French artist, probably working in England.
SIR GEOFFREY LOUTRELL, HIS WIFE AND DAUGHTER-IN-LAW	349
Sir Geoffrey Loutrell, of Irnham, Lincolnshire, was born 1276, and died 1345. His wife, Agnes de Sutton, holds his jousting-helmet and his banner; the lady who holds his shield is either Beatrice Scrope, wife of their eldest son Andrew, or her sister Constance, wife of the second son, Geoffrey. Both these couples were married as children in 1319; the date of the illumination therefore must lie between that year and the death of Agnes, in 1340. The MS. is a Psalter, written for Sir Geoffrey, as the inscription above this picture shows. From the Loutrells it passed to Lord William Howard, Warden of the Western Marches under Elizabeth, and bears his autograph. It finally went to the Weld family, of Lulworth Castle, Dorset. The illustrations from it given here are copied from the reproductions in " Vetusta Monumenta ."
EDINBURGH CASTLE, FROM THE SOUTH	352
From Slezer's " Theatrum Scotiae ," a survey of the castles of Scotland made by a Dutch officer under William and Mary, 1693. The present castle, begun by Edward III. in 1344, became a royal residence of the Stuarts, who added to it greatly throughout the fourteenth, fifteenth, and early sixteenth centuries. The earlier castle had been demolished by Bruce, all but S. Margaret's Chapel (see p. 357).
MAP OF SCOTLAND IN 1290	To face p. 351
CHESSMEN, SCANDINAVIAN, FOUND IN THE ISLE OF LEWIS	354
These specimens belong to the remains of six or more different sets of chessmen, which are now in the British Museum. They are Scandinavian work of the twelfth or thirteenth century, beautifully carved in walrus-tusk, and some of them stained red. They illustrate the costume of northern kings, queens, bishops, and warriors of the time.
S. LUKE, FROM S. MARGARET'S GOSPEL-BOOK	356
This book, now in the Bodleian Library, belonged to S. Margaret, Queen of Scotland, and was probably used by her at the services in the abbey-church which she founded at Dunfermline. The illuminations of the four Evangelists, one of which is here reproduced, are English work of the eleventh century, of a Byzantine type.
S. MARGARET'S CHAPEL, EDINBURGH CASTLE	357
Built by Margaret for her private chapel; here engraved from a photograph.
WEST DOOR OF ABERBROTHOCK ABBEY CHURCH	358
This abbey (near S. Andrews) was founded by William the Lion, King of Scots, in honour of S. Thomas of Canterbury. Its monks were of the order of Tiron. This doorway must be one of the earliest portions of the building, which was begun in 1178 and finished in 1233.
NEW, OR SWEETHEART ABBEY, KIRCUDBRIGHTSHIRE	360
A Cistercian house, founded in 1275 by Dervorgilla of Galloway, John Balliol's mother, from whom he derived his claim to the Scottish crown. Dervorgilla's husband, another John Balliol, had died in 1269, and she had caused his heart to be embalmed and placed in an ivory casket, which she carried about with her always, and ordered to be laid upon her own heart when she was buried (1290) in this church, thence called Sweetheart Abbey.
CAERLAVEROCK CASTLE (after J. M. W. Turner)	362
Caerlaverock is in Dumfriesshire; it stands on a peninsula in the Solway. It was rebuilt about 1400, but on the plan of the older castle as described in the contemporary poem on the Siege of Caerlaverock, 1300.
THE CORONATION-CHAIR, WESTMINSTER ABBEY (from a photograph)	364
STIRLING (after J. M. W. Turner)	365

	PAGE
SCOTTISH FOOT-SOLDIER, temp. EDWARD I.	366
From Chapter-house Liber A, Public Record Office.
FELLING A TREE (MS. Cott. Nero D. i.)	369
Probably drawn by Matthew Paris.
WINDMILL, A.D. 1338-44 (MS. Bodl. Misc. 264)	370
TRIAL BY BATTLE	372
From a fragment of an Assize Roll, undated, but belonging to the reign of Henry III., and preserved in the Public Record Office. The sketch represents a judicial combat between Walter Bloweberme and Hamo le Stare. Walter was an approver; i.e. a criminal who had confessed his crime, and been pardoned on condition of denouncing his accomplices and vanquishing them in combat. He denounced, amongst others, Hamo le Stare as having been concerned with him in a robbery at Winchester. Hamo denied the charge; a judicial combat took place; Hamo was defeated, and hanged accordingly.
SEAL OF EXETER, C. 1170 (Society of Antiquaries)	374
Interesting from its representation of the Guildhall.
HALL OF S. MARY'S GILD, LINCOLN (from a photograph)	375
This hall stands in the lower town of Lincoln, and is now vulgarly called John of Gaunt's Stables. The history of the gild to which it belonged is obscure, and there is no documentary evidence of it before 1250; the building however is undoubtedly of the twelfth century.
SEAL OF GILD MERCHANT, GLOUCESTER, C. 1200	376
The device on this seal is a conventional representation of one of the city gates. The engraving is lent by Mr. W. H. St. John Hope.
BAKERS, A.D. 1293	377
From the Assisa Panis , xxi. Ed. 1—xvi. Hen. VI., a folio volume belonging to the Corporation of London, written on parchment, and containing entries relating to the Assize of Bread by the civic authorities from 1293 to 1438. The sketch here reproduced shews a baker standing at his oven-door, and a fraudulent baker being drawn to the pillory with a short-weight loaf hung round his neck. The bakers were among the very first craftsmen to form themselves into gilds.
BAKERS AND COOKS, A.D. 1338-44 (MS. Bodl. Misc. 264)	378
The cooks were a separate craft, almost as important as the bakers. In this picture the first group are making bread, the second roasting fowls.
COOKING OUTSIDE A TAVERN, A.D. 1388-44 (MS. Bodl. Misc. 264)	378
To illustrate the hostellers' craft.
VINTNERS, A.D. 1338-44 (MS. Bodl. Misc. 264)	379
Treading grapes and filling wine-barrels; an illustration of the vintners' craft.
IRON-WORKERS, A.D. 1338-44 (MS. Bodl. Misc. 264)	379
This forge is exactly like those now used by the nail and chain-makers in the Black Country, whose work is still carried on under the rude conditions of primitive industry. The fire, under a stone canopy, is kept alive by bellows attached to a pulley fixed at the back of the chimney, and a boy mounted on the wooden framework of the pulley works the bellows with his foot. The "lorimers," iron and coppersmiths, were very early associated in a craft-gild.
ARMOURERS, 1338-44 (MS. Bodl. Misc. 264)	380
An illustration of one of the most important crafts of the Middle Ages. Three of the workmen seem to be making various pieces of armour; sundry tools lie on the table, and there is a curious double bellows.
WEIGHING AND LADING, A.D. 1338-44 (MS. Bodl. Misc. 264)	380
In the trading towns, especially in the sea-ports, the Porters and Measurers were employed by the community, and ropes supplied to them from the town-funds.
WINDLASS, EARLY FOURTEENTH CENTURY (MS. Roy. 10 E. iv.)	381
MONEY-BOX OF THE CORDWAINERS OF OXFORD (Archæological Journal)	382
A box, nine inches in height, of wood, seemingly elm, with five iron hoops, two locks, and a chain. Its date is unknown; it seems to have been disused in 1587. The Cordwainers' Gild began under Henry I.

	PAGE
ENTRANCE TO CHOIR OF OLD S. PAUL'S, LONDON	384
CHURCH OF S. FAITH UNDER S. PAUL'S	384
From engravings by W. Hollar, 1657. St. Paul's Cathedral was rebuilt 1087—1128, and restored after a fire in 1136; the eastern limb and the tower were again rebuilt 1220—1240; in 1255—1283 the fabric was lengthened eastward; a wooden spire crowned it in 1314. The round-arched work in the transept walls belongs to the first or second of these periods of building, the choir to the third, and the screen to the last. An old church of S. Faith, which stood at the east end of S. Paul's, was demolished in 1256 to make room for lengthening the choir of the cathedral; the crypt under the new buildings was made to serve as a parish church in its stead.
WEST FRONT OF OLD S. PAUL'S	385
A sketch in MS. Lambeth 1106, early fourteenth century.
OPENING OF THE TOMB OF EDWARD THE CONFESSOR	386
This scene, from MS. Camb. Univ. Libr. Ee. iii. 59, which shows the shrine as it was in 1245, represents the opening of Edward's tomb in 1102 by Abbot Gilbert of Westminster and Bishop Gundulf of Rochester, to see whether the story of the incorruption of the body was true. The king is meant for Henry I., but is probably another likeness of Henry III.
VENICE (frontispiece to MS. Bodl. Misc. 264, part iii.)	387
The official account in the Bodleian attributes this French History of Marco Polo's travels to an English scribe and a French artist, late in the fourteenth century. According to the high authority of Mr. R. Holmes, Librarian at Windsor Castle, MS. and illuminations are English work of the fifteenth century.
IRON SCREEN ON TOMB OF ELEANOR OF CASTILE IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY	387
From a photograph. This screen was wrought by an Englishman, Master Thomas of Leighton, in 1293. The price paid to him for it was twelve pounds, paid in three instalments.
BRIDGE OVER THE ESK AT DANBY, CLEVELAND	388
Built late in the fourteenth century by Neville, Lord Latimer, whose arms are carved on it. Now known as the Duck Bridge, from having been repaired in the last century by a man named Duck.
CARTS, A.D. 1338—44 (MS. Bodl. Misc. 264)	390, 391
SATIRE ON THE JEWS OF NORWICH, TEMP. HENRY III.	392
The clerk who engrossed the Jews' Roll 17 Henry III. (Public Record Office) has enlivened its margin with this sketch. Isaac of Norwich, a famous Jew of the time, is represented with a crown to symbolize his importance, and with three faces, to indicate the more than double-dealing with which his race were credited; a head with three faces was indeed the symbol employed to represent a usurer on the labels of the chests in the Exchequer. The chief of a group of demons bears the name of Dagon; a little imp with a forked tongue seems to be instigating a Jew to use a false balance; another demon is mocking at a Jew nicknamed Nolle-mokke, and at a Jewess called Avegay, whose figure is interesting as showing the dress of the Jewish women.
CHURCH IN LONDON FOR CONVERTED JEWS, A.D. 1233	392
A drawing by Matthew Paris, in his autograph Historia Anglorum, MS. Roy. 14 C. vii. (British Museum). In 1233 Henry built in London a home for converted Jews. They were to be maintained partly by the foundation, partly by their own labour, but without servile work; they lived by rule, and had a chaplain or master to direct them. This mastership was annexed to the office of Keeper of the Rolls in 1377, and the church of the "Domus Conversorum" was represented by the Rolls Chapel till its demolition in 1897.
AARON OF COLCHESTER	393
A caricature of a Jew of Colchester—"Aaron filius Diaboli"—from the Forest Roll, Essex, 5 Ed. I. (Public Record Office).
MUSICIANS AND AUDIENCE, A.D. 1338—44	396
This and the five following illustrations of music in the fourteenth century are from MS. Bodl. Misc. 264. The portative was a wind instrument with keyboard and bellows.

	PAGE
VIOL AND HARP, A.D. 1338—44	396
HORN-PLAYER, A.D. 1338—44	} 397
CITTERN-PLAYER, A.D. 1338—44
DRUMMER, A.D. 1338—44
BAGPIPER, A.D. 1338—44	398
DAVID PLAYING ON BELLS (MS. Roy. 2 B. vii.)	398
MORRIS-DANCE, A.D. 1338—44 (MS. Bodl. Misc. 264)	399
CHILDREN CATCHING BUTTERFLIES WITH THEIR HOODS, A.D. 1338—44 (MS. Bodl. Misc. 264)	399
LADY AND YOUTH PLAYING DRAUGHTS, EARLY FOURTEENTH CENTURY (MS. Roy. 2 B. vii.)	400
BED AND CRADLE, EARLY FOURTEENTH CENTURY (MS. Roy. 2 B. vii.)	402
CARVED CHEST IN CHEVINGTON CHURCH, SUFFOLK (Gage, "History of Suffolk")	403
Dates from the time of Edward II. or Edward III.
SEAL OF ROBERT BRUCE, KING OF SCOTS	405
From an impression, in the British Museum, of Robert's second Great Seal.
STIRLING CASTLE	407
From Slezer's "Theatrum Scotiae," 1693. The castle has been almost entirely rebuilt since Bruce's time, but the walls are on the old lines. Under the Stuarts it became a royal residence, and the interior buildings, palace, Parliament-House, &c., date from James III., IV., and V.
SIEGE OF CARLISLE BY THE SCOTS, 1315 (Archæological Journal)	409
A facsimile of the initial letter of a charter granted to Carlisle by Edward II. in 1316.
WEST DOOR OF ELGIN CATHEDRAL	411
This church, burnt down in 1270, was rebuilt early in the fourteenth century. It is by far the grandest and the most beautifully decorated of all the Scottish Cathedrals. Such a church, built in the very midst of the War of Independence, in a remote town, beyond the Grampians and 200 miles from the English border, is a speaking witness to the growth of a national civilization unaffected by English influence.
BERWICK-UPON-TWEED (after J. M. W. Turner)	413
CORONATION OF A KING	To face p. 414
A facsimile, greatly reduced, of an illumination in MS. Corpus Christi College Cambridge xx. It is English work of the early fourteenth century, and may represent either Edward II. or Edward III.
SCHOOL, A.D. 1338—44 (MS. Bodl. Misc. 264)	415
CHAPEL ON WAKEFIELD BRIDGE (Archæological Journal)	416
The chapels so often built on bridges seem to have served as resting-places for travellers as well as for purposes of devotion. That at Wakefield, one of the few still remaining, was built shortly before A.D. 1358, when Edward III. granted ten pounds a year for two chantry priests serving "the chapel of S. Mary, newly built on Wakefield Bridge." The bridge has been widened and the chapel restored, but without altering its architectural character.
WINCHESTER MARKET CROSS	417
Built under Edward III.
CONSTANTINOPLE (Loutrell Psalter)	418
Illustrates an English artist's idea of Constantinople c. 1340, and also a group dancing to tabor and pipe.
GEOFFREY CHAUCER	419
Painted shortly after Chaucer's death, by his friend and disciple Ocleve, in the margin of his book "De Regimine Principum" (MS. Harleian 4866, British Museum).

	PAGE
THE CANTERBURY PILGRIMS	420, 423, 424, 425, 426, 427, 428, 429
From the Ellesmere MS. of the "Canterbury Tales," early fourteenth century; here reproduced from Dr. Furnivall's edition, published by the Chaucer Society.
DRINKING-HORN AT QUEEN'S COLLEGE, OXFORD (Skelton, "Oxonia antiqua restaurata")	432
This horn was given to Queen's College by its foundress, Philippa of Hainault, wife of Edward III. It holds two quarts, and is a real horn, semi-transparent like tortoise-shell, ornamented with gold; the eagle on the lid is hollow.
SPINNING AND BLOWING FIRE, EARLY FOURTEENTH CENTURY (MS. Roy. 10 E. iv.)	433
Here the woman uses a spinning-wheel, instead of the older distaff.
BOAT WITH RUDDER, 1338-44 (MS. Bodl. Misc. 264)	433
An early example of a real rudder such as is now used, instead of the primitive contrivance figured in pp. 11, 115, 116, 127, 145, 147.
GOLD NOBLE OF EDWARD III.	434
A new coin, struck in 1344; the ship commemorates the victory at Sluys in 1340.
MEETING OF EDWARD III. AND PHILIP OF FRANCE, 1331	435
From MS. Roy. 20 C. vii. (British Museum), a French "Chronique de St. Denys," late fourteenth century.
SHOOTING AT BUTTS, c. 1340 (Loutrell Psalter)	438
SEA-FIGHT, EARLY FOURTEENTH CENTURY (MS. Roy. 10 E. iv.)	441
From a comment made in the Debate between the Heralds of England and France, 1458-61, it appears that the English victories at sea were gained in spite of great disadvantages involved in the English mode of naval warfare; for while the English ships, according to the French herald, were only armed with archers using the long-bow, who fought on the upper deck, where they were exposed to great danger from the enemy, the French cross-bowmen could shoot under cover from the fore-castle or stern-castle of their ships.
TILTING ON THE WATER, EARLY FOURTEENTH CENTURY (MS. Roy. 2 B. vii.)	441
ENGLISH SOLDIERS SCALING A FORTRESS IN GASCONY (MS. Roy. 14 D. iv.) .	442
This picture, from a copy of Froissart's "Chronicle," made in Flanders in the fifteenth century, illustrates the medieval practice of depicting scenes from the past in the costume of the present. The soldiers represent those of Edward III., but their accoutrement is that of the artist's own time; their salade helmets and articulated breast and back-plates belong to the fifteenth century, and are quite different from the armour of the Black Prince.
MAP OF FRANCE AT TREATY OF BRETAGNY	To face p. 444
THE HOUSE OF LORDS UNDER EDWARD I.	445
From an engraving in Pinkerton's "Iconographia Scotica" of a drawing formerly in the College of Arms, London. This drawing dates from the reign of Edward IV., and represents the House of Peers as it was then supposed to have sat in 1277, the only year of Edward I.'s reign when it was attended both by the King of Scots and by the Prince of Wales. The Archbishop of Canterbury sits on the right of Alexander of Scotland, the Archbishop of York on the left of Llewelyn of Wales; the clerk behind Alexander holds the deed of homage for the Scot king's English lands; the two clerks behind Llewelyn are probably papal envoys. The outer row of mitred figures on the left are nineteen mitred abbots; the inner row, and two figures just below the Archbishop of York, are eight bishops. Twenty lay peers sit on the right; the chancellor and judges on the woolsack in the middle. The meaning of the crowned figure just below Llewelyn is unknown.

	PAGE
BRASS OF SIR JOHN HARSYCK AND KATHERINE, HIS WIFE, A.D. 1384 (Boutell, "Monumental Brasses")	446
In Southacre Church, Norfolk. Shows the armour of a knight and the dress of a lady of the time.
BRASS OF ROBERT ATTELATHE, MAYOR OF LYNN	447
This figure is given to show the burgher in his robes of office. Robert Attelathe was Mayor of Lynn in 1374, and died in 1376. The brass on his tomb, formerly in S. Margaret's Church, Lynn, is here copied from W. Taylor's "Antiquities of Lynn."
CROZIER OF WILLIAM OF WYKEHAM (from a photograph)	449
Bequeathed by him to New College, Oxford (which he founded), and now in the chapel.
EFFIGY OF WILLIAM OF WYKEHAM, ON HIS TOMB (Britton, "Winchester Cathedral")	450
JOHN WYCLIF (portrait at Knole)	453
POPE AND CARDINALS (MS. Add. 23923, British Museum)	454
This illumination is of Italian workmanship; it forms the headpiece to a copy of the Decretals of Boniface VIII., who died in 1303. The Pope, however, is represented wearing the triple tiara, which was not yet in use in Boniface's time, and the MS. dates from about 1380.
RIDING TO A TOURNAMENT	} 457
A TOURNAMENT
These two scenes are from MS. Roy. 19 C. i. (British Museum) "Li Breviari d'Amors," written in the South of France in the fourteenth century. The first illustrates the description in the text, of the ladies in male apparel riding to the place of tourney; the second pictures the tournament itself; and the artist has added a significant comment in the figures of the demons blowing their trumpets to greet the ladies, and directing the blows of the knights.
TOMB OF ARCHBISHOP PECKHAM (Britton, "Canterbury Cathedral")	458
A fine example of English art, A.D. 1313.
HALL OF MAYFIELD PALACE, SUSSEX	459
Mayfield was a manor-house of the Archbishops of Canterbury, and the great hall was built by Archbishop Islip, c. 1350. It is here figured from a drawing made in 1783 by S. H. Grimm (MS. Add. Burrell 5671, British Museum); since then it has been restored and is now a Roman Catholic church. The back of the Archbishop's chair, of stone carved with a diaper pattern, still remains against the eastern wall.
GATEWAY OF THORNTON ABBEY, LINCOLNSHIRE	462
An early example of a brick building with stone dressings; built soon after 1382.
PREACHING IN THE OPEN AIR, 1338-44 (MS. Bodl. Misc. 264)	464
From pulpits such as this Wyclif's "poor preachers" must have addressed such groups as the one depicted here.
NEW COLLEGE, OXFORD, AND ITS HUNDRED CLERKS	467
From MS. New College, Oxford, cclxxxviii., a panegyric on William of Wykeham by Thomas Chandler, Warden of Winchester College 1450-3, of New College 1453-4, and Canon and Chancellor of Wells 1454-1481; presented by him to Thomas Bekynton, Bishop of Wells 1443-1465, who bequeathed it to New College, of which he too had been a member. The picture represents the College and a hundred of its most distinguished scholars, among whom are William of Wykeham, Archbishops Chichele and Waynflete of Canterbury and Cranley of Dublin, Bekynton, and Chandler himself.
THE KNIGHT OF THE WHEELBARROW, A.D. 1338-44 (MS. Bodl. Misc. 264)	469
Probably being brought home from the inn.

	PAGE
LADY HUNTING, A.D. 1338-44 (MS. Bodl. Misc. 264)	470
In the "Debate between the Heralds of England and France," written a hundred years later, the English herald boasts of his country's numerous parks, full of deer, "so that when the ladies go out to divert themselves, they draw their bows and kill these animals, which is a very exquisite pleasure." The French herald, however, maintains that the adventurous chase of the wild beasts in the forests of France is a far greater pleasure than this tame English sport.
GROUP ROUND THE HALL FIRE, A.D. 1338-44 (MS. Bodl. Misc. 264)	471
THE "GREAT BARN" OF THE LORD, AT LYPIATT, GLOUCESTERSHIRE (from a photograph)	472
Built temp. Edward II.
NINE ILLUSTRATIONS OF AGRICULTURE, C. 1340 (Loutrell Psalter)	473, 474, 475, 476
FEEDING CHICKENS, C. 1340 (Loutrell Psalter)	477
FEEDING SWINE, EARLY FOURTEENTH CENTURY (MS. Roy. 2 B. vii.)	478
KILLING PIGS, EARLY FOURTEENTH CENTURY (MS. Roy. 2 B. vii.)	478
WOMEN CATCHING RABBITS, EARLY FOURTEENTH CENTURY (MS. Roy. 2 B. vii.)	479
SNARING BIRDS, A.D. 1338-44	480
This and the four following are from MS. Bodl. Misc. 264 .
SHOEING A HORSE, A.D. 1338-44	481
SHOEING A SWAN; A MEDÆVAL JEST, A.D. 1338-44	481
GROUP IN THE MANOR HOUSE, A.D. 1338-44	483
STORING TREASURE IN A VAULT, A.D. 1338-44	484
The presence of a priest with a book and holy water possibly indicates the consecration of the wealth to a religious use.
"WHEN ADAM DELVED AND EVE SPAN"	485
This picture of Adam and Eve is from MS. Roy. 1 E. iv. (British Museum), a Pentateuch of English work, contemporary with John Ball. Eve is represented with a primitive distaff.
TOWN-WALL, CANTERBURY (from a photograph)	487
About 1375, Archbishop Sudbury, seeing the discontent of the commons of Kent, induced the citizens to share with him the cost of surrounding the cathedral and city with a strong wall with bastion towers, nominally to guard against French invasion, but in reality to protect the wealth of the burghers and the treasures of the Church against the impending attack of the peasantry. Before the work was completed the revolt broke out, with the result described in the text. The wisdom of the Archbishop's precaution was proved a hundred years later. By that time the fortifications were completed, and the consequence was that when during the last struggle of York and Lancaster in 1469-1470 Canterbury was threatened by "a captain named Quynt," a gift of 13s. 4d. sufficed to make him desist from all attempt to meddle with the city or its inhabitants.
QUERNS (Journal of Archaeological Association)	489
The first of these querns is of a primitive type; it is Romano-British, and was found in 1858 in a tumulus at Bredon, Leicestershire. The second figure represents the nether stone of a pot-quern, found in 1836 at West Coker, Somerset. It is 6 inches high, and 11½ inches across at base. The opening through which the meal escaped is shaped like a round-arched door with a fleur-de-lis above, a decoration which probably indicates that it is thirteenth century work.
HANDMILL, EARLY FOURTEENTH CENTURY (MS. Roy. 10 E. iv.)	489
An illustration of a quern in use.

	PAGE
SAMSON GRINDING AT THE MILL	490
A striking picture of forced labour in the fourteenth century, from MS. Roy. 2 B. vii.
SEAL OF THE CITY OF CANTERBURY, FOURTEENTH CENTURY (Collection of Society of Antiquaries)	492
A conventional representation of one of the city gates, which were in process of construction (see above, p. xxvii) about the time when this seal was made.
WAYFARERS, EARLY FOURTEENTH CENTURY (MS. Roy. 2 B. vii.)	493
BEAR-BAITING, c. 1340 (Loutrell Psalter)	494
GAMBLERS BY THE WAY-SIDE, EARLY FOURTEENTH CENTURY (MS. Roy. 2 B. vii.)	495
COCK-FIGHTING, A.D. 1338-44	495
This and the five following are from MS. Bodl. Misc. 264.
TUMBLING, A.D. 1338-44	496
JUGGLERS, A.D. 1338-44	496
DANCING, A.D. 1338-44	497
CARRYING BABIES IN DOUBLE PANNIER, A.D. 1338-44	498
MAN AND WOMAN SAWING, A.D. 1338-44	498
CARDING AND SPINNING, c. 1340 (Loutrell Psalter)	499
REAPERS, FOURTEENTH CENTURY (MS. Roy. 2 B. vii.)	499
Interesting for the "harvestman," the officer charged with the superintendence of the lord's harvest, standing over the reapers with his rod, as described in medieval customals.
REAPERS WITH SCYTHE AND REAPING-HOOK, A.D. 1338-44 (MS. Bodl. Misc. 264)	500
RUTH AND BOAZ	501
A picture of reapers and gleaner in the early fifteenth century, from a Psalter, MS. Harleian 1892 (British Museum).
DAVID AND HIS CHOIR (MS. Harl. 1892)	503
A remarkable group of musicians. David is playing the bells; the other instruments are a triangle, sackbut, psaltery, and harp. At the date of this MS., early fifteenth century, the sackbut was just coming into use. The psaltery, held on the knees, was now superseding an earlier stringed instrument called the rote (a descendant of the lyre), which is shown in pp. 64 and 72, and which developed later into the Welsh crwth. The harp seems to have been considered in earlier times a specially English instrument; in a German MS. of the ninth century it is called cithara anglica .
RICHARD II. AND HIS PATRON SAINTS	506
From the Arundel Society's reproduction of a painting in tempera, belonging to the Earl of Pembroke; done by an Italian artist, probably soon after Richard's accession. It is a diptych, of which the left-hand portion is here reproduced. The King is accompanied by his patron saints, S. John the Baptist, S. Edward the Confessor, and S. Edmund the Martyr. He is paying his devotions to the Virgin and Child, who are shown, surrounded by angels, in the other half of the diptych.
RICHARD II. CONSULTING WITH HIS FRIENDS IN CONWAY CASTLE	509
From the original MS. (Harleian 1319, British Museum) of one of the authorities named at the head of this section (see p. 493), a metrical history of the close of Richard II.'s reign by a Frenchman, Créton, who was with the King throughout his second expedition to Ireland and his wanderings in Wales. Richard is here painted in his disguise as a Minorite.
THE DUKES OF EXETER AND SURREY RIDING FROM CONWAY TO CHESTER (MS. Harl. 1319)	510
The two dukes were sent by Richard to negotiate with Henry of Lancaster. The picture illustrates the mode of travelling at that time.

	PAGE
HENRY OF LANCASTER LEADING RICHARD II. INTO LONDON (MS. Harl. 1319)	511
PARLIAMENT DEPOSING RICHARD AND ELECTING HENRY (MS. Harl. 1319)	512
Henry, wearing a high cap, stands on the left of the vacant throne, first among the nobles; the prelates are on the opposite side; the two nobles standing in the middle appear to be the Earls of Northumberland and Westmoreland.
KING AND JESTER, EARLY FIFTEENTH CENTURY (MS. Harl. 1892)	513
The King, if meant for a portrait, can only be Henry IV.
A ROYAL BANQUET, EARLY FIFTEENTH CENTURY (MS. Harl. 1892)	515
Probably Henry IV. again. The scene is interesting for the boys playing on fifes, and the servants at the side-table.
HENRY V. (from a picture at Queen's College, Oxford)	517
RECEPTION OF THE EARL OF WARWICK AS CAPTAIN OF CALAIS, temp. HENRY V.	519
From MS. Cotton Julius E. iv. art. 6 (British Museum), a Life of Richard Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick (who died 1439), written and illustrated by John Rous, who died in 1491.
HELMET, SHIELD, AND SADDLE OF HENRY V.	521
Now placed above his tomb, at Westminster; here reproduced from Gough's "Sepulchral Monuments."
SIEGE OF ROUEN, A.D. 1418 (MS. Cott. Jul. E. iv. art. 6)	523
A BELEAGUERED CITY, EARLY FIFTEENTH CENTURY (MS. Harl. 1892)	524
THE MINSTRELS' GILD OF NORTHERN ENGLAND (Carter, "Ancient Painting")	527
Sculptured on a pillar in S. Mary's, Beverley, a church which was built under Henry VI. The inscription, "Thys pyllor made the Mynstrels," shows it to have been the work of the Gild of Minstrels which had its head-quarters at Beverley, and which included minstrels from the Trent to the Tweed. The man with a sword is probably the alderman of the gild; he plays the flute or hautboy. The other instruments are the cittern, bass flute, crowth or fiddle, and tabor and pipe.
SEAL OF SHREWSBURY, A.D. 1425 (Collection of Society of Antiquaries)	528
A good example of one of the characteristic types of town seals. It represents the town itself, within its walls above the river.
HENRY VI. AT THE SHRINE OF S. EDMUND, 1433	530
From Lydgate's "Life of S. Edmund," MS. Harleian 2278 (British Museum). Henry spent Christmas 1433 at S. Edmund's; Lydgate's beautiful MS. was probably written and presented to the King on that occasion.
HUMPHRY, DUKE OF GLOUCESTER, AND ELEANOR, HIS WIFE	531
From MS. Cotton Nero D. vii. (British Museum), a Book of the Benefactors of S. Albans Abbey, compiled there c. 1460. Humphry and his second wife, Eleanor Cobham, are represented joining the fraternity of S. Albans, in 1431.
GROUP WITH JESTER, EARLY FIFTEENTH CENTURY (MS. Harl. 1892)	532
Evidently a satire on the scandals of the time.
TALBOT, EARL OF SHREWSBURY, PRESENTING A BOOK TO MARGARET OF ANJOU AND HENRY VI.	533
From MS. Roy. 15 E. vi. (British Museum), a splendidly illuminated copy of the "Fais d'Alisandre," made in England for Talbot, as a present to Queen Margaret, probably soon after her marriage, in 1445.
CASTLE OF FALAISE	535
The square keep dates from the twelfth century, the time of the first union of England and Normandy. The round tower, still known as "Tour Talbot," was added by Talbot when commandant of the castle, 1417-50, and thus represents the last struggle of the English kings for dominion in France.
JOHN, DUKE OF BEDFORD, KNEELING BEFORE S. GEORGE	536
This picture and the next are from the "Bedford Missal" (MS. Add. 18850, British Museum), written and illuminated for the Duke of Bedford in France c. 1430. The face of the Duke is evidently a portrait.

	PAGE
ANNE OF BURGUNDY, DUCHESS OF BEDFORD, KNEELING BEFORE S. ANNE, THE VIRGIN AND CHILD	537
JOAN OF ARC BEFORE THE DAUPHIN AT CHINON	539
From MS. Roy. 20 D. viii. (British Museum), the Chronicle of Monstrelet, by a Flemish hand, late fifteenth century.
SUBMISSION OF BORDEAUX TO THE FRENCH, A.D. 1453	544
From MS. Roy. 20 C. ix. (British Museum), a French "Chronique de Charles VII.," written at the end of the fifteenth century.
A LADY'S BEDROOM, MIDDLE FIFTEENTH CENTURY (MS. Harl. 2278)	547
Illustrates the luxury of the time.
RICHARD, DUKE OF YORK	548
The statue here reproduced from Owen and Blakeway's "History of Shrewsbury" was erected, shortly after the Duke's death (1460), over the western gate of the Welsh Bridge at Shrewsbury. It now stands at the end of the Market-house, whither it was removed when the gate was taken down. The people of Shrewsbury, either to disguise the fact that they had done honour to the Duke of York, or misinterpreting some popular tradition, used to tell that this figure was the work and the image of Llewelyn the Great, who had built the bridge and set up his monument on it; and that Edward I., "beinge a deadlie, guilefull and cruell mortheringe enemye of the Brittaines nobles and princes," to deface the monument had caused the arms of England to be engraved upon it; "but because of the nose of Llewelyn which was flatt, they could not alter the picture, but the picture of the flatt nose still remayneth."
KING, QUEEN AND COURT, MIDDLE FIFTEENTH CENTURY (MS. Harl. 2278) .	549
Probably represents Henry VI. and Margaret.
MAP OF THE WARS OF THE ROSES	550
To face p.
AVARICE REPRESENTED BY A RICH ENGLISH TRADER OF THE FIFTEENTH CENTURY COUNTING HIS HOARD OF GOLD	551
From MS. Bodleian 283, the "Mirroure of the World," an English transla- tion of a French work by Laurentius Gallus, on Virtues and Vices.
CASTLE-GATE, SHREWSBURY (Owen and Blakeway's "History of Shrewsbury") .	552
Shrewsbury was one of the towns whose burghers sympathized with the Duke of York. This view, taken before modern changes had been made, preserves the old street of a border town where traders gathered under the shelter of the Castle, and shows the open front of the early shop where the townspeople displayed their goods on a ledge or shutter.
PERCY'S CROSS, HEDGELEY MOOR, NEAR WOOLLER, NORTHUMBERLAND . . .	555
This cross, or rather pillar, was built in memory of Sir Ralph Percy, who fell on the spot fighting for Henry VI. against Lord Montagu, three weeks before the battle of Hexham.
WARWICK THE KING-MAKER	556
From a Roll of the Earls of Warwick (now in the collection of the Duke of Manchester) by John Rous, who died 1491.
ROSE-NOBLE OF EDWARD IV., 1465	557
So called from the rose stamped on both sides. The white rose was the badge of the House of York; the sun was Edward's personal badge, which he is said to have adopted in memory of the appearance of three suns in the sky before his victory at Mortimer's Cross, 1460. The rose-noble was also called royal, or ryal, a name borrowed from the French. Its value was ten shillings.
ANGEL OF EDWARD IV.	55 ^t
The angel was a new gold coin, introduced by Edward IV. about 1461. Its value was that of the old noble, six and eightpence.
WOOD CARVING, BRAMHALL, CHESHIRE, FIFTEENTH CENTURY	56 ^c
Bramhall House is one of the finest examples of an English timbered mansion. Its ground floor, and the banqueting-hall above, date from the fifteenth century. On the north side of the banqueting-hall projects an oriel window, resting on the bracket here figured. The arms on the shield are those of the Davenports, to whom Bramhall belongs. This engraving, and those in pp. 794, 1321 and 1508, are kindly lent by Mr. Earwaker from his "East Cheshire."

	PAGE
COURT OF KING'S BENCH, temp. HENRY VI. Frontispiece to Vol. II.
One of four illuminations, representing the Courts of Chancery, King's Bench, Common Pleas, and Exchequer, which seemed to have belonged to a law-treatise of Henry VI.'s time. They are now at Whaddon Hall, Bucks; the picture here given is copied from a reproduction in "Archæologia." The five figures in red are the judges; the shields over their heads bear (1) the traditional arms of Edward the Confessor; (2) England and France quarterly; (3) England. Below them sit, as now, the King's Coroner and Attorney, and the Masters of the Court; all wearing parti-coloured robes of rayed blue and mustard-colour, or of murrey and rayed green. On the table stand two ushers, one clad in murrey and rayed green, the other in mustard-colour and rayed blue; this last is administering the oath on the Book to one of a group of jurymen. At the bar stands a prisoner in fetters, in custody of the marshal or a tipstaff; the figures on each side of these two are serjeants in robes of green and rayed blue, and wearing coifs. Below are six prisoners chained together by the ankles, and guarded by two tipstoffs or gaolers, one of whom, on left, looks in his blue coat very like a modern policeman.
WALTER CONEY, MERCHANT OF LYNN, 1440—1479	562
A brass formerly in S. Margaret's Church, Lynn; here reproduced from Taylor's "History of Lynn."
HOUSE OF WALTER CONEY AT LYNN	563
From Mackerell's "History of Lynn." The house has now been demolished.
EFFIGY OF BISHOP GOLDWELL (Britton, "Norwich Cathedral")	565
Goldwell died in 1499. The remarkably beautiful and elaborate ornamentation of the vestments which he is represented as wearing makes his effigy a good illustration of the wealth of the higher clergy in the 15th century.
GREAT SNORING RECTORY HOUSE, NORFOLK (from a photograph)	566
A rectory-house of the late 15th century, built of brick and terra-cotta.
THE NEW INN, GLOUCESTER	567
Built by Abbot Seabroke, 1450-57, for pilgrims to the tomb of Edward II. in Gloucester Abbey church. The architect was a monk, John Twining. The building, still used as an inn, was of chestnut-wood, filled in with lath and plaster. The view here given from Britton's "English Cities" shows the old building as it was before modern restoration.
ALMSBOX, BROWNE'S HOSPITAL, STAMFORD (Archæological Journal)	570
Browne's Hospital (or almshouse) was founded about 1490; the box seems to be of the same date. It is of maple-wood, eight inches high, with bands, lock, and double hasp of iron. The money was dropped in through a slit in a depression on the top. An iron link attached to one side probably fastened the box to a wall.
HAND-BELL OF CORPORATION OF DOVER (Journal of Archæological Association)	570
Of gilt brass; one side is adorned with a representation of the Angelic Salutation, the other with an amphora from which spring three lilies, the emblem of the Virgin. Round the base is the legend "Petrus Greineus me fecit, 1491."
LYDGATE IN HIS STUDY (MS. Harl. 2278)	571
LYDGATE PRESENTING HIS LIFE OF ST. EDMUND TO HENRY VI (MS. Harl. 2278)	572
ALCHEMISTS, 15TH CENTURY	573
From a treatise on Alchemy, MS. Add. 10,302 (British Museum).
INITIAL LETTER OF MS., CORPUS CHRISTI COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE, CLV.	574
This 15th Century MS. of one of St. Anselm's works illustrates the character of writing just before printing was introduced.
CAXTON'S ADVERTISEMENT	576
Facsimile of an original in the Bodleian Library.
THE FOX AND THE GRAPES (Caxton's "Æsop")	577
A SMITH (Caxton's "Game of Chess")	578
A TOLL-GATHERER (Caxton's "Game of Chess")	579

	PAGE
ÆSOP SURROUNDED BY THE CREATURES OF HIS FABLES (Caxton's "Æsop")	580
EARL RIVERS PRESENTING HIS "SAYINGS OF THE PHILOSOPHERS" TO EDWARD IV.	582
Frontispiece to MS. Lambeth 265, doubtless the very copy thus presented. The portraits of the king and the earl are therefore authentic; and the little figure by the king's side is the only known contemporary portrait of his son, afterwards Edward V.
ST. JEROME READING	583
From MS. Harleian 2982, a Book of Hours, English work, but French style, late 15th century. St. Jerome, identified by the lion-cub jumping on his knee, is here painted as a cardinal. One of the best of many pictures, contained in this MS., of appliances for study in the 15th century.
THE ADORATION OF THE MAGI	586
Painted on the chancel-screen in Plymtree Church, Devon; here reproduced from the Rev. T. Mozley's "Henry VII., Prince Arthur and Cardinal Morton." The screen dates from about 1500; it has been conjectured that the foremost of the Magi, depicted as an old man, is a portrait of Morton, that the second, a youth carrying a vessel made in the form of Morton's rebus, a tun with M on it, is the king's eldest son Arthur, and that the third, who alone of the three wears a crown, is Henry VII. himself. No other representation of Cardinal Morton is known.
HENRY VII. (Picture in National Portrait Gallery)	588
TRIAL OF WEIGHTS AND MEASURES AT THE EXCHEQUER, A.D. 1497	590
From a reproduction in "Vetusta Monumenta," 1747, of "the original Table formerly in the Treasury of the King's Exchequer," and then in the Harleian Library, but now lost.
A FORESTALLER IN THE PILLORY, 1497	591
From the Trial of Weights and Measures ("Vetusta Monumenta"). Shows the result of the trial.
HENRY VII. GIVING TO ABBOT ISLIP THE INDENTURES FOR THE FOUNDATION OF THE KING'S CHAPEL IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY, 16 July, 1504	592
The initial letter of the Indenture-book itself, MS. Harleian 1498 (British Museum).
SOVEREIGN OF HENRY VII.	593
The first sovereigns, or twenty-shilling pieces, were coined in 1489. Till then the coin of highest value had been the royal or rose-noble (ten shillings).
SEBASTIAN CABOT	594
From an engraving of a picture, now destroyed, which was at Whitehall in the time of James I.
TITLE-PAGE OF "KALENDARIVM" OF JOANNES REGIOMONTANUS, 1476	595
Title-pages were introduced in 1470; until then the printers merely put a colophon at the end of the book. The first English title-page was that of a tract on the Pestilence, printed by W. Machlinia, shortly before 1490. The specimen of Venetian printing here reproduced is the earliest known instance of an ornamental title-page, and the earliest known title-page bearing title of book, date, place of imprint, and name of printer. In the original the initial A and the printers' names are in red.
JOHN COLET	597
From an engraving in H. Holland's "Heroologia," 1620.
GLASS PAINTING REPRESENTING BECKET'S SHRINE IN CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL	598
From an engraving in Dean Stanley's "Memorials of Canterbury." The painting is in a window, of 13th century work, in Trinity Chapel; it is one of a group of medallions representing a vision seen by Abbot Benedict of Peterborough, who is portrayed lying on a couch, while the martyr, clad in full pontificals, appears to him issuing from his shrine. The shrine itself is figured not as the original one existing at the time of the vision, but as that which was erected shortly after, which stood facing this very window until 1540, and of which no other authentic picture now remains. It stood upon a stone or marble platform resting on arches supported by six pillars ; in the open spaces between the pillars sick persons would place themselves to obtain a cure by proximity to the relics of the saint. The shrine itself was of wood, covered with plates of gold, and adorned with raised bands or ribs, interspersed with quatrefoils and semi-circles ; in these were set the most valuable of the gems offered by pilgrims. The intermediate surfaces were covered with a trellis-work of gold wire, to which lesser jewels were attached. The body lay inside the shrine and could be exposed to view by opening a door at the end, through which the saint is seen emerging in the picture.

	PAGE
DESIDERIUS ERASMUS (after Albert Dürer)	600
PRINTING-PRESS, 1511	601
The earliest known representation of a printing press, from the title-page of Hegesippus, "Historia de Bello Judaico," printed by Jodocus Badius Ascensius, Paris, 1511.
ARCHBISHOP WARHAM (picture by Holbein, at Lambeth Palace)	603
CORONATION OF HENRY VIII.	604
Initial letter of the Islip Roll, a MS. representing the funeral of Islip, Abbot of Westminster, A.D. 1532 ; now in the collection of the Society of Antiquaries. The reproductions here given from this Roll are copied from those in "Vetusta Monumenta."
OLD GRAMMAR SCHOOL, TAUNTON	606
Built by Bishop Fox of Winchester, who was lord of the manor, temp. Henry VIII., and endowed by William Walbec, whose will was proved in the reign of Mary. The school buildings are now used as municipal offices, and have been considerably altered. The view here given is reproduced by permission of the Somerset Archæological Society, from a drawing in the Pigott collection, made before the alterations took place.
TITLE-PAGE OF LUCIAN περὶ διψάδων , 1521	607
Printed by John Sibercht, Cambridge; an early specimen of printing at Cambridge, and of printing in Greek characters in England.
SALT-CELLAR AT CORPUS CHRISTI COLLEGE, OXFORD (Skelton, "Oxonia antiqua restaurata")	608
Of silver gilt, relieved with purple enamel, part of which is now worn off. A curious transparent stone is set in the centre of the crown of leaves at the top, and pearls hang from the ends of the large drooping leaves, from the open-work beneath, and from the beaks of the pelicans. The pelican was the armorial bearing of Bishop Fox, and his initials are among the decorations of the vessel ; it was doubtless given by him to the College, which he founded.
CHRIST CHURCH (CARDINAL) COLLEGE, OXFORD	609
Facsimile of a drawing (now in the Bodleian Library) by Neele, an Oxford artist, 1566. Except a small view in the background of Holbein's portrait of Wolsey (in the hall at Christ Church), this is the earliest extant representation of the college as it was left by Wolsey and Henry. It shows the Great Quadrangle before the tower above the west gate was built, and before the tower at the south-west corner was pulled down. This last was built by Wolsey ; the exact time of its demolition is unknown. Henry VIII., when he completed the college after Wolsey's fall, changed its name to Christ Church.
THE "HARRY GRACE-A-DIEU"	612
In August 1512 the finest ship which England then possessed, the Regent or Sovereign of England, 1,000 tons, with 700 men on board, was burnt in a fight with the French fleet off the coast of Brittany. Henry VIII. determined to have in its stead a yet finer ship, and the "Harry Grâce-à-Dieu" was built in consequence. It was of 1000 tons, and carried 349 soldiers, 301 mariners, and 50 gunners, and was so splendid that it was said "the like had never been seen in England." This drawing is from "A Declaration of the Royal Navy of England," written and illuminated by Anthony Anthony, an officer of the Ordnance, for Henry VIII. in 1546, and now among the Pepys MSS. at Magdalene College, Cambridge. It is here copied from a reproduction in "Archæologia."

	PAGE
ARTILLERY IN ACTION, TEMP. HENRY VIII.	613
From an English MS. treatise on Artillery, MS. Cotton Vespasian A. xvii. (British Museum).
CHICHESTER MARKET-CROSS (Vetusta Monumenta)	614
Built A.D. 1500; here shown as it was in 1715.
FRIAR'S STREET, WORCESTER	615
These houses were built not later than Elizabeth's reign, probably earlier. This view is taken from Britton's "English Cities," published in 1830; the street has been altered since.
HIGH STREET, SHREWSBURY	617
From Owen and Blakeway's "History of Shrewsbury"; showing the aspect of the street in the 15th or 16th century, before modern changes.
ELVET BRIDGE, DURHAM (Britton, "English Cities")	619
First built by Bishop Hugh of Puiset, c. 1170; rebuilt by Bishop Fox (afterwards Bishop of Winchester) c. 1500. The houses upon it, also of Tudor date, were demolished soon after Britton's view was taken.
SIR THOMAS MORE (Picture of More Family, by Holbein)	621
RICHMOND PALACE	623
From an engraving in Nichols's "Progresses of Queen Elizabeth" of an old drawing belonging to the Earl of Cardigan. Richmond Palace, now destroyed, was built by Henry VII., and seems to have been a fine example of the striking outline given to the palaces of the Renaissance by the grouping of pinnacles and towers.
RURAL SCENE, A.D. 1496	626
From MS. Roy. 19 C. viii. (British Museum), a moral treatise entitled "L'Imaginacyon de vraye Noblesse," written and illuminated at Shene by a Flemish scribe named Poulet, in 1496. The chapter to which this illumina- tion forms the frontispiece treats of "How Imagination by example and comparisons teaches princes and their knights the foresight and wisdom which they ought to have, to execute and do what Reason and Justice bid them," and the picture is partly allegorical, though the cart and its driver, and the group shooting at the butts, are drawn directly from the life of the time.
RURAL DANCE	627
From an illumination in the treaty between Henry VIII. and Francis I., 1527 (Chapter House Treaties, August 1527, Public Record Office).
HORN AND BELT OF THE WAKEMAN OF RIPON (Archaeological Journal)	628
From 1400 to 1616 the chief officer of the town of Ripon bore the title of Wakeman. His badge of office was a horn and belt, which he wore on five days in the year—Candlemas, Easter Monday, Wednesday in Rogation week, Sunday after Lammas, and St. Stephen's day—thence called horning-days. It is now worn by the serjeant-at-mace, when he walks before the mayor on cere- monial occasions. Horn and Wakeman probably originated in a much earlier time, when the wakeman's first duty was to guard the town (which had no walls) from sudden attack, and the horn was the instrument by which warning of such attack was given to the townsfolk. A trace of this early state of things seems to lurk in a bye-law of the town in Elizabeth's time, enacting that "the Wakeman for the tyme beinge accordinge to auncient custome shall cause a Horne to be blowne by nighte during the Tyme he is in office at nyne of the clocke in the Eveninge at the foure corners of the Crosse in the market-shead, and immediately after to begin his Watche, and to keepe and continue the same till three or foure of the clocke in the Morninge;" i.e. the horn-blowing gave notice of the setting of the watch, and any robbery or breach of the peace committed during the hours of the watch the Wakeman was bound to make good, he being directly responsible for the efficiency of the watch. The present horn itself is probably the original one; it is 30 in. long, and is now covered with purple velvet and adorned with five silver bands; the two at the larger end are modern (1702), the others date from the 16th century, or earlier. The belt from which it hangs is of purple velvet, lined with silk, and adorned with thirty-eight badges of Wakemen and Mayors of Ripon. The earliest of these dates from 1517. Horn and belt are connected by two short bands of velvet, also adorned with badges, dating c. 1515-1589, and by a silver chain from which hang a cross-bow, and a spur with a sharp rowel of Ripon steel.

	PAGE
MARTIN LUTHER PREACHING	631
From MS. Add. 4727 (British Museum), containing Luther's prayers (Latin), written in beautiful square characters, like early Italian printing. The illumination is beautifully coloured; the initials G. G. in the corner are supposed to represent a German artist, George Glockenthon.
CARDINAL WOLSEY (picture in the National Portrait Gallery)	634
HAMPTON COURT PALACE; INTERIOR OF HALL	636
From "Views of Hampton Court Palace," 1800. This hall was built by Henry VIII. in 1536-7, as appears by the monogram of Jane Seymour alternating with his own in the decorations.
HOLBEIN'S GATE, WHITEHALL (Vetusta Monumenta)	637
The gate built between Westminster and Whitehall, when Whitehall became the king's property. It is said to have been designed by Holbein, and was of squared and polished flint, with stone ornaments inserted. It was pulled down in 1750.
CHARLES V. (picture by Titian)	639
VIEW OF LONDON, TEMP. HENRY VII. to face p.	640
From MS. Roy. 16 F. ii. (British Museum), the Poems of Charles of Orleans written by a Flemish scribe, in England, under Henry VII. This picture shows admirably the pointed spires of the Tower; of these very few representations exist, as by 1543 they had been replaced by cupolas (see illustration in p. 688). The spires are characteristic of continental castles, but are rare in England, except in modern imitations, such as Balmoral.
"JACK OF NEWBURY" THE YOUNGER (Dent, "Annals of Winchcombe and Sudeley")	642
Son of John Smallwood, called Winchcombe from his birthplace, and "Jack of Newbury" from the place where he made his fortune and his reputation as "the most considerable clothier England ever beheld." He led to Flodden Field a hundred men "as well armed, and better clothed than any," all at his own cost. He once entertained Henry VIII. and Catharine of Aragon in his house at Newbury, and presented to the king a gilt bee-hive, filled with golden bees, and decorated with ornaments emblematic of the wealth and industry of the clothiers. On this occasion Henry offered him knighthood, but he declined. He died in 1520. This portrait, from a picture by Holbein, at Sudeley Castle, represents his eldest son, John, who received a grant of arms in 1549.
OLD HOUSE IN CLEVELAND, YORKSHIRE	643
The Cleveland dales still contain examples of what was, throughout the Middle Ages and down to the middle of the 17th century, the common type of rural dwellings throughout England. The house here figured from Dr. Atkinson's "Forty Years in a Moorland Parish" is dated 1660; this, however, only marks the period when the side-walls were added to enclose a building of earlier date and of absolutely primitive character—the original hut which consisted simply of a steep-pitched roof planted directly on the ground, and whose form, bearing a rude likeness to that of the old Irish cell represented in p. 49, can still be traced in the wooden frame which supported its sloping sides. The structure of these buildings proves that down to the middle of the 17th century, at least in Cleveland, the majority of houses had neither fire-place nor chimney, but only a hearth, with a lateral escape for the smoke through holes or windows.
ALLEGORICAL REPRESENTATION OF THE BETROTHAL OF MARY TUDOR WITH A SON OF THE DUKE OF ORLEANS (Chapter House Treaty, August 1527)	645
ALLIANCE OF HENRY VIII. AND FRANCIS I. (Chapter House Treaty, August 1527)	645
This picture is also symbolical, as no personal meeting of the kings took place.
SEAL, MADE BY BENVENUTO CELLINI, FOR THE TREATY BETWEEN HENRY VIII. AND FRANCIS I., 1527	646
A large, solid gold seal, still attached to the treaty, in the Public Record Office. The obverse, here figured, bears the image and superscription of Francis; the reverse bears the royal arms of France.

	PAGE
CLOCK GIVEN BY HENRY VIII. TO ANNE BOLEYN (Archæologia)	648
Now at Windsor Castle. The clock is of silver-gilt, and was a wedding-present from Henry to Anne.
HENRY VIII, A.D. 1530	651
From one of Wolsey's patents, among the "Chapter-house" documents in the Public Record Office.
TRAITORS' GATE, TOWER OF LONDON	653
A private entrance by water from the Thames, under a tower known as S. Thomas's Tower; great prisoners of state were usually conveyed by this way. The view here given is from a water-colour sketch by C. Tomkins, in the Crowle collection (British Museum).
THE STADHUYTS, MIDDELBURG (from an engraving by N. Vischer after P. H. Schut)	655
THOMAS CROMWELL (Holland, "Heroologia")	656
THE MORE FAMILY	658
A miniature, in the collection of Major-General F. E. Sotheby; painted by an artist unknown, late in the sixteenth or early in the seventeenth century, for Thomas More, grandson of the Chancellor. The left-hand portion is a slightly varied copy of the family group by Holbein (whence is derived the portrait of Sir Thomas in p. 621), and is thus an authentic representation of Sir John More (father of Sir Thomas) in his judge's robes, of Sir Thomas himself, his three daughters, his only son John, and John's wife, Anne Cresacre (who stands behind her father-in-law). To this group the painter of the miniature, in defiance of dates, has added a second, consisting of John More's son Thomas, his wife Mary Scrope, and two of their sons. The difference in costume between the two groups is noticeable; and the right-hand portion of the picture, despite its chronological incongruity, is interesting on account of the view in the background, of More's garden at Chelsea, with London in the distance.
COURTIERS DANCING	660
From an oil painting of the middle of the sixteenth century in the collection of Major-General F. E. Sotheby.
HENRY VIII. READING	663
From MS. Roy. 2 A. xvi. (British Museum), a Psalter written and illuminated for Henry's own use by "John Mallard, the King's spokesman, who also holdeth the pen."
THOMAS CRANMER, ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY (Picture in the National Portrait Gallery)	665
HENRY VIII. (Picture by Holbein at Berkeley Castle) to face p.	666
THE DOMUS CONVERSORUM, FOUNTAINS ABBEY	668
Fountains Abbey, founded in 1132, was the third Cistercian house in England. The general arrangements of a mediæval monastery, and the peculiar features which distinguished the houses of the Order of Cîteaux, are strikingly illustrated in its ruins. Monastic buildings, of whatever Order, were usually grouped round a quadrangular cloister, the church being on the north side, the chapter-house on the east, and the refectory on the south. The Benedictines lived during the day chiefly in the large covered walks of their cloister, and occupied at night a dormitory built over its western side. The Cistercian cloister was comparatively small and unimportant; while outside its western walk, and often far beyond it, there ran a long building of two stories, called the Domus Conversorum. This was the abode of the lay-brethren who formed by far the most numerous, and in some respects the most important, part of a Cistercian community, since it was they who performed all its manual labour. The Domus Conversorum of Fountains, built towards the close of the twelfth century, is the largest known; it is nearly 300 feet long and 44 wide. The ground floor consisted of a vaulted room (here reproduced from a photograph) where the brethren lived and worked during the day ; above this was their dormitory, containing forty cells. Both stories had a communication with the church at their northern end. The choir-monks occupied a smaller building, on a similar plan, projecting from the south-eastern angle of the cloister, parallel with the southernmost part of the Domus Conversorum.

	PAGE
COLCHESTER ABBEY CHURCH	669
From a Chronicle of Colchester Abbey, written just before its dissolution (MS. Cotton Nero D. viii., British Museum).
FUNERAL OF ABBOT ISLIP OF WESTMINSTER, A. D. 1542 (Islip Roll)	670
An illustration of, probably, the last great ecclesiastical function connected with the monastic life of Westminster, that ever took place within its walls.
BLACK FRIARS' PULPIT, HEREFORD	672
This pulpit, or "preaching cross," built in the time of Edward III., stands in the middle of what was once the cloister-garth of a Dominican Priory, and is now the garden of an almshouse known as Coningsby Hospital. Only one other pulpit in the same open position exists, at Iron Acton in Gloucestershire. Those at Shrewsbury Abbey and at Magdalen College, Oxford, are built against side walls.
TITLE-PAGE OF THE "GREAT BIBLE," 1539	674
SEAL OF WALSLINGHAM PRIORY	679
This seal (which dates from the twelfth or thirteenth century) is here copied from the impression attached to the convent's acknowledgment of the Royal Supremacy, September, 1534 (Public Record Office). The legend on the reverse, surrounding the Virgin and Child, consists of the first part of the angelic salutation, 'Ave Maria, gracia plena, Dominus tecum' ('Hail, Mary, full of grace, the Lord is with thee'). Familiar as the words must have been to the medieval engraver who made the original seal, he has oddly mis-spelt one of them ; the word which should be plena is very distinctly pleda .
THE CHARTER-HOUSE, LONDON	680
The Charter-house was granted in 1545 to Sir Edward North (who became Lord North in 1554). His son sold it in 1565 to the Duke of Norfolk. Forfeited by Norfolk's attainder in 1571, it was restored to his son, whom James I. created Earl of Suffolk, and who sold it to Thomas Sutton, a Lincolnshire gentleman who had been in the household of the Duke of Norfolk and in that of the Earl of Warwick. Sutton afterwards acted as Warwick's assistant in the fortification of Berwick, made a fortune from coal-mines in Durham, and in 1580 settled as a merchant in London. In June, 1611, he obtained the King's license to found, on the site of the old Charter-house, a "Hospital, house or place of abiding for the finding sustentation and relief of poore, aged, maimed, needy or impotent people," and a free school "for poor children or scholars," under the care of a Master, a preacher, a schoolmaster, and an usher, to be appointed by governors chosen according to rules laid down by Sutton himself. The school was removed to Godalming in 1872, the Hospital remains on its old site. The view here given, from a print published in 1755, shows the Charter-house as Sutton left it. For other illustrations of houses built on the ruins of monasteries see Kirtling Hall, p. 694, and Fountains Hall, p. 708.
JOHN FISHER, BISHOP OF ROCHESTER (Drawing by Holbein, in the British Museum)	681
YORK MINSTER	683
JUDGE RIDING OUT OF COLCHESTER AFTER TRIAL OF ABBOT THOMAS BECHE, A. D. 1539	684
From MS. Egerton 2164 (British Museum), a survey of the lands of the Benedictine Abbey of S. John at Colchester, made c. 1540. Abbots Beche, of Colchester, Cook, of Reading, and Whiting, of Glastonbury, were accused of high treason in 1539, the real crime of all three being a refusal to surrender their houses. They were examined privately in the Tower, and then, as Cromwell in each case expressed it in his memoranda, "sent down to be tried and executed" in their respective counties (see p. 677). Beche was hanged Dec. 1, a fortnight after Whiting and Cook.
MARGARET, COUNTESS OF SALISBURY (Picture in the collection of Lord Donington)	686
THE TOWER OF LONDON	688
Part of a view of London, drawn by Antony van Wyngaerde, c. 1543 ; now in the Sutherland collection (Bodleian Library).

	PAGE
HENRY VIII. IN PARLIAMENT (Contemporary print in the British Museum)	693
KIRTLING HALL, CAMBRIDGESHIRE (Nichols, "Progresses of Queen Elizabeth")	694
Built by Edward North, a lawyer, who became Treasurer to Henry VIII., and afterwards Chancellor of the Court of Augmentations (created to receive and dispose of the "augmentations" accruing to the royal revenue from the dissolution of the monasteries). He bought the manor of Kirtling about 1530, and built the house before Henry's death. He was made Lord North in 1554, and died in 1564. For other illustrations of the rise of the gentry on the ruins of the monasteries see the Charter-house, p. 680, and Fountains Hall, p. 708.
WILLIAM TYNDALE (Holland, "Heroologia")	696
HUGH LATIMER (Picture in National Portrait Gallery)	698
SHRINE OF S. THOMAS DE CANTELUPE (Britton, "Hereford Cathedral")	701
S. Thomas de Cantelupe, Bishop of Hereford, is the last canonized Englishman. His shrine, erected in 1287—five years after his death, and twenty years before his canonization at Rome—is one of the three which alone remain in England. Those of S. Edward at Westminster and S. Frideswide at Oxford were broken up like the rest, but restored, the one under Mary (see p. 730), the other in the present century. Cantelupe's alone escaped untouched.
SHRINE OF S. THOMAS OF CANTERBURY	702
From a sketch temp. Henry VIII., in MS. Cotton Tiberius E. viii. (British Museum). The MS. has been damaged by fire, but enough of this leaf remains to show that the description there given of the shrine agreed with the representation of it in the window of Trinity Chapel (see pp. 598 and lxi.). The sketch represents, not the actual shrine, but the wooden canopy which ordinarily covered it, and was drawn up when it was to be exposed for the veneration of pilgrims. The iron chest at the foot of the sketch contained, according to the inscription, some of the "bones of Thomas Becket," which seem to be figured on the lid of the chest.
SEAL OF THE CITY OF CANTERBURY, FOURTEENTH AND SIXTEENTH CENTURIES (Society of Antiquaries)	704
The first of these illustrations shows the reverse of the seal whose obverse is figured above, p. 492. It represents the Martyrdom of S. Thomas, and bears the inscription, "Ictibus immensis Thomas qui corruit ensis, Tutor ab offensis urbis sit Cantuariensis." After the proclamation against S. Thomas in 1538, the Martyrdom and the legend were hammered out of the city seal, and the design figured below was put in their place. It may be noticed that one or two of the letters obstinately refused to disappear.
RUINS OF THE AUGUSTINIAN PRIORY CHURCH OF WALSINGHAM	706
This and the two following views have been selected as representing the destruction which fell upon three of the greatest houses of the leading religious Orders in England. At the close of the Middle Ages the Augustinian priory of Walsingham in Norfolk was the most frequented place of pilgrimage in all England; even the shrine of S. Thomas at Canterbury scarcely rivalled in popular veneration the image of our Lady of Walsingham. In the reign of Henry III. it was already famous; Henry VIII. visited it as a pilgrim soon after his accession, walking barefoot from Barsham Hall, and presenting a costly necklace. The church had been rebuilt on a grand scale in the fifteenth century. In 1539 the monastery was dissolved; nothing is now left of it but some ruins of the conventual buildings, and the fragment of the east end of the church, here figured from the engraving in the "Monasticon Anglicanum."
RUINS OF THE BENEDICTINE ABBEY CHURCH OF GLASTONBURY	707
Founded by Ine, made illustrious by Dunstan (see pp. 67, 103—6), Glastonbury ranked second among the mitred abbeys of England; it had ranked first till the end of the twelfth century, when Pope Adrian IV. transferred the primacy to S. Alban's. East of the little chapel which occupied the site of the original British church (see pp. 316, xlvi.) stood the great abbey-church, whose rebuilding after the fire of 1184 was begun on such a magnificent scale that more than a century passed before it was ready for consecration, and its

- decoration and enlargement were scarcely completed two centuries later still. In the middle of the choir rose the supposed tomb of King Arthur (see p. 317); Eadmund the Magnificent and Eadmund Ironside lay one on each side of the high altar; behind it was the burial-place of Eadgar, over which a chapel was built in 1493—1524 by Abbot Richard Beere, and completed by his successor, Richard Whiting. In 1539 Whiting shared the fate of Abbots Beche of Colchester and Cook of Reading (see pp. 677, 684 and lxvi). He was hanged, according to local tradition, on the top of the Tor Hill which, with the tower on its summit, is seen in the background of the view here given (from the "Monasticon Anglicanum"). It is however more probable that the execution took place on a lower hill called Wirrall, which also overlooks the abbey. The sole remnants of the great church are the two eastern piers of the tower, and some fragments of the outer walls of choir, transepts and nave, still displaying in their ruin the peculiarly beautiful forms of the late Transition and Early Pointed architecture of Somerset.
- RUINS OF THE CISTERCIAN ABBEY OF FOUNTAINS 707
 This view (from a photograph) shows portions of the three most important buildings now remaining at Fountains; the tower, the west end of the church, and the exterior of part of the Domus Conversorum, of which an interior view has been given in p. 668. Before the church is seen another specially Cistercian feature, the remains of a narthex or porch which, according to the custom of this Order, ran along the whole west front of the church. This too dates from the original construction in the twelfth century. The tower dates from 1494—1526; it stands in a place most unusual in a cruciform church—at the end of the north transept. The Cistercians were forbidden by their rule to build towers of greater height than was absolutely necessary to contain a bell. When therefore, relaxing their early strictness, they began to emulate other Orders in rearing lofty steeples, they found the construction of their churches ill fitted to receive such an increase of weight at the intersection, and were obliged to place it elsewhere.
- FOUNTAINS HALL (from a photograph) 708
 Fountains Abbey, dissolved 1539, was granted next year to Sir Richard Gresham, whose son, Sir Thomas, built the first Royal Exchange at London. After Sir Thomas's death Fountains was sold, 1597, to Sir Stephen Proctor, who built this house out of the stones of the abbey, before 1623, when the lands were sold again. For other illustrations of houses built on the ruins of the monasteries see the Charter-house, p. 680, and Kirtling Hall, p. 694.
- CORONATION PROCESSION OF EDWARD VI. 710
 Part of a large contemporary picture formerly at Cowdray (now destroyed); reproduced by the Society of Antiquaries in 1787. The procession is here shown, on its way westward from the Tower to Westminster, passing Cheap-side Cross, which was built by Edward I. in memory of his wife, Eleanor, in 1290, rebuilt in 1441, and destroyed by order of Parliament (as a monument of superstition) in 1643. The large church seen on the left is meant for S. Mary at Bow; the pillar opposite to it is the Standard, inside which was a water-conduit, and before which criminals were executed.
- CORONATION MEDAL OF EDWARD VI. (British Museum) 711
 A unique contemporary cast in lead, perhaps from a silver medallion which may have formed the centre of a plate or dish. It was obtained from a collection at Geneva.
- SEAL OF GILD OF THE HOLY CROSS, BIRMINGHAM 712
 From a matrix in the collection of Miss Toulmin Smith. This gild was founded in 1392, by the bailiffs and commonalty of Birmingham; its members were to be "as well the men and women of the said town of Birmingham, as men and women of other towns and of the neighbourhood who are well disposed towards them"; its rulers were a master and wardens; it had a chantry with chaplains to celebrate divine service in S. Martin's Church; and it was to "do and find works of charity according as the ordering and will of the said bailiffs and commonalty shall appoint." Three wealthy citizens provided the endowment in lands and rents. One of the good works done by this gild was the building of a "town-hall, otherwise called the gild-hall." Another was that, as the commissioners of Henry VIII. reported in 1546, "there be dyuers pore people ffounde, ayded and suckared of the seyde Gyld, as in mony, Breade, Drynke, Coles ; and whene any of them dye, thay be buryed very honestlye at the costes and charges of the same Gyld." Edward's commissioners in 1549 reported that "theare be relieved and mainteigned upon the possessions of the same guilde, and the good provision of the M^r. and bretherne thereof, xii poore persones, who have their howses rent free, and alle other kinde of sustenance, as welle ffoode and apparelle as alle other necessaryes. Allso theare be mainteigned, with parte of the premisses, and kept in good Reparaciouns, two greate stone bridges, and divers ffoule and daungerous high wayes ; the charge whereof the towne of hitsellfe ys not hable to mainteign ; So that the Lacke thereof wilbe a greate noysance to the kinges maties Subiectes passing to and ffrom the marches of wales, and an vtter Ruayne to the same towne—being one of the fayrest and moste proffittable townes to the Kinges highnesse in all the Shyre." Nevertheless the gild was dissolved and its property confiscated, and Edward is glorified as the founder of a Free School which he established out of its plunder.

PAGE

GRAMMAR SCHOOL, LUDLOW (from a photograph) 713

This School is one of several good works for which Ludlow is indebted to a local confraternity, the Palmers' Gild, which claimed to date from Edward the Confessor, and certainly went back to the time of Henry III. It was a social or charitable gild, and had a chantry in the chapel of S. John the Evangelist in Ludlow parish church. This chantry was for 10 priests, who in Leland's day had "a fayre house at the west end of the Paroch Church Yard ; and by it is an Hospital or almshouse of a 30 poore Folkes . . maintained partly by the Fraternity, and partly by mony given for Obitts of men buried there in the Church." The tradition ran that the Confessor was once asked for alms by a beggar in a church dedicated to S. John, and having nothing else, gave him a ring off his finger. Two English palmers losing their way in Holy Land some time after met with an old man who gave them entertainment and sent them home to Edward with the identical ring, and a message that the beggar to whom he had given it was S. John himself, who now returned it as a token that within six months they would be together in Paradise. The Ludlow folk assured Leland that these palmers were Ludlow men, and that this was the origin of the Palmers' gild ; in their chapel is a window picturing the legend (which is from the French "Vie de S. Edouard," 1245). The original patron saint of the gild however seems to be S. Andrew. The gild was surrendered under Edward VI., and made over to the corporation of Ludlow, which was bound to maintain its good works, the Grammar School being specially mentioned. This had been founded by the gild in the fourteenth century ; the street front here represented dates from that time. For another illustration of gild property which passed into the hands of the mayor and burgesses see the Leicester Town Hall, p. 782.

SEAL OF LOUTH GRAMMAR SCHOOL, A.D. 1552 (Journal of Archaeological Association) 715

MARY TUDOR (Picture by Sir Antonio More in the Escorial) 717

CARVING IN THE TOWER OF LONDON (Bayley, "History of the Tower") 718

By John Dudley, Earl of Warwick, the Duke of Northumberland's eldest son, who was condemned to death with his father and his brother Guildford after the rising of 1553, but was reprieved and died in prison. His place of confinement was the Beauchamp tower, the part of the Tower of London in which State prisoners were usually lodged. While there he carved this design on the wall. The lion, bear and ragged staff are the badges of his family ; from the inscription below, of which one line is unfinished, it seems that the flowers were meant to represent the names of his four brothers, Ambrose, Robert, Guildford, and Henry ; the only one that can be identified is the rose, which doubtless stands for Ambrose.

GREAT SEAL OF PHILIP AND MARY (REVERSE) 721

	PAGE
CARDINAL POLE (picture by Sebastiano del Piombo, at the Hermitage, St. Petersburg)	722
WESTGATE STREET, GLOUCESTER	726
Bishop Hooper was confined in the upper room of the house with the two gables, before he was burned; the burning took place just opposite the gate of the Cathedral precincts.
NICHOLAS RIDLEY (picture in the National Portrait Gallery)	727
SHRINE OF ST. EDWARD THE CONFESSOR	730
Edward was canonized 1161, and on October 13, 1163, his body was solemnly translated from its tomb to a shrine built for it by Henry II. In 1269, when Henry III. had rebuilt Westminster Abbey, the second translation took place, Henry, his brother, and their sons carrying the coffin to its new shrine. After the dissolution of the monastery in January, 1540, the shrine was pulled down, its upper part, of gold set with precious gems, carried away, and the base, of Purbeck marble decorated with glass mosaic, greatly damaged; the coffin was removed and hidden, seemingly by the monks themselves. In 1556 Mary re-established the Abbey; Feckenham, the new Abbot, put the base of the shrine together again and added the cornice and wooden superstructure, beneath which the coffin was replaced, March 20, 1557.
QUEEN ELIZABETH, A.D. 1558	732
Illuminated initial of Statutes of Order of St. Michael and St. George (Public Record Office).
QUEEN ELIZABETH	734
From a picture given by her to Sir Henry Sidney, and now at Penshurst.
BOOK-COVER, SAID TO HAVE BEEN WORKED BY QUEEN ELIZABETH (British Museum)	736
Embroidered in silver thread on black velvet. The book is "Orationis Dominicæ Explicatio," Geneva, 1583.
WILLIAM CECIL, LORD BURLEIGH (Picture in National Portrait Gallery)	739
QUEEN ELIZABETH HAWKING (Turberville's "Booke of Falcourie," 1575)	740
A ROYAL PICNIC (Turberville's "Booke of Hunting," 1575)	741
"HIEROGLYPHIKON BRYTANIKON," 1577	743
From the title-page of John Dee's "General and Rare Memorials pertayning to the perfecte Arte of Navigation," 1577. This "British Hieroglyphic" is at once a fine specimen of early English engraving, and an illustration of the way in which English sailors regarded their Queen. A light from Heaven streams down upon Elizabeth as she sits at the helm of the ship Europa , which she is steering towards the Tower of Safety; a figure kneeling on the island-shore holds a scroll with the legend, "Fleet all ready," and points towards Victory, who stands on the summit of a rock holding out a wreath to the Queen, while an angel with a flaming sword hovers protectingly over the ships in the background.
CUP OF THE GOLDSMITHS' COMPANY, LONDON (Shaw, "Dresses and Decorations")	744
Given by Queen Elizabeth to Sir Martin Bowes, a member of the Company, who was Lord Mayor of London at the time of her accession, 1558. It is of silver gilt studded with crystals, 1 ft. 7½ in. high, its greatest diameter 7⅞ in. The figure on the cover holds a shield charged with the arms of Bowes.
QUEEN ELIZABETH AT PRAYER	747
Frontispiece to "Christian Prayers," &c., printed in London, 1569. The copy from which this illustration is taken (Lambeth Palace Library, 1049) has its frontispiece and borders coloured to imitate an illuminated MS.; it probably belonged to the Queen herself.

	PAGE
MATTHEW PARKER, ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY (from an engraving by George Vertue, 1729, of an old picture)	749
SMAILHOLM TOWER, ROXBURGHSHIRE	752
A good specimen of a Border-fortress, consisting of a strong keep-tower within a barmkyn or outer fortification, into which the cattle of the neighbourhood were driven upon any sudden alarm.
SOUTH-EAST CORNER OF LADY CHAPEL, ROSSLYN	753
The so-called "Chapel" of Rosslyn is really the eastern limb of what was originally designed to be a large cruciform church, attached to a college consisting of a provost, six prebendaries, and two singing-boys, founded in 1446 by William St. Clair, Earl of Orkney. The foundations of nave and transepts can still be traced, but the only part ever completed was the choir, and the Lady Chapel at its eastern end. The view here given is from an old lithograph kindly lent for the purpose by the Earl of Rosslyn; since it was made, the church, which had fallen into ruin after the Revolution, has been restored and refitted for service, whereby some of its original details are now somewhat obscured. The remarkably beautiful pillar, the easternmost on the south side of the Lady Chapel, is said to be a copy of one at Rome, but there is nothing like it at Rome now, and the design is probably of Spanish origin. The story goes that a model of the pillar was sent to Rosslyn; but the master-builder would not venture to copy it till he had seen the original, and went over sea for that purpose. On his return he found that one of his apprentices had done the work in his absence, and made from the model an exact counterpart of the pillar which he had gone so far to see. Furious with jealousy at his pupil's superior skill, he struck the lad dead on the spot. Three heads carved at the west end of the church are supposed to represent the master, the apprentice and his weeping mother. A vault under the church was the burial place of the St. Clairs, Earls of Orkney, who were lords of Rosslyn from the time of Malcolm Canmore. The stern temper of the old Scottish nobles showed itself in their manner of burial; down to the very end of the seventeenth century the head of the St. Clair family was never laid in a coffin, but was arrayed in his full armour and placed upright within the vault.
KING'S COLLEGE, ABERDEEN, FRONT OF CHAPEL	754
King's College was founded by King James IV. and Pope Alexander VI. in 1494; its constitution was drawn up by Bishop Elphinstone in 1505. The chapel is remarkable for its west window, round-headed with Flamboyant tracery, a combination peculiar to Scotch architecture of this period; and for its tower, surmounted by a fine specimen of another characteristic Scottish feature, the arched crown, formed of flying buttresses.
CRAIGMILLAR CASTLE, INTERIOR OF KEEP	758
Craigmillar (in the neighbourhood of Edinburgh) was the favourite abode of Mary Stuart after her return from France. Her suite lodged in a neighbouring village, which thence took the name of Petty France.
JOHN KNOX (from an engraving by H. Hondius, in Verheiden's "Effigies," 1602).	760
CARVING IN THE TOWER, BY ARTHUR POOLE (Bayley, "History of the Tower")	761
Arthur Poole was great-grandson of George, Duke of Clarence, brother to Edward IV. In 1562 he and his brother Edmund were committed to the Tower on a charge of conspiring to place Mary Stuart on the English throne, marry her to Edmund, and restore Arthur to his great-grandfather's dukedom. They declared that they had been led astray by a conjuror, who told them that Elizabeth would die within a year. Elizabeth granted them their lives, but kept them in prison, where they both died. Their place of confinement was the Beauchamp Tower (see p. 718).
THE STATES-GENERAL AT ORLEANS, 1561	763
From a pictorial history of the religious wars in France, by Tortorel and Perrissin, two French (and seemingly Huguenot) engravers who worked together c. 1569—1570. In the latter year their collected plates, with an explanation in German at the foot of each, were published under the title:

	PAGE
“Der erste tail mancherlayen . . . historien von Krieg . . . in Frankreich.” In the plate here reproduced, A is the king ; B, the queen-mother ; C, the king's brother ; D, the king's sister ; E, the King of Navarre ; F, the Duchess of Ferrara ; G, the Duke of Guise (grand chamberlain) ; H, princes ; I, cardinals ; K, the Constable of France ; L, the chancellor ; M, the marshals ; N, privy councillors ; O, knights ; P, the four secretaries of Estates ; S, clergy ; T, the Tiers-Etat ; VV, nobles ; X, Quintin, spokesman of the clergy, addressing the assembly.
QUEEN MARY'S BEDCHAMBER, HOLYROOD PALACE Holyrood Palace, built by James IV. and James V., was burnt together with the adjoining abbey early in Mary's reign. She restored it on a grander scale, taking in a part of the site of the abbey. It became the favourite abode of her son ; was again almost destroyed by Cromwell's soldiers in the Civil War, and again restored 1671—88. Of the older building there still remain three towers on the north-west side (built by James V.) and the apartments of Mary. Her bedroom contains her bedstead, with a canopy of crimson damask edged with green silk. In the wall is the trap-door through which Darnley came to seize Rizzio.	765
BOTHWELL CASTLE, CLYDESDALE The home of Mary Stuart's Bothwell ; built probably in the fourteenth century.	767
LINLITHGOW From Slezer's "Theatrum Scotiæ," 1693. Linlithgow palace was built chiefly by James IV. ; some additions were made by James VI. The church shows the peculiar capping often seen on Scottish church spires of the fifteenth century, an arched crown. See the view of King's College, Aberdeen, p. 754.	768
CHAPEL OF HOLYROOD PALACE This was the nave of the Abbey church of Holyrood, founded by David I. in 1128 as a depository for a famous relic, the Black Cross (or "Holy Rood"), bequeathed to him by his mother S. Margaret. Plundered by Edward II. in 1332, burnt by Richard II. in 1385, twice ravaged by Somerset in 1544 and 1547, it was utterly ruined in the rising against Mary Stuart in 1567 (p. 769). Charles I. restored the nave of the church in 1633, building a wall, pierced with a window, across its eastern end, to make it serve as chapel for the palace. At the Revolution it was gutted, because James II. had had mass celebrated in it. In the last century it was again partly restored ; a new east window, of the same pattern as the original one of 1633, was put up in 1795 ; but the fall of the roof a few years later completed the ruin of the edifice.	769
CARLISLE CASTLE Founded by William Rufus ; added to and repaired at various periods down to the last century. Mary Stuart occupied a tower in the inner ward, at the south-east angle, taken down in 1827. This view is from Scott's "Border Antiquities," published in 1814.	771
CANDLESTICK OF MARY STUART (Liechtenstein, "Holland House") One of a pair of candlesticks, of Byzantine ware, used by Mary when in prison at Fotheringay ; now at Holland House.	772
CARVING IN THE TOWER BY CHARLES BAILLY, 1571 (Bayley, "History of the Tower") Bailly was concerned in the plot between Mary Stuart and Norfolk (see pp. 773—5), was caught carrying treasonable letters early in 1571, and was imprisoned in the Tower. He seems to have been released towards the end of the year.	775
THE BAKERS OF YORK, A.D. 1595—6 From the MS. Ordinances of their Gild, in the collection of Miss Toulmin Smith.	776, 777
COINERS¹ From Holinshed's "History of England," 1577.	779
THOMAS WEKES, JURAT OF HASTINGS, 1563 From the beginnings of municipal history in Hastings, as in the other Cinque Ports, twelve Jurats were elected from the citizens, who carried on the whole	780 administration of the town, and formed the Mayor's Council ; while some of them were also Justices of the Peace. The Jurats had thus a considerable share in the duties thrown on the municipal officers. The simple citizen was called "baron" in the Cinque Ports. The figure here given is from an engraving, in Moss's "History of Hastings," of a brass in S. Clement's church.

	PAGE
BURROWES HALL, 1576	781
A sketch of a Cheshire manor-house and its surroundings temp. Elizabeth ; from a contemporary survey of the manor, among the Duchy of Lancaster Maps and Plans, Public Record Office.
OLD TOWN HALL, LEICESTER	782
From a drawing, kindly made for this book, by Miss Edith Gittins. This hall was built for the meeting-place of the Gild of Corpus Christi, founded in 1350 ; in 1563 the mayor and burgesses bought it of the Crown and made it into a Town-hall. For other illustrations of the plunder of the Gilds see pp. 712, 713.
THE FULLER'S PANEL, SPAXTON CHURCH, SOMERSET (Proceedings of Somerset Archaeological Society)	783
This carving, on the end of a bench, seems to be of the fourteenth or early fifteenth century, and strikingly illustrates the upgrowth of manufacturing industry in remote villages such as Spaxton.
JOHN BARLEY, BURGESS OF HASTINGS, AND HIS DAUGHTER ALICE (Moss, "History of Hastings")	784
Brasses in S. Clement's church. John Barley died in 1604, his daughter in 1592. The little girl's womanly dress is curious ; she was but seven years old.
MAZER, 1585-6 (Archæologia)	785
The favourite drinking-vessel of the Middle Ages was a bowl called a mazer, a name derived from the material out of which it was usually made, the wood of the maple-tree, and especially the spotted or bird's eye maple (mase in old German meaning a spot). The bowl had usually a mounting or band of silver or silver-gilt, and a foot of the same material ; sometimes it had a cover of maple-wood with a silver-gilt rim ; at the bottom of the bowl was a circular medallion, called a print or boss, engraved with some device sacred or secular. The specimen here figured has some remarkable features. Bowl and foot are all in one piece of maple ; the silver band is richly ornamented with a characteristic Elizabethan pattern ; to each side is affixed a stout silver ring handle. The print bears the arms and crest of the Cotes family, of Aylstone, Leicestershire. The hall-mark on band and foot contains the London date-letter for 1585-6.
SEAL OF THE FRATERNITY OF OSTMEN OF NEWCASTLE (Brand, "History of Newcastle")	785
This fraternity of coal-traders, banded together for the loading and disposing of "sea-coals and pit-coals," was originally a branch of the Merchant Adventurers of Newcastle. The name Ostmen, or Hostmen, seems to be derived from a statute of Henry IV. (1404), which ordained that in every town of England where "marchants aliens or strangers shall be repairing, sufficient hoastes [hosts] shall be assigned to the same by the mayor &c. . . . and that they shall dwell in none other place" than with the hosts thus appointed them. The Newcastle brotherhood, however, in their earliest records speak of the stranger coming to buy coals as the "Ost." The Fraternity was incorporated in 1600, with power to load and unload coal anywhere on Tyne between Newcastle and Sparhawk. In return, it was to pay to the Crown twelve pence for every chaldron of coal shipped in the port of Tyne for any place within the realm. Three years later the Ostmen had a remarkable dispute with the Lord Mayor and Aldermen of London, about the price of coals and the regulation of the coal trade, the Londoners complaining that the prices were too high and the supply insufficient ; to which the Ostmen replied that the great increase in the demand for coals during the last few years had necessitated an extension of works involving great expense, and had greatly enhanced the difficulties and cost of transport ; while the long delay in the return of the ships sent from London to fetch coal from Newcastle, which the Londoners imputed to the obstacles thrown in their way by the rules of the Ostmen, was in fact owing to "the strict course held by the Lord Maïor of London in restraining Shipp masters to sell their coles to the readiest chapman as formerly they have used." Already "the greatest quantity of coles are now wrought at further Pitts then they were the last year, and are every year likely to be further of, the nearer mines being most of them wholly waisted . . . and for the psent most of all our Coles at our near Pitts are already ledd and carried at such unreasonable rates as hath been to our very great losse, notwithstanding our raising 12d. in a Chalder of Coles Newcastle usual measure."

	PAGE
SIR THOMAS GRESHAM (picture by Sir Antonio More, in the National Portrait Gallery)	786
THE ROYAL EXCHANGE, AS BUILT BY SIR T. GRESHAM	787
From a view by Hollar. This building was destroyed in the fire of 1666; the one now standing is the third.
EASTCHEAP, C. 1598	788
From a copy, in the Crowle collection (British Museum), of a drawing probably made about 1598; representing the market which still survived in the earliest London, between the Walbrook and the Tower.
BILLINGSGATE, 1598	788
From the same collection; a copy of another Elizabethan drawing.
PLAS MAWR, CONWAY (Baker, "Plas Mawr")	790
Plas Mawr (i.e. the "Great Hall"), called Plas Newydd ("New Hall") in the Heraldic Visitation of Wales, 1588, was built by Robert Wynne, son of John Wynne ap Meredith, of Gwydir. It is a fine specimen of the houses built in provincial towns by the gentry of Elizabeth's day, and illustrates, no less than the great country houses of the same period, the "social as well as architectural change" mentioned in pp. 791-793. It consists of two blocks, of which the southern has its front on the High Street of Conway. This south block was apparently a lodge, occupied by the porter and other retainers. Its front, as old descriptions show, formerly bore the sacred monograms I.H.S. and XPS, and the date 1585; the porch is still adorned with the royal arms, and over the doorway is carved an inscription in Greek and Latin, meaning "Bear, forbear." The north block stands on higher ground, and is separated from the southern by a court, on the north side of which is a terrace whence a door opens into the banqueting hall, containing an elaborate chimney-piece dated 1580. This hall, with the buttery, forms the south wing of the north block; beyond it lies another court, picturesque with dormers, carved chimneys, and stair turrets at its angles; on the east side of this court is the kitchen and a passage with a porch (modern, but replacing an earlier one) opening into a side street; the north wing consists of a beautifully decorated parlour known as Queen Elizabeth's (from her initials, arms and emblems carved on the mantel-piece), and the bake-house. The first floor contains a large drawing-room with panelled ceiling, and several smaller rooms, richly panelled and decorated, and evidently intended for bedrooms. The view here reproduced, of the house as seen from the south-east, shows the whole eastern front of the north block, with part of the south side of the dining hall, and the south block with its porch.
BEDSTEAD, A.D. 1593 (Wright, "Archaeological Album")	791
In South Kensington Museum; formerly at Turton Tower, Lancashire, and said to have been given by a King of France to an Earl of Devon. No coronet, however, surmounts the Courtenay arms carved on the frieze; and on the footboard is the date 1593, twenty-seven years after the death of the last Earl of Devon. The bedstead was in all likelihood made in England for one of the Courtenay family.
AUDLEY END	792
From an engraving by Winstanley, an architect employed by James II., 1688.

	PAGE
THE STAIRCASE, KNOLE HOUSE	793
BRAMHALL HOUSE (Earwaker , "East Cheshire")	794
Bramhall, begun in the fifteenth century (see above, p. lix) was completed c. 1590—1600, by the addition of a gallery running the whole length of the house on the upper floor. This gallery was taken down in the present century; the view here reproduced was taken before its demolition. Bramhall in its complete state is a fine example of an English timbered mansion, as Audley End (p. 792) is of an English brick and stone mansion, of the Elizabethan period.
KNOLE HOUSE; ROOM LEADING TO CHAPEL	795
HARDWICKE HALL; THE GALLERY	796
HATFIELD HOUSE; THE GREAT HALL	797
SEAL OF WIMBORNE GRAMMAR SCHOOL, 1563 (Journal of Archaeological Association)	798
CHAINED LIBRARY, GRANTHAM (Blades , "Bibliographical Miscellanies")	799
A chained library was presented to the parish church of Grantham in 1598, and still exists in its original place, a room over the south porch of the church. There are seventy-four chained books. The chains are fastened at one end to the covers of the books, and at the other to an iron rod on the bookcase. This was the usual practice in olden times, when books were rare and costly and therefore liable to be stolen unless thus secured.
SIR WALTER RALEGH (picture at Knole)	800
INITIAL LETTER OF SIDNEY'S "ARCADIA," FIRST EDITION, 1590	802
SIR PHILIP SIDNEY	803
From a miniature by Isaac Oliver, in the Royal collection at Windsor; probably painted when Sidney "withdrew to Wilton to write the 'Arcadia' by his sister's side" (see p. 847), for the background seems to represent the garden front of Wilton House before the alterations made there in the seventeenth century.
TITLE-PAGE OF SIDNEY'S "ARCADIA"	804
Designed for the second edition of the "Arcadia," published in 1593. The reproduction here given is from a copy (in the British Museum) of the third edition, 1598. This and the other title-pages given in pp. 811, 880, 885, are interesting as illustrating how completely the English forms of the Renaissance decoration superseded the older forms.
"VELVET BREECHES AND CLOTH BREECHES," 1592 (Jusserand , "English Novel")	805
Frontispiece to Greene's "Quip for an upstart Courtier, or a quaint dispute between Velvet Breeches and Cloth Breeches," i.e., a dispute "between old England and New England . . . traditional England and Italianate England." Velvet breeches is "richly daubde with gold, and poudred with pearle," and is "sprung from the auncient Romans, borne in Italy, the mistresse of the worlde for chivalry." Cloth Breeches is of English manufacture and descent, and deplores the vices that have crept into "this glorious Iland" in the wake of Italian fashions" (Jusserand, "English Novel," p. 189).
COACHES OF QUEEN ELIZABETH AND HER MAIDS	806, 807
From Houfnagel's print of her progress to Nonsuch, in Braun's "Civitates Orbis Terrarum," 1572.
TITLE-PAGE OF ACTS OF PARLIAMENT, 1585	811
This should be compared with the other title-pages of the English Renaissance given in pages 804, 880, and 885. It has also another interest, as showing (like the figures in p. 858) how the decorative capabilities of the new art of printing were applied, as the talent of the illuminator had been applied in earlier days, to the embellishment of the gravest documents of State.

	PAGE
FRONT OF TOWN HALL, NANTWICH, BUILT 1611 (Richardson, "Old English Mansions")	814
CARDINAL ALLEN (from an engraving by S. Freeman, of a picture at St. Cuthbert's College, Ushaw, Durham)	817
LORD MAYOR AND ALDERMEN, TEMP. ELIZABETH to face p. 818 From MS. Add. 28330 (British Museum), a description of England, written by a Fleming who visited it in Elizabeth's reign.
PHILIP HOWARD, EARL OF ARUNDEL AND SURREY (picture at Arundel Castle)	821
Philip was son of the Duke of Norfolk beheaded in 1572. He was imprisoned in the Tower 1584 on a charge of correspondence with Allen and the Jesuits, arraigned for high treason 1589, and sentenced to death, but as his only proved act of treason was his reconciliation with the Roman Church he was left in the Tower, where he died 1595. He spent his whole time there in acts of devotion. Elizabeth never allowed him to see his wife nor the son who was born after his imprisonment. Two pious inscriptions with his signature, "Arundell," and the date 1587, are carved on the wall of the prison room in the Beauchamp tower.
PHILIP II. OF SPAIN (engraved portrait by Francis Hogenberg, 1555)	823
FERDINAND ALVARES, DUKE OF ALVA (old engraving in the British Museum)	824
WILLIAM THE SILENT, PRINCE OF ORANGE (engraving by H. Hondius)	827
SIR FRANCIS DRAKE (old Dutch engraving)	830
CLASP-KNIFE OF SIR FRANCIS DRAKE (Journal of Archaeological Association)	831
A falchion-shaped blade, marked on one side with a scroll and the sacred initials I. N. R. I., on the other with three crosses emblematic of the Trinity. The handle is of polished chamois-horn, with a mounting of engraved brass; on each side is inlaid a band of ivory, one engraved with scrolls and two figures of deer, the other with the words "Francis Drake, 1570," between two anchors.
MARY, QUEEN OF SCOTS	834
From a photograph, taken specially for this book, of the effigy on her tomb in Westminster Abbey.
CHART OF THE ARMADA'S COURSE	836
From John Pine's engravings (published 1739) of the Tapestry Hangings of the House of Lords. These hangings were made by Francis Spiering from designs by H. C. de Vroom, for the Earl of Nottingham, who as Lord Howard of Effingham had commanded the English fleet in 1588. He afterwards sold them to James I.; in 1650 they were put up in the House of Lords when it was used as a committee room for the Commons; in 1834 House and tapestry were destroyed by fire.
ENGAGEMENT BETWEEN THE ARMADA AND THE ENGLISH FLEET	838
A view of the fight off the Isle of Wight, July 25, 1588; from Pine's engraving of the Tapestry Hangings.
FLIGHT OF THE ARMADA TO CALAIS (from Pine's engraving of the Tapestry Hangings)	840

- | | PAGE |
|--|---------|
| VIATORIUM, 1587 (British Museum) | 843 |
| The viatorium (spelt "fiatorium" on this example itself) is a nautical instrument which serves at once as a compass and a sun-dial. It is an oblong box, with a ring at the top for suspension and fastening; when opened, it displays a mariner's compass surrounded by a square dial-plate, and having at one end a moveable tongue, which serves as gnomon to the dial. Inside the lid is another dial-plate with the hours (24) marked on it. Outside the lid is a table of latitudes of various places in Europe. The common English name for this instrument was journey-ring; a writer in 1520 speaks of "Jorney Rynges, and instruments lyke an hangynge pyler, with a tunge lyllyng oute, to knowe what tyme of the day," and in a Latin version "Jorney Rynges" is rendered "Viatoria." The viatorium here figured is of silver. Similar instruments, made of wood, were still manufactured in Germany in the middle of the present century, and largely used in the Levant by native travellers. | |
| EDMUND SPENSER (from Vertue's engraving of a portrait now at Brethby) | 845 |
| PENSHURST HOUSE (from a photograph) | 846 |
| Penshurst has been the home of the Sidneys since the thirteenth century, and the house had grown up by degrees from that time. The great hall, of which the inner side, next the courtyard, is shown here, is a splendid example of domestic architecture of the time of Edward I. | |
| KILCOLMAN CASTLE (after W. H. Bartlett) | 847 |
| The home of Spenser in Ireland. | |
| THE SHEPHERD'S CALENDAR, 1579 | 849-854 |
| The only known copy of the first edition of the Shepherd's Calendar, published in 1579, is in the British Museum. The illustrations for the twelve months are all reproduced here. They represent: 1. Colin Clout complaining of his unfortunate love; 2. A shepherd and a herdsman; 3. Shepherds discoursing of "love and other pleasaunce"; 4. Hobinell singing Colin's song "to the honor and prayse of our most gracious sovereigne Queene Elizabeth"; 5. "Love-lads masken in fresh array," while in the background a discussion goes on between two shepherds, Piers (a Protestant) and Palinodie (a Catholic); 6. Haymaking, Colin bewailing his hapless love; 7. The good shepherd and the "proud and ambitious pastor," represented by Morrell the goatherd seated on a hill-top; 8. A musical contest among shepherds; 9. Diggon Davie, returning from the "far country," relates to Hobinell his adventures with "Popish prelates"; 10. Cuddie's complaint of the present "Contempte of Poetrie, and the causes thereof"; 11. Colin crowned by Thenot for his ode on the death of the maiden "Dido"; 12. Colin's complaint to Pan in his latter age—"Winter's chyll and frostie season." | |
| THE RED-CROSS KNIGHT | 856 |
| From the third edition of the Faerie Queen, 1598. | |
| FIGURES FROM THE TITLE-PAGE OF ACTS OF PARLIAMENT, 1553 | 858 |
| The influence of the Renaissance is at once apparent here. For further illustrations of its development in the ornamental title-pages of the period see pp. 804, 811, 880, 885. | |
| THE POND AT ELVETHAM, AT QUEEN ELIZABETH'S VISIT, 1591 | 859 |
| From a reproduction in Nichols' "Progresses of Queen Elizabeth" of an engraving in a rare tract, "The Honorable Entertainment given to the Quene's Majestie in Progresse at Elvetham in Hampshire by the Right Hon'ble the Earl of Hertford, 1591." | |
| THE SWAN THEATRE, LONDON, 1596 | 861 |
| Facsimile of a drawing in the library of the University of Utrecht, here reproduced by permission of Dr. Gaedertz, from his "Zur Kenntniss der Alt-Englischen Bühne." | |

	PAGE
"GREENE IN CONCEPTE"	863
From the title page of a pamphlet thus entitled, by John Dickenson, 1598, of which the only known copy is in the Bodleian Library.
AN ENGLISH APPRENTICE FETCHING WATER, 1572 (Braun, "Civitates orbis terrarum")	865
ENGLISH MARKET-WOMEN, 1572 (Braun, "Civitates orbis terrarum")	866
WILLIAM KEMP DANCING THE MORRIS (Jusserand, "English Novel")	867
Kemp was a comic actor of great repute in the later years of Elizabeth. He acted in some of Shakspeare's plays, and in some of Ben Jonson's, when they were first put on the stage. In 1599 he journeyed from London to Norwich, dancing the Morris all the way. Next year he published an account of his exploit, "The Nine daies wonder," of which the only known copy is in the Bodleian Library. The figures here reproduced are from a woodcut on the title-page of this tract.
PEERS IN THEIR ROBES, AND HALBERDIER, TEMP. ELIZABETH. (MS. Add. 28330)	869
A group, painted by a Flemish traveller, from "the brilliant England which gathered round Elizabeth."
LADY OF THE ENGLISH COURT AND COUNTRYWOMAN, 1572 (Braun, "Civitates orbis terrarum")	869
THE CONSTABLE OF THE WATCH	870
From the Album of George Holtzschuher (MS. Egerton 1264, British Museum), a citizen of Nuremberg who visited England in 1623-5. The duties of the officer here figured are thus defined by Shakspeare in the person of Dogberry: "You are thought here to be the most senseless and fit man for the constable of the watch; therefore bear you the lantern. This is your charge; you shall comprehend all vagrom men; you are to bid any man stand, in the prince's name" ("Much Ado About Nothing," Act iii. scene 3).
BURGHER-WOMEN AND A COUNTRY-WOMAN (MS. Add. 28330)	872
A contemporary picture, in costume at least, of such English women as those whom Shakspeare painted in the "Merry Wives of Windsor."
SHEPHERDS	873
From the title-page of Mark Antony de Dominis' "De Republica Ecclesiastica," 1617. Though intended for shepherds in the figurative sense, they may illustrate the idealised pastoral life in the Forest of Arden.
CLASSICAL WARRIOR	874
An Elizabethan figure of Cæsar or Coriolanus, from the title-page of a book of "New and Singular patterns to make divers sorts of Lace," 1591.
SHAKESPEARE'S HOUSE, STRATFORD-UPON-AVON	876
From a drawing, seventeenth or early eighteenth century, in the King's Library (British Museum).
BEN JONSON (picture by Gerard Honthorst)	879
TITLE-PAGE OF BEN JONSON'S "WORKS," 1610	880
This should be compared with the other Renaissance title-pages given in pp. 804, 811, and 885.
FRANCIS BACON (portrait by Van Sommer, at Gorhambury)	882
TITLE-PAGE OF BACON'S "INSTAURATIO MAGNA," 1620	885
Compare with the illustrations given in pp. 804, 811, and 880.

	PAGE
COMPOUNDING A BALSAM, TEMP. JAMES I. (broadside in the collection of the Society of Antiquaries)	888
MAP OF IRELAND JUST BEFORE THE ENGLISH INVASION to face p.	889
HENRY IV. OF FRANCE (picture by F. Porbus, in the Louvre)	890
GLENDALOUGH (after W. H. Bartlett)	892

The valley of Glendalough, in the heart of the Wicklow mountains, is filled with ruined buildings, ranging in date from the sixth to the eleventh century. These are the remains of a monastic establishment which was founded towards the close of the sixth century by S. Keivin, and which grew into one of the most famous schools and one of the most frequented places of pilgrimage in Ireland. It was an episcopal see till 1214, when John annexed it to the archbishopric of Dublin; the archbishops however did not obtain complete possession of the monastery till 1479. Thenceforth Glendalough went to ruins, but its ruins still attract the pilgrim as well as the antiquary. The principal building on the left in the group here represented is the founder's cell, of which an enlarged view is given in p. 893, and a description in the following note.

S. KEIVIN'S CELL, GLENDALOUGH	893
---	-----

From an original drawing kindly lent by Sir Thomas Deane. This building, vulgarly called S. Keivin's Kitchen, is a monastic cell of the primitive Irish type (see pp. 48, 49), converted shortly after the death of its sainted occupant (618) into a church, by the addition of a bell-tower, and of a chancel which is now gone, but whose former existence is proved by the remains of an adjoining sacristy and by an arch in the eastern wall. The cell itself is oblong, with a high-pitched stone roof, an arched room below, and a small croft between. The door, now blocked, is at the west end, square headed, the weight being taken off the lintel by a round arch. The cell was lighted by two windows, one above another, at the east end, and one in the south wall. The belfry, 9 feet high, rises from the west gable; it is entered from the croft.

S. KEIVIN AND THE BLACKBIRD	894
---------------------------------------	-----

An Irish legend, marked by the feeling characteristic of many a Buddhist story, relates that once while S. Keivin was absorbed in meditation, a blackbird made her nest in his outstretched hand; whereupon he remained patiently in the same attitude till the eggs were safely hatched. He is therefore always represented with a nest in his hand. The illustration here given is from a MS. (Roy. 13 B. viii., British Museum; see above, p. xliii.) of Gerald de Barri's "Topographia Hibernica," written and illustrated possibly by Gerald's own hand, certainly in his time and by some one who had a personal knowledge of Ireland. The figures and faces which he gives to the Irishmen whom he paints are quite unlike any contemporary representations of Englishmen, and are clearly attempts, however unsuccessful, to reproduce a genuine Irish type of form and feature as well as of costume.

ST. PATRICK'S HORN (MS. Roy. 13 B. viii.)	894
--	-----

Gerald met in Wales a poor Irishman who went about begging, carrying round his neck as a relic a brazen horn which he said had belonged to S. Patrick. He gave it to the bystanders to kiss, after the Irish custom, but warned them not to blow it, out of reverence for the Saint. A priest snatched it from his hand and blew it; instantly he was struck with paralysis, and lost both speech and memory. A pilgrimage to Ireland, by way of atonement to S. Patrick, brought about a partial recovery.

LEGEND OF PRIEST AND WERE-WOLVES (MS. Roy. 13 B. viii.)	895
--	-----

When Gerald was in Ireland in 1182, a priest travelling from Ulster into Meath, and having to pass the night in a wood, was sitting by a fire which he had made, when a wolf accosted him in human speech. He was, he said, a man of Ossory, on whose race lay an ancient curse, whereby every seven years a man and a woman were changed into wolves; at the end of seven years they recovered their proper form, and two others suffered a like transformation. He and his wife were the present victims of the curse; his wife was at the point of death, and he prayed the priest to come and give her the viaticum. After some hesitation the priest complied ; and next morning the wolf put him in the right road, and took leave of him with words of gratitude. The priest doubted whether he had not done wrong, and consulted many theologians on the point, Gerald among them. In the end he went to the Pope ; the result is not stated.

PAGE

CLONMACNOISE (after W. H. Bartlett) 896

The religious settlement of Clonmacnoise was founded by S. Kieran in 548. The "great church" was built in 909 ; it is now called Temple MacDermot, having been restored by a chief of that name in 1314. A smaller church, consisting of a chancel with round tower attached, and known as Temple Fineen, was built in the thirteenth century by Fineen MacCarthy More. West of the great church is a large round tower, called O'Rourke's, built c. 908, and restored later. Between this and the west door of the church stands one of the finest of the Irish sculptured crosses. It dates from about 909 ; the figures on its eastern side represent scenes from the life of Christ, whence it is called in Tighernach's Annals the "Cross of the Scriptures ;" those on the western side (shown here) represent the foundation of Clonmacnoise. Save as a place of pilgrimage, Clonmacnoise has long been deserted ; but it still gives its name to an ecclesiastical division, the deanery of the diocese of Meath.

LAVABO, MELLIFONT ABBEY 898

From an original drawing kindly lent by Sir Thomas Deane. Mellifont (near Drogheda) is interesting as the traditional burial-place of Tighernan O'Rourke's wife, Dervorgilla, whose abduction by Dermot of Leinster was said to have stirred up the strife which drove him into exile and led to the English invasion. She died at Mellifont in 1193. It was a Cistercian abbey, founded in 1142 by Donogh O'Carroll, chief of Oiriel, at the suggestion of S. Malachi, Bishop of Down. Its first monks were a colony from Clairvaux, where Malachi had made a long stay on his way to Rome three years before ; it is probable that he had brought back with him an architect from thence, for the details of the building at Mellifont show remarkable traces of French influence. The earliest part of the abbey now remaining is the Lavabo, or place of ablution ; this was a specially important feature in a Cistercian house, where the brethren, being much employed in manual labour, were required by their rule to wash their hands there at stated times before going from their work to their religious duties in the church. The Lavabo was usually a circular or polygonal building, resembling a baptistery. In that of Mellifont, a remarkable effect, unique in Irish architecture, is produced by the introduction of coloured bricks into the architraves.

IRISH SCRIBE } (MS. Roy. 13 B. viii) 899
 IRISH LADY PLAYING THE PSALTERY }

Gerald says that the Irish used only two musical instruments, drum and cithara. The strict meaning of this latter word is "harp," and the harp was certainly used in Ireland from a very early period. The instrument here figured, however, appears to be a cithern or psaltery.

THE ROCK OF CASHEL (after W. H. Bartlett) 900

"After that S. Patrick went into the province of Munster to Cashel of the Kings," and converted the King of Munster. "And then said Patrick : 'From Cashel I have blessed Ireland as far as its borders. With my two hands have I blessed, so that Munster will not be without good.' . . . Patrick saith that his grace would abide in Cashel, ut dixit [poeta]:— 'Patrick's resurrection in Down, his primacy in Armagh, on the hillock of musical Cashel he granted a third of his grace.'" ("Life of S. Patrick," ed. Whitley Stokes, from the Book of Lismore.) The present buildings date chiefly from the thirteenth century.

IRISH ROWING-BOAT (MS. Roy. 13 B. viii.) 901

In the battle of Ventry, where the Irish fought with "the King of the whole great world entirely," "their vessels and boats, their coracles and their beautiful ships were then made ready by them, and the trim straight oars with stiff shafts and hard blades were got out, and they made a strong, eager, quick, powerful, well-timed rowing, so that the white-skinned foamy streams behind the ships from the quick-rowing were like the white-plumed froth on blue rivers, or like the white chalk on high stones." ("Battle of Ventry," one of the later Irish stories, ed. Kuno Meyer, pp. 2, 3.)

	PAGE
IRISHMEN ATTACKING A TOWER (MS. Roy. 13 B. viii.)	901
This and the first illustration in p. 903 illustrate Gerald's description of Irishmen armed with "the axe which they always carry in their hands in place of a staff."
CORMAC'S CHAPEL, CASHEL (after W. H. Bartlett)	902
Built by Cormac MacCarthy, King of Desmond, in the 13th century.
IRISHMEN WITH AXES (MS. Roy. 13 B. viii.)	903
IRISH FOOT-SOLDIERS, TEMP. EDWARD I. (Chapter-house Liber A., Public Record Office)	903
SCENES FROM THE CAMPAIGN OF RICHARD II. IN IRELAND To face p.	904
From MS. Harleian 1319 (see above, p. lvii.). The first of these two illuminations represents a conference between the Earl of Gloucester and Art MacMurchadha, a chieftain who assumed the title of King of Leinster. The author of the MS., who was present, describes Art as "a fine, large man, wondrously active," rushing down the hill-side upon "a horse without housing or saddle, said to have cost him 400 cows," and so swift that "I never in all my life saw hare, deer, sheep, or any other animal, run so fast as it did." The lower picture represents the King's host, encamped on the coast of Wicklow, eagerly welcoming three ships which brought them provisions from Dublin.
TRIM CASTLE, CO. MEATH	905
Founded by Hugh de Lacy, temp. Henry II., on the border of the English Pale; partly ruined in the struggle between the Lacys and the Marshals, and then rebuilt, 1220; ruined again in sixteenth century. This view is from an etching, made in 1830.
CASTLE OF THE GERALDINES, MAYNOOTH, KILDARE (from a photograph) . . .	907
Built 1426 by John, sixth Earl of Kildare.
ASTRONOMICAL DIAGRAM	908
The facsimile here given is a reproduction of one in Professor O'Curry's "Lectures on the MS. materials of ancient Irish history." It is taken from an Irish treatise on astronomy, written c. 1400; now in the collection of the Royal Irish Academy, Dublin. This MS. is doubly interesting as a fine example of Irish handwriting, and as illustrating the pursuit of scientific studies and the state of scientific knowledge in Ireland at the time. The words on the diagram signify: "1. The high stars, on being darkened by the shadow of the earth. 2. The sun's sphere. 3. The sun's sphere. 4. The shadow of the earth darkening the moon. 5. The sphere of the fixed stars. 6. The sun. 7. The earth." The text beneath it is thus translated by Professor O'Curry; "If the magnitude of the sun were smaller than the magnitude of the earth, everything unsustainable, unpermissible, we have said, and more along with them, they should fall in it; for the shadow of the earth would be continually growing and leaping from the earth out to the sphere of the high stars, and it would darken the greater part of them; and an eclipse would happen to the planets in every month; and the eclipse of the moon would hold during the night as he says. Well then, as we have never seen the like of this, and as we have not heard, and as we have not found it written, it must be that the magnitude of the sun is not smaller than the magnitude of the earth; and what I say is manifest from this figure down here."
This treatise was written at a time when the study of astronomy had scarcely begun in Europe, about the close of the fourteenth century. The diagram represents of course the Ptolemaic theory of the heavens, having been drawn more than 150 years before the rival theory of Copernicus was published. Though it is impossible to determine from what authorities, if any, our astronomer derived his argument with its illustrative diagram, it is nevertheless worthy of notice that Leonardo da Vinci in that part of his fragmentary treatise on astronomy in which he deals with the relative size of the sun and earth not only uses the same optical argument about the eclipse of the fixed stars but illustrates it with a similar diagram, showing the direction and effect of the shadow cast by the earth. Leonardo's actual words are these: "If the sun were smaller than the earth the stars in a great portion of our hemisphere would have no light, which is evidence against Epicurus who says the sun is only as large as it appears." In a subsequent paragraph he says, "Poseidonius composed books on the size of the sun," and if we suppose—what cannot however be proved—that Leonardo borrowed his argument from this or some other ancient authority, it seems natural to conclude that our Irish astronomer had access to the same source. In any case the diagram and demonstration are most interesting as throwing light upon the relatively advanced state, whether of speculation or of erudition, in Ireland at this period, for our astronomer must have been either a man of original power or of great erudition. The real magnitude of the sun was not established till the middle of the eighteenth century, though Newton demonstrated that its size was greater than that of the earth.

FACSIMILES OF IRISH MSS. 909

These specimens of Irish writing at various periods from 1300 to 1588 have been selected from Professor O'Curry's "Lectures." Figure I. (MS. Trinity College, Dublin, H. 2 15) is taken from a curious tract of the fourteenth century, one of those called Brehon laws, which treats of the grades into which a tribe was divided, their duties to each other and their chief, and the duties of the chief to the people. Professor O'Curry translates this extract thus: "Of the classification of the tribes of a territory. He is not competent to the judgeship of a tribe nor of a Fuidhir, who does not know [the law of] their separation. That is, he is not competent for judgeship according to the Fenechas" (native laws) "upon a tribe, nor upon a semi-slave, or the separation of a tribe, or the semi-slave from a lord." He adds: "The Fuidhir was a person who, if he only crossed the boundary line in the next territory, without stock or means of any kind, and took stocked land from the chief of that territory, was looked upon, after having remained so (or his children) during the lives of three successive lords, as half enslaved. During this time he or his children might depart, but take nothing away with them. Should he or they come under a fourth lord, without opposition from themselves or claim from their original tribe chief, they could never be free to depart again." Such a passage illustrates the wide difference between the Irish customary law and anything known to English lawyers, and shows how impossible it was for English lawyers to enter into the spirit of "the customary law which prevailed without the Pale, the native system of clan government and common tenure of land by the tribe" (pp. 907, 908).

Figure II. is part of a tale from a tract called the "Dialogue of the Ancient Men," preserved in the Book of Lismore, written c. 1400. In this tract S. Patrick's companions are made to give an account to the saint of the situation, the history and origin of the names of various hills, mountains, rivers, caverns, rocks, wells, mounds, shores, &c. throughout Erin.

Figure III. is taken from the Annals of Ulster (MS. Trinity College, Dublin, H. i. 8), originally compiled in an island in Lough Erne, by Cathal MacGuire, whose clan or chieftain name was MacMaghnusa. After his death in 1498 the Annals were carried on by other scholars. The passage here given is from MacManus's successor, Rory O'Cassidy, who wrote in the first half of the sixteenth century, and in speaking of the death of his great predecessor shows the fine intellectual tradition which was handed down among Irish scholars. Under the date 1498 he notes "a great mournful news throughout all Ireland this year, namely, the following:—MacManus Maguire died this year. . . . He was a precious stone, a bright gem, a luminous star, a casket of wisdom; a fruitful branch of the canons, and a fountain of charity, meekness, and mildness, a dove in purity of heart, and a turtledove in chastity; the person to whom the learned, and the poor, and the destitute of Ireland were most thankful; one who was full of grace and of wisdom in every science to the time of his death, in law, divinity, physic, and philosophy, and in all the Gaedhlic sciences; and one who made, gathered, and collected this book from many other books. . . . And let every person who shall read and profit by this book pray for a blessing on that soul of Macmanus."

Figure IV. is from the Annals of Loch Cé (MS. Trinity College, Dublin, H. i. 19), written for Brian MacDermod, chief of Magh Luirg (or Moylorg), co. Roscommon, during the years of the Desmonds' revolt and the English conquest of Munster (see pp. 922, and 923), and finished in the very year of the Armada, by a scribe who thus names himself: "I am fatigued from Brian MacDermot's book; Anno Domini 1580. I am Philip Badley," and again: "I rest from this work. May God grant to the man [owner] of this book, to return safely from Athlone; that is Brian, the son of Ruaidhrigh MacDermot. I am Philip who wrote this, 1588, on the day of the festival of S. Brendan in particular. And Cluain Hi Bhraoin is my place." To the text of this transcript the chief himself (Brian MacDermot) and other scribes made several additions, carrying the Annals down to 1590, or two years before Brian's death in 1592. Brian himself adds a note to the death of the son of Donnell O'Conor, 1581: "And this loss has pained the hearts of all Connaught, and especially it has pained the scholars and poets of the province of Connaught; and it has divided my own heart into two parts. . . . I am Brian MacDermot who wrote this upon MacDermot's Rock."

	PAGE
DOMINICAN FRIARY, SLIGO	911
Founded by Maurice FitzGerald, Lord Justiciar of Ireland, 1252; the present building dates from about 1416, the original one having been burnt down in 1415.
ROCK ABBEY, ASKEATON (from a photograph)	912
This Franciscan Friary was founded in 1420 by the Earl of Desmond, who owned the neighbouring castle (see p. 923). The fifth Earl, who was Lord High Treasurer of Ireland, was buried in its church in 1588.
OLD BRIDGE AND FRANCISCAN FRIARY, KILCREA (from a photograph)	913
Kilcrea Friary was founded in 1478; the picturesque bridge is probably older.
HOLY CROSS ABBEY	914
A Cistercian house, whose abbots bore the title of Earl, and were usually Vicars-general of their order in Ireland. The abbey was founded in 1182 by Donald O'Brien, King of Munster, to contain a relic of the Cross. This relic was saved at the Reformation by the Ormonde family, to whom the abbey had been granted at its dissolution. The building dates from the late fourteenth or early fifteenth century. The canopied shrine on the south side of the higher altar appears, from the arms sculptured on it, to be the tomb of Joan, daughter of the fifth Earl of Kildare, and wife of the fourth Earl of Ormonde, c. 1450.
IRISH MEN AND WOMEN, TEMP. ELIZABETH (MS. Add. 28330)	918
The two figures on the left are entitled "A noble lady," and "A burgher-woman," and represent inhabitants of the Pale; the two men on the right are called "Wild Irish."
AN IRISH BANQUET	920
This and the three following illustrations are taken from Derrick's "Image of Ireland," 1581.
AN IRISH CHIEF AND HIS ATTENDANTS	920
AN IRISH CHIEFTAIN'S LAST FIGHT	921
On the left of the picture a Friar is blessing the chief before he sets out to fight the English. In the middle, the chief is riding to battle; on the right, the English soldiers are defeating him and his men; and in the foreground he falls mortally wounded.
RECEPTION OF SIR HENRY SIDNEY BY THE MAYOR AND ALDERMEN OF DUBLIN ON HIS RETURN FROM VICTORY	921
ASKEATON CASTLE, COUNTY LIMERICK (from a photograph)	923
Askeaton was a stronghold of the Desmonds.
REMAINS OF YOUGHAL COLLEGIATE CHURCH, AND RALEGH'S HOUSE	924
The collegiate church at Youghal was founded in 1464 by Thomas, eighth Earl of Desmond. The view here reproduced, of its ruined east end, was taken by W. H. Bartlett early in the present century; the church has since been restored. Its lands formed part of the 12,000 acres in counties Cork and Waterford granted by Elizabeth to Raleigh in 1585, as a part of her policy in the reduction and settlement of Munster. The house in the background (now called Myrtle Grove), built by the Earl of Desmond in 1564, became Raleigh's dwelling-place, and the first potatoes grown in Ireland were propagated by him in its garden.

	PAGE
DUNLUCE CASTLE, ANTRIM (from a photograph)	925
Dunluce was a fortress of the Macdonells, Earls of Antrim, till Sir John Perrott occupied it with an English garrison in 1585. It stands on a basaltic rock, separated from the mainland (the north coast of Antrim) by a deep chasm, spanned by a bridge, of which only one side now remains, and which was the only approach to the castle.
REVERSE OF SECOND GREAT SEAL OF ELIZABETH, 1586	926
The first English great seal on which is figured the harp, the badge of Ireland.
LONDONDERRY	928
Reduced from a drawing, c. 1680, among the King's Maps in the British Museum.
LAST MEDAL STRUCK (1602) TO CELEBRATE ELIZABETH'S TRIUMPHS	929
These medals are very rare. One of them is in the possession of Lord Walsingham, by whose kind permission this reproduction has been made from a facsimile given by him to the British Museum. The inscription on the obverse is "Cadet a latere tuo mille et decem millia a dextris tuis" ("A thousand shall fall beside thee, and ten thousand at thy right hand"). That on the reverse is "Castis diadema perenne" ("For the chaste an everlasting crown"). Possibly the symbols on the reverse may be a reminiscence of trampling under foot the adder and the dragon; or they may merely be an expression in the most picturesque and extreme form of the invulnerability of those that are clothed in chastity.
QUEEN ELIZABETH	931
From a photograph, taken specially for this book, of the effigy on her tomb in Westminster Abbey.
MONUMENT TO JOHN STOWE	935
Stowe, a tailor by trade, is famous as the historian and topographer of London. He died in 1605, and this monument was placed by his widow over his tomb in the church of S. Andrew Undershaft, Leadenhall Street. It is of veined English alabaster, with black marble introduced in the frieze, and a white marble plinth. The use of English alabaster seems to prove it to be of native workmanship. The quill pen placed in the hand of the figure has had to be replaced many times, having been stolen by visitors who imagined it to be the identical one with which Stowe wrote his chronicles. The decoration on the sides is mostly allegorical; ornaments made of books, crossed ink-horns, bones and shovels, the flame rising from a lamp, and a skull. The coat of arms above is of very singular design. The monument, the detail of which it is peculiarly difficult to see in its actual position, has been drawn specially for this book.
ILLUSTRATION ON TITLE-PAGE OF "COMMONPLACES OF CHRISTIAN RELIGION," 1563	938
PREACHING BEFORE THE KING AND PRINCE OF WALES AT PAUL'S CROSS, 1616 (picture in the collection of the Society of Antiquaries)	939
This "Cross," or pulpit, was built (on the site of an earlier one) towards the end of the fourteenth century. The frame was of timber, the steps of stone, the roof of lead. It was razed by order of Parliament in 1642-3; preaching in it had ceased in 1633. The picture represents Dr. John King, Bishop of London, preaching in 1616 before the King, Queen, and Prince of Wales, who are seated in a sort of bay jutting out from the gallery facing the spectator.
COLONEL HUTCHINSON AND HIS SON (Picture by R. Walker, formerly at Oathorpe)	940
"THE ENGLISH GENTLEMAN" (Braithwait, "The English Gentleman," second edition, 1633)	942

	PAGE
"THE ENGLISH GENTLEWOMAN" (Braithwait , " The English Gentlewoman ," 1631)	943
A PURITAN FAMILY	944
Frontispiece to a music-book, "Tenor of the whole Psalms in 4 Parts . . . set forth for the increase of vertue and the abolishynge of other vayne and tryflyng ballades," London 1563.
JOHN MILTON, AGED TEN YEARS (Picture by Cornelius Janssen, in the possession of Mr. Edgar Disney, of the Hyde, Ingatestone)	945
ORGAN POSITIVE; EARLY SEVENTEENTH CENTURY (South Kensington Museum)	940
The organ on which Milton played was probably an instrument of this kind. It was called "positive," as being intended to occupy a fixed position on a stand or table, unlike the earlier "portative" shown in p. 396.
THE MOTHER OF OLIVER CROMWELL	949
From an original portrait in the possession of Mrs. Russell Astley, of Chequers Court, who has kindly had it photographed for reproduction in this book. Mrs. Cromwell was Elizabeth, daughter of William Steward, of Ely.
BRASS OF HUMPHRY WILLIS, ESQ.	950
Humphry Willis died in 1618, aged twenty-eight years. This memorial of him, placed in Wells Cathedral by his widow, is a curious illustration of Puritan modes of thought. The dead man's shield, charged with the arms of his family, hangs behind him on a shattered tree labelled "Broken, not dead, I live in hope"; to the plumed hat, the buckled shoes, the broken sword, the cards and dice, the tennis-racket and the viol, which he leaves behind him, he exclaims, "Vain things, farewell"; instead of them he turns to the "Armour of God" and the "Word of Life," praying, "Give me these, O Lord"; an angel replies, "To him that asketh, it shall be given," and holds out the book of life, while another, holding a crown, says, "Take it, thou hast conquered." The two birds and the hand in the upper corner may represent the Christian soul and its refuge, figured by the dove sheltered in Noah's ark.
JOHN BUNYAN (Drawing by Robert White, in British Museum)	951
A FAMILY MEAL, EARLY SEVENTEENTH CENTURY (Ballad in Roxburghe Collection, British Museum)	952
THOMAS CARTWRIGHT (S. Clark, "Lives of Eminent Persons")	954
RICHARD HOOKER (Picture in National Portrait Gallery)	956
JOHN WHITGIFT, ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY (Engraving by G. Vertue)	959
RICHARD BANCROFT, ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY (Engraving by G. Vertue)	960
GEORGE ABBOT, ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY (Engraving by Simon Pass)	961
AN ENGLISH PRINTING OFFICE, 1619	964
From the title-page of R. Pont (Pontanus,) "De Sabbaticorum annorum periodis Digestio," printed by William Jones, 1619.
LEICESTER'S HOSPITAL, WARWICK	965
A most interesting group of buildings. The gate is the old west gate of the town, and dates from the thirteenth century; the tower was added by Thomas Beauchamp, Earl of Warwick, under Richard II. Close beside the gate the united gilds of Holy Trinity, S. Mary and S. George reared their Hall, in the sixth year of Richard's reign. In 37 Hen. VIII. the gild was dissolved; in 4 Ed. VI. the hall was granted to Sir Nicolas Le Strange; under Mary it passed into the hands of the bailiff and burgesses; these conveyed it in 1571 to the Earl of Leicester, and he turned it into a "Maison-Dieu," or hospital, for a master and twelve brethren, and appointed Thomas Cartwright the first master.
"THE MAP OF MOCK-BEGGAR HALL, WITH HIS SITUATION IN THE SPACIOUS COUNTRY CALLED ANYWHERE" (Roxburghe Ballad)	966
At the close of Elizabeth's reign, and throughout the reign of James I. and the early years of Charles, there was much complaining in the rural districts because the nobles and gentry flocked up to London, leaving their country houses empty and neglected, so that where in former times there had been feasting for rich and poor alike, a beggar could not now get a crust of bread. To the houses thus deserted was given the nickname of "Mock-beggar Hall." One result of this gathering to the Court was that for the first time news of the doings there were carried back to every district throughout England, and thus became a matter of criticism to the country at large.

	PAGE
IGNATIUS DE LOYOLA (Rose, "S. Ignatius de Loyola")	968
From a picture by Coello, in the house of the Jesuits at Madrid.
"FISHING FOR SOULS," 1614 (picture by Adrian van de Venne, in the Museum at Amsterdam)	970
An allegorical representation of the religious strife of the time. On the left of the spectator is a group of Protestants, in the midst of them preachers in boats, one of whom holds up to the men in the water around a Bible inscribed "Evangelio Piscatores, 1614"; the ships on the right are filled with Catholic bishops, priests, and monks, and the Catholics are grouped on the shore near them. Many of the figures are portraits.
GEORGE HERBERT (Engraving by Robert White)	972
JAMES I. (Picture by P. van Somer in National Portrait Gallery)	975
CONVOCAION, 1623-4 (Contemporary print in British Museum)	977
THE NATION AND ITS RIOTOUS GOVERNORS, 1603 (satirical print in the British Museum)	978
The figures of the various people striving to mount the ass which represents England, of the poor man who begs the judge to supersede them, and of the judge who wisely declines to meddle in the fray, illustrate not merely the costume but also the temper of the people with whom James had to deal at the beginning of his reign, and their view of the political situation.
QUEEN ELIZABETH OPENING PARLIAMENT (R. Glover "Nobilitas politica et civilis," 1608)	982
This is probably the earliest authentic representation of a meeting of the House of Lords; for in that on p. 445 there is a confusion of dates, and the Peers gathered round Henry VIII. in p. 691 are evidently very informally grouped. In the present illustration the arrangement of the House, save that the mitred abbots have disappeared, is much the same as in Edward IV.'s time. The chair on the Queen's right is marked "Rex Scociæ," that on her left "Princeps Walliæ." The 17 bishops sit on the right side of the House (viewed from the throne), 29 lay peers on the left; the judges are in the middle; immediately before the throne stand the Treasurer and the Marshal; in the rear are some of the peers' eldest sons; and at the bar stands a deputation of the Commons, presenting their newly-chosen Speaker to the Queen.
UNITE OF JAMES I.	984
James I. issued coins similar to those already in use in England; but he also issued in 1604, beside the sovereign, a gold coin of the same value, called the unite, which commemorated the union of England and Scotland by the legend "King of Great Britain" (instead of "England and Scotland"), "France and Ireland" on the obverse, and "I will make them one people" on the reverse. Its value was afterwards raised to 22s. The specimen here figured (from the British Museum) dates from 1612-1619.
HENRY, PRINCE OF WALES (miniature by Isaac Oliver, at Windsor Castle)	985
Henry, eldest son of James I., was born in 1594 and died in 1612.
THE GUNPOWDER PLOTTERS	987
From the title-page of a German tract, "Warhafftige und eigentliche Beschreibung der Verrätherei," &c., published at Frankfurt in 1606, by the brothers De Bry, who were in London at the time of the Plot.
FRONT OF HOUSE OF SIR PAUL PINDAR	988
Formerly in Bishopsgate Without, London; built in 1600 by Sir Paul Pindar, a great Levant merchant, who was sent by James I. as ambassador to Turkey from 1611 to 1620. The house was demolished in 1890, when its front was removed to the South Kensington Museum, where it is now preserved. Its lower part had been altered so that restoration was impossible; the windows have been filled with modern glass, of a 17th century pattern; in the engraving this has been replaced by the simpler glazing which is shown in an old drawing of the house.
ARMS OF THE LEVANT COMPANY (Hazlitt, "Livery Companies of London")	989
The Company of Levant or Turkey merchants was incorporated by Queen Elizabeth.

	PAGE
ARMS OF THE AFRICAN COMPANY (Hazlitt, "Livery Companies")	989
This Company was first incorporated in 1588; secondly, in 1662, under the name of "The Company of Royal Adventurers of England and Africa," and finally in 1672, as "The Royal African Company." Its success was small, owing to the opposition of the Dutch.
ORIGINAL ARMS OF THE EAST INDIA COMPANY	990
Mr. F. C. Danvers has kindly lent this illustration from his paper on the "India Office Records." The first charter granted to the East India Company by Elizabeth in 1600 gave them the exclusive privilege of trading to the Indies for fifteen years. In May 1601 they ordered their treasurer "to paye to the Kyng of Heraldes the some of Twentie merkes for assigninge a Armes to the Companie by vertue of his Office." In July, finding their voyage round the Cape hindered by Dutch and Spanish ships, they determined to seek a north-west passage to India; some interesting records of this scheme are preserved. At first they traded only with Java, Sumatra, and the neighbouring isles; in 1608 they sent ships to Surat and Cambay, and thus began a trade with India proper, where Surat became their chief seat. The earliest extant document from abroad relating to the Company's business is a translation of the Articles granted by the King of Achin to the subjects of the Queen of England, for free entry and trade in his dominions.
COURT OF WARDS AND LIVERIES, TEMP. ELIZABETH	991
From the engraving in "Vestusta Monumenta" of a picture in the collection of the Duke of Richmond. The date appears to be c. 1580-98. At the head of the table sits the Master of the Court (who at that time was Lord Burleigh), with the mace on the table beside him; right and left of him sit two judges, probably acting as his assessors; next to these sit, on the right the Surveyor, on the left the Attorney of the Court; next to the Surveyor is the Receiver-General reading a scroll, and beyond him the Usher with his rod; opposite are the Auditor, and the Messenger wearing his badge; facing the Master stand three clerks, and behind them two Serjeants.
CRESSET, SEVENTEENTH CENTURY (Tower of London)	992
MONUMENT OF RICHARD HUMBLE, ALDERMAN OF LONDON, AND HIS FAMILY	993
In the church of S. Mary Overie (also called S. Saviour), Southwark. Richard Humble died in 1616; this tomb, erected by his only surviving child, is one of the two canopied monuments in London, and has therefore been drawn specially for this book. The Alderman's two wives kneel behind him; below are represented, on one side his four daughters, on the other his two sons.
THE BELLMAN OF LONDON, 1616	994
From the title-page of a tract or broadside, "The Bellman of London," 1616, in the Bagford Collection (British Museum). Some forty years later Samuel Pepys writes in his Diary:—"I staid up till the bellman came by with his bell just under my window, as I was writing this very line, and cried, 'Past one of the clock, and a cold, frosty, windy morning.'"
OLD TOWN HALL, HEREFORD	995
From a facsimile, published by the Camden Society, of a MS. "History from Marble," compiled by Thomas Dingley in the reign of Charles II. The Hereford Town-hall was built in 1618-20 by John Abell, who was considered the master-builder of the 17th century, and who was appointed "one of his Majesty's carpenters" during the defence of Hereford at the siege of 1643. The building is now destroyed. Dingley gives a curious account of it:—"This is a fair Timber Structure supported by columns of wood. Here sit the Judges of Assize over the Piazza or Walk. In the uppermost part of this building are Chambers for the several Corporaçons of this city with their Arms, and these proper verses of Scripture and devices over their Doors. "The Skinners have the representation of Adam and Eve, and these words:—Unto Adam also and to his wife did the Lord God make coats of skin, and clothed them.—Gen. ch. 3 ver. 21. "The Tanners this:—Send therefore to Joppa and call hither Simon whose surname is Peter; he is lodged in the house of one Symon a Tanner, by, &c.—Acts 10 v. 32. "Butchers, the motto:—Omnia subjecisti sub pedibus, oves & boves."—Psal. 8 v. 6 and 7. “Glovers :—They wandred about in sheepskins and goatskins, being destitute, &c.—Heb. ch. 11 v. 37.

“Bakers :—Give us day by day our daily bread.—Luke 11 v. 3^d.

“Cloathiers or Cloath Workers . . . have this motto :—My trust is in God alone, besides about their chamber these verses (I suppose sett up by one John Lewis, once master of the Company here), in old English Character, such as it is :—

“Cloathing doth other trades exceed as farr
As splendid Sol outshines the dullest starr,
By it the poor doe gain their lively hood
Who otherwise might starve for want of Food.
Farmers by it make money and do pay
Their Landlords duly on the very day.
The Clothiers they grow rich, shopkeepers thrive,
The Winter's worsted and man kept alive.
Advance but Clothing and we need not sayle
To Colchus against dragons to prevayle
Or yoke wild Bulls to gain the Golden Fleece,
As Jason did who stray'd so far from Greece.
Promote the Staple Trade with Skill and Art
The Fleece of Gold will satisfye your heart, Concenter that the Weever may go on,
John Lewis swears by Jove it shall be done.”

TWO JUDGES, TEMP. ELIZABETH (MS. Add. 28330) To face p. 996

SIR EDWARD COKE (Engraved Portrait by David Loggan) 997

“KNIPERDOLING” 998

From a sketch by Inigo Jones, by whom the costumes, scenery, and stage contrivances for the Court masques under James I. and Charles I. were nearly all designed; the examples of his sketches here given are from the Shakespeare Society's facsimiles of originals in the collection of the Duke of Devonshire. Kniperdoling, or Knipperdolling, was a cobbler and a prophet of great repute among the Anabaptists in the time of John of Leyden (early 16th century). The figure to which his name has been given by I. Jones was evidently designed for some Court masque, and intended as a satire upon the sectaries. It thus illustrates the contemptuous attitude of the Court towards the people.

GROUP FROM THE MASQUE OF “THE FORTUNATE ISLES” 999

By Inigo Jones. This masque was performed at Court on Twelfth Night, 1626. The characters here represented are an “Airy Spirit,” “Scogan,” “Skelton” (said to have been poets of the 15th century), and “A Brother of the Rosy Cross.”

“CADE” 1000

Sketched by Inigo Jones, probably for the part of Jack Cade in Shakespeare's “Henry VI.,” Part 2. In this figure, as in that of Knipperdolling, Jones was evidently making a mock, for the entertainment of the court, at a popular leader. Cade's attitude is that of drunken bravado; his tattered trousers contrast absurdly with his plumed head-piece, which is a “sallet” or “salad,” a peculiarly shaped helmet worn in Cade's time, but already uncommon in that of Shakespeare (who has a punning allusion to the double meaning of its name; “Henry VI.,” Part 2, Act iv. Sc. x.), and all but obsolete in that of Jones.

ROBERT CARR AND FRANCES HOWARD, EARL AND COUNTESS OF SOMERSET (contemporary print in British Museum) 1001

ROBERT CECIL, EARL OF SALISBURY (engraving by Elstrak) 1003

GERMAN CROSSBOW } c. 1600 (Tower of London) 1004
ARBALEST

The later crossbows were mostly made in Germany; some of them were highly ornamented. The second of those here figured is inlaid with ivory. Crossbows are said to have been used in actual warfare for the last time by some of the English troops in the expedition to La Rochelle, in 1627; see below, p. 1033.

	PAGE
A CANNON, 1608	1005
From MS. Cotton Julius F. iv. (British Museum), a treatise on artillery, written 1608.
PIKEMAN, TEMP. JAMES I.	1006
MUSKETEER, TEMP. JAMES I.	1007
These two figures are from a broadside in the collection of the Society of Antiquaries.
A KNIGHT OF THE GARTER AND HIS USHER, 1623-5 (MS. Egerton 1264)	1008
TILE WITH ARMS AND CREST OF THE BACON FAMILY (South Kensington Museum)	1009
The initials N. B. on this tile represent Sir Nicholas Bacon, father of Francis.
CHARLES I. AS PRINCE OF WALES (miniature by Peter Oliver, at Windsor Castle)	1012
ROCKING-HORSE OF CHARLES I.	1013
From the Old Palace, Theobald's Grove; now in the Great House, Cheshunt.
THE LORD MAYOR OF LONDON, HIS SWORD-BEARER, AND PURSE-BEARER, 1623-5 (MS. Egerton 1264)	1014
THE LADY MAYORESS AND HER ATTENDANTS, 1623-5 (MS. Egerton 1264)	1015
ENTRY OF PRINCE CHARLES INTO MADRID, 1623 (contemporary German print)	1016
PRINCE CHARLES'S WELCOME HOME FROM SPAIN (broadside in collection of Society of Antiquaries)	1018
THE ENGLISH COUNCIL OF WAR, 1623-4 (broadside in same collection)	1020
HALBERT } SEVENTEENTH CENTURY (Tower of London)	1021
CATCHPOLE }
CHARLES I. OPENING PARLIAMENT (contemporary print in British Museum)	1022
An adaptation of the older engraving reproduced in p. 982. The alteration in costume is noticeable.
ST. GERMANS CHURCH AND PORT ELIOT	1025
SIR JOHN ELIOT (picture in the possession of the Earl of St. Germans, at Port Eliot)	1026
GEORGE VILLIERS, DUKE OF BUCKINGHAM (from W. J. Delff's engraving of a picture by Miereveldt)	1028
CHIEF JUSTICE CREW (after W. Hollar)	1031
MONUMENT OF SIR CHARLES MONTAGUE, 1625 (Gardiner, "Students' History of England")	1032
In Barking Church, Essex. A similar illustration of the tents and military accoutrements of the time occurs on a monument in S. Helen's Church, Bishopsgate, to the memory of Martin Bond, captain of the Trained Bands of London, who died in 1643.
SHIPS OF BUCKINGHAM'S FLEET (" A manifestation of the Duke of Buckingham. " 1627).	1033
FACSIMILE OF A PAGE FROM THE ACCOUNT-BOOK OF THE COOPERS' COMPANY OF LONDON, 1576 (Haslitt, "Livery Companies")	1034
An illustration of the elaborate care and artistic skill which the great manufacturing and trading companies bestowed upon their documents and records. The influence of these companies (among whom the Coopers were one of the most important) on both local and central government was at this time very great. The Coopers' Company dates from the fourteenth century; its extant records and accounts begin in 1439.
THE HOUSE OF COMMONS, TEMP. CHARLES I.	1036
From " Discours du bon et loial subject de la Grande Bretagne à la Roynne de ce Pays, " Paris, 1648.
A SUPPER-PARTY, EARLY SEVENTEENTH CENTURY (Roxburghe Ballad)	1038

	PAGE
"TRIPLE EPISCOPACIE" (Tract , 1641)	1040
The minister called "of God" is evidently a Puritan; the other two figures are caricatures of Laud, and the whole illustrates the popular feeling about him and his proceedings.
HAYMAKERS, EARLY SEVENTEENTH CENTURY (Roxburghe Ballad)	1042
MAP OF THE AMERICAN COLONIES IN 1640	1044
SIR HUMPHRY GILBERT (engraving by C. van de Pas in Holland's "Herologia")	1045
A FAMILY GROUP, EARLY SEVENTEENTH CENTURY (Roxburghe Ballad)	1046
JOHN SMITH, GOVERNOR OF VIRGINIA	1047
From the map of New England in his "Generall Historie of Virginia," London, 1624.
GEORGE CALVERT, FIRST LORD BALTIMORE (picture in the Earl of Verulam's collection at Gorhambury)	1048
The first Lord Baltimore planned the settlement of Maryland, which was carried into effect by his son.
MEDAL OF LORD AND LADY BALTIMORE, 1632 (British Museum)	1049
A very rare silver medal, with portraits of Cecil Calvert, second Lord Baltimore, and Anne Arundell, his wife, in the year in which Charles I. granted him the province of Maryland.
GRAVE OF THOMAS CLARK, MATE OF THE "MAYFLOWER," D. 1627 (Harper's Magazine)	1050
On Burial Hill, New Plymouth, Massachusetts.
ALLYN HOUSE, NEW PLYMOUTH (W. Tudor's "Life of James Otis," Boston, Massachusetts, 1823)	1051
Built by one of the Pilgrim Fathers; demolished 1826.
AN ENGLISH CITIZEN RIDING WITH HIS WIFE	1052
From MS. Egerton 1269 (British Museum), the Album of Tobias Oelhafen, a citizen of Nuremberg who visited England in 1623-5.
RURAL SCENE, MID-SEVENTEENTH CENTURY (Roxburghe Ballad)	1053
WILLIAM LAUD, ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY (picture by Vandyck)	1054
BRASS OF SAMUEL HARSNETT, ARCHBISHOP OF YORK	1056
On his tomb in Chigwell Church, Essex; here reproduced from the frontispiece to Mr. Gordon Goodwin's Catalogue of the Harsnett Library, Colchester. Harsnett died in 1631. The brass is an interesting illustration of the revived use of the old ecclesiastical vestments at this period; it represents the archbishop in full pontificals, with stole, alb, dalmatic, cope, mitre and pastoral staff, and is the latest known example of an English prelate thus arrayed.
A SCHOOLMASTER, EARLY SEVENTEENTH CENTURY	1057
From the frontispiece to a Latin comedy, "Pedantius," written in the latter years of Elizabeth for performance at Trinity College, Cambridge, but not printed till 1631. Its author, whom the figure of "Pedantius" is thought to represent, was Dr. Thomas Beard, master of the Hospital at Huntingdon, and also of the Grammar School, where Oliver Cromwell was one of his pupils. From 1625 till his death in 1632 he held, together with these offices, that of Lecturer at one of the churches in the town, where he was in great repute among the Puritans. After his death the lecture was suppressed by Laud.
MINSTRELS OUTSIDE A TAVERN, EARLY SEVENTEENTH CENTURY (Roxburghe Ballad)	1058
THE COMPLAINTS OF "NICK FROTH" AND "RULEROST" AGAINST THE PURITAN OBSERVANCE OF SUNDAY	1059
From the title-page of a tract, "The lamentable complaints of Nick Froth the tapster and Rulerost the cooke, concerning the constraint lately set forth against drinking, pottting, and piping on the Sabbath day, and against selling meate," 1541. In that year the Puritan House of Commons issued, as a counterblast to the Book of Sports, a prohibition of all feasting, merrymaking, and opening of taverns on Sunday.
WILLIAM JUXON, BISHOP OF LONDON AND ARCHBISHOP OF CANTERBURY (from an engraving by H. D. Thielcke)	1061

	PAGE
"COACH AND SEDAN" (Tract , 1636)	1062
LAMBETH PALACE CHAPEL, LOOKING WEST	1063
The ceiling is Laud's work ; the stalls and the screen were probably erected by his friend and successor, Juxon, at the Restoration, after the chapel had been again ruined under the Commonwealth.
CHARLES I. (Q.R. Miscell. Books , III, Public Record Office)	1066
IRISH SOLDIERS IN THE SERVICE OF GUSTAVUS ADOLPHUS (German Broadside , 1631, in British Museum)	1068
GUSTAVUS ADOLPHUS (from an engraving by Delft, after a picture by Miereveldt)	1069
MAP OF LONDON (Loftie , " History of London ") To face p.	1071
ALDERMAN ABEL, PATENTEE AND MONOPOLIST, 1641, AND HIS WIFE	1072
From a broadside, dated 1641, "An exact legendary compendiously containing the whole life of Alderman Abel, the maine Proiector and Patentee for the raising of wines." Beginning life as apprentice to a vintner, Abel rose to great wealth and importance in the city. The site of his house, the "Ship" in Old Fish Street, had once belonged to Cardinal Wolsey, and it was popularly said that in excavating its cellars he had found some of the Cardinal's hidden treasure. In 1637 he and his cousin Richard Kilvert were joined in a patent whereby the London Vintners obtained a monopoly of the sale of wines by retail. A Parliamentary proclamation put an end to this monopoly, and led to the downfall of its projectors, in 1641.
LONDON FROM THE RIVER, EARLY SEVENTEENTH CENTURY (from an engraving by Cornelius Jan Visscher)	1073
FLYING FROM THE PLAGUE, 1630	1074
From a broadside, "Looking-glass for town and country," in the collection of the Societies of Antiquaries. The town complains that people are deserting it through fear of the plague.
AN ENGLISH KITCHENMAID, 1644 (Hollar , " Ornatus Muliebris Anglicanus ") .	1075
BURFORD PRIORY, OXFORDSHIRE	1076
Built on the site of an Austin Priory by Harman, barber-surgeon to Henry VIII. ; enlarged by Chief Justice Tanfield, temp. Elizabeth ; birthplace of his grandson Lord Falkland ; he sold it to Lenthall, afterwards Speaker of the Long Parliament, who built the chapel (1661-62).
LADY OF THE ENGLISH COURT, 1643 (Hollar , " Ornatus Muliebris Anglicanus ")	1077
AN ENGLISH LADY IN WINTER DRESS, 1644 (Hollar , " Aula Veneris ")	1078
THOMAS WENTWORTH, EARL OF STRAFFORD (engraved by O. Lacour, after a picture by Vandyck in the possession of Sir Philip Grey-Egerton, Bart., of Oulton Park, Cheshire)	1080
ROOM IN MALAHIDE CASTLE (after W. H. Bartlett)	1082
The site of Malahide, four miles from Dublin, was granted by Henry II. to an ancestor of the Talbot family. The room here figured seems to have been decorated in the early part of the seventeenth century. It is panelled with dark Irish oak, richly carved with small figures, mostly of Scriptural subjects.
JAMES USHER, ARCHBISHOP OF ARMAGH (from Vertue's engraving of a picture by Sir Peter Lely)	1083
STONE CANDLESTICK, dated 1634 (Antiquarian Museum, Edinburgh)	1085
In the form of a Roman altar ; one of a pair, seemingly of Scotch manufacture.
MAP OF MODERN SCOTLAND	1086
A SCOTSWOMAN, TEMP. CHARLES I. (Hollar , " Ornatus Muliebris Anglicanus ," 1649)	1087
TRAQUAIR CASTLE, PEEBLES-SHIRE	1090
The best example now remaining of Scottish domestic architecture, unaltered since the seventeenth century. It was probably built, or at least completed, by the Earl of Traquair who was Lord High Treasurer of Scotland in 1635.
CHRIST'S COLLEGE, CAMBRIDGE, IN THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY	1092
From Loggan's " Cantabrigia Illustrata ," 1688. Save for the block of buildings at rear, added in 1642, the college could then have been scarcely altered since Milton's time ; it has been greatly altered since Loggan's. The tree in the middle of the Fellows' Garden (behind the new building) is a mulberry which Milton is said to have planted, and which remains to this day.

	PAGE
JOHN MILTON AGED 21 (from Vertue's engraving, 1731, of a picture then in the possession of Speaker Onslow)	1093
FIGURES DESIGNED BY INIGO JONES FOR A MASQUE (Shakespeare Society's facsimile)	1095
LUDLOW CASTLE IN THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY	1096
From a drawing by Thomas Dineley in his "Account of the Official Progress of Henry first Duke of Beaufort through Wales, 1684," a MS. in the possession of the Duke of Beaufort. The drawing is here reproduced by permission from the facsimile published by Messrs. Blades, East, and Blades.
JOHN PRYNNE (after W. Hollar)	1097
THE "SOVEREIGN OF THE SEAS" (contemporary print by John Payne)	1098
This ship was built for the Royal Navy in 1637.
JOHN HAMPDEN (portrait in collection of the Earl of St. Germans, at Port Eliot)	1100
JOHN BASTWICK } (after W. Hollar)	1102
HENRY BURTON }
FACSIMILE OF PART OF THE SCOTTISH NATIONAL COVENANT, 1638 (Antiquarian Museum, Edinburgh)	1104
ALEXANDER LESLIE, EARL OF LEVEN (picture by Vandyck)	1107
PARLIAMENT HOUSE, EDINBURGH	1108
From the middle of the sixteenth century the Scottish Parliament, the Courts of Justice, and the Town Council of Edinburgh, had all held their sittings in a building almost on the same site as the hall here represented, which was built in 1632-39 by subscriptions raised in Edinburgh by order of the Town Council, owing to a threat that Parliament and the Courts should be removed from the city unless better accommodation were provided for them. After the extinction of the Scottish Parliament in 1707, the hall was divided by partitions into booths occupied by small traders; it has since been used as a vestibule to the Court Rooms which form the several judicial chambers of the Court of Session.
JOHN PYM (miniature by Samuel Cooper in the collection of Mrs. Russell-Astley, at Chequers Court)	1112
CHARLES I. IN THE HOUSE OF LORDS ("Discours du bon et loial subject," 1648)	1114
The Chancellor stands behind the King on the right, the treasurer on the left; the Grand Chamberlain holds the crown, the Constable the sword; in the foreground are a herald and an usher; some of the peers are grouped around.
THE PARLIAMENT HOUSE AND WESTMINSTER HALL, TEMP. CHARLES I. (after W. Hollar)	1116
One of the very few existing views of the old House of Parliament. The building was originally a chapel, founded by King Stephen in honour of his patron saint, and refounded by Edward III. as a collegiate church attached to the royal palace of Westminster. After the suppression of the college under Edward IV., the chapel became the meeting place of the House of Commons, whose sessions had hitherto been held in the chapter-house of the Abbey. The Commons continued to meet in St. Stephen's chapel till 1834, when it was burnt down; only the crypt now remains.
LAMBETH PALACE (after W. Hollar, 1647)	1118
TRIAL OF STRAFFORD (after W. Hollar)	1120
EXECUTION OF STRAFFORD (after W. Hollar)	1122
JAMES GRAHAME, EARL (AFTERWARDS MARQUIS) OF MONTROSE (from an engraving by Faed of a picture by Honthorst)	1125
LUCIUS CARY, VISCOUNT FALKLAND (Picture by Franz Hals, in the collection of Lord Arundell of Wardour)	1127
SIR EDMUND VERNEY	1128
Ever since Charles was thirteen, Sir Edmund Verney (who was ten years older) had been in his household; since Charles's accession to the Crown, he had been Knight Marshal of the Palace; he was appointed Standard-bearer to the King in August, 1642, vowed that "By the grace of God, they that could wrest that standard from his hand must first wrest his soul from his body," and kept his vow; the standard was taken at Edgehill out of the rigid clasp of a dead man's hand. The picture here reproduced is among the Verney family portraits at Claydon House; it was painted by Vandyck for Charles I. as a present to Sir Edmund. He is represented with his Marshal's staff; the headpiece on the table beside him is a "Pott for the Hedde," which he ordered to be made and sent after him when on the march to Scotland with Charles in 1639, but it was so difficult to get one made big enough that he never received it till the expedition was at an end, whereupon he wrote to his son "I will now keepe it to boyle my porrage in."

PAGE

- "THE CARELESSE NON-RESIDENT" 113C
 From the title-page of a tract, "A Remonstrance against the Non-residents of Great Britain," 1642. Shows how long the popular feeling against pluralists had existed before the system was abolished in 1838. The figure gives the dress of an English clergyman in the middle of the seventeenth century.
- PROCTOR AND PARATOR 113I
 From the title-page of a tract, "The Proctor and Parator, their Mourning, or the Lamentation of Doctors' Commons at their downfall; being a true Dialogue relating the fearfull abuses and exorbitances of those spirituall courts," 1641.
- WILLIAM LENTHALL, SPEAKER OF THE LONG PARLIAMENT to face p. 1133
 From a water-colour copy (in the Sutherland collection, Bodleian Library), by Thomas Athow, of a picture formerly at Burford Priory, the home of the Lenthalls.
- FACSIMILE OF PART OF SIR RALPH VERNEY'S NOTES OF THE LONG PARLIAMENT 1134
 Reproduced, by permission, from Lady Verney's "Memoirs of the Verney Family." Sir Ralph (son of Sir Edmund represented in p. 1128; see above) was present as member for Aylesbury, in the House of Commons when Charles went to seize the five members. The account of the scene given in the text is derived from the notes here reproduced.
- AN ENGLISH ARCHER (Gervase Markham, "Art of Archerie," 1634) 1135 Seemingly meant to represent the King himself.
- WILLIAM CAVENDISH, EARL (AFTERWARDS DUKE) OF NEWCASTLE (from Holl's engraving of a picture by Vandyck in the collection of Earl Spencer) 1137
- MILITIAMEN, TEMP. CHARLES I. (contemporary tract) 1138
- MEDAL OF SIR JOHN HOTHAM 1139
 A unique medal (silver) in the British Museum; by Thomas Simon, a medallist who worked for the Parliamentary party. Sir J. Hotham was accused of treason to the Parliament in 1644, and beheaded January 2, 1645. This medal was a memorial executed for his family and friends, according to a custom very general at that time.
- REVERSE OF SECOND GREAT SEAL OF CHARLES I. 1140
 This seal, used in 1627-1640, is the finest of the three seals of Charles I. Its obverse shows the King on his throne; the spirited figure on the reverse represents him as the type of a dashing Cavalier soldier, in striking contrast with the Puritan warrior portrayed on the seal of Oliver Cromwell (p. 1247). Compare the whole conception of this seal with that of the Commonwealth (pp. 1220-1221).
- ROBERT DEVEREUX, EARL OF ESSEX, GENERAL OF THE PARLIAMENTARY FORCES (after W. Hollar) 1142
- PRINCE RUPERT (from a mezzotint by himself) 1143
- PILLAR AND STAIRCASE LEADING TO HALL, CHRIST CHURCH, OXFORD . . . 1144
 A fine example of English architecture c. 1640.
- £3 GOLD PIECE OF CHARLES I., 1643 (British Museum) 1145
 During the years 1642-4 Charles issued some gold pieces, worth 60s. each. They seem to have been all coined at Oxford. The types vary; this one, the finest, is very rare. The legend, an abbreviation of "Religio Protestans, Leges Angliæ, Libertas Parliamenti," refers to the King's Declaration at Wellington, September 19, 1642, that he would preserve "the Protestant religion, the known laws of the land, and the just privileges of Parliament."
- SIR BEVIL GREENVIL (picture belonging to Mr. Bernard Grenville) 1147

	PAGE
AN ENGLISH TRADESMAN'S WIFE AND CITIZEN'S DAUGHTER (Hollar, "Aula Veneris," 1649)	1148
HIGHLAND DIRK, SEVENTEENTH CENTURY (Antiquarian Museum, Edinburgh)	1149
MOULD FOR COMMUNION-TOKENS	1150
STAMP FOR COMMUNION-TOKENS	1151
The use of "tokens" to be distributed by the minister or elders to intending communicants a day or two before the Communion Service, and by them returned when they came to the service, was first adopted by the French Calvinists in 1560. From them the practice soon spread among the Scottish Presbyterians. The French tokens were of lead; in Scotland written tickets seem to have been used at first, but early in the seventeenth century metallic tokens became common, and have remained in use till the present time, when cards are again superseding them. They were generally made of lead; sometimes of brass or tin. The earliest of them were square, about half an inch to one inch in diameter, and marked simply with the initial of the parish; in the seventeenth century they grew larger, to make room for the introduction of a date and a more elaborate monogram; then there grew up a custom of making new tokens, or recasting old ones, when a new minister came to a parish, and early in the eighteenth century it became usual to mark them with the minister's initials. The tokens were generally made under the personal superintendence of certain members of the kirk-session appointed for the purpose. Each kirk-session had its own mould, or stamp, for making them. The examples here given are reproduced, by permission, from the Rev. T. Burns's "Old Scottish Communion Plate." The first illustration shows the token-mould of Crail parish, open, and with a token in it. The second represents the token-stamp of Swinton parish, in its box, and with a token beside it. Both date from the seventeenth century.
THE SOLEMN LEAGUE AND COVENANT, 1643	1152
A reduced facsimile of an engraving by W. Hollar, containing the text of the Covenant with allegorical illustrations. In the first compartment, on each side of the title, is a group of men swearing to the Covenant with uplifted hands, beneath the text Jer. l. 5; the first article is illustrated by a preacher, with the text Deut. xxvi. 17, 18; the second, by a church door whence issues a procession of "coristers, singing-men, deanes and bishops," over whose heads is written Matt. xv. 13; the third stands between the Houses of Lords and Commons, with the text Is. iv. 5; the fourth between "A Malignant" and "A Priest," who are both being led to punishment; over their heads is a text from Ez. xx. 38. The fifth article is illustrated by three men, representing England, Scotland, and Ireland, holding three strands of one rope, with the text from Eccles. iv. 12; the sixth, by a man, from whose mouth issue the words "Breake the Covenant," having his hands and feet bound by another who answers "O no, no," while over them is an inscription from Dan. xi. 28: at the foot of the last article is a church, to which a man points, with words from Micah iv. 2; another man addresses a third, "Come, let's go to the tavern," and a fourth man meets, with the words, "I am not hee," a woman who says "I am shee."
MEDAL OF EARL OF MANCHESTER (British Museum)	1153
A silver medal, very rare; issued as a military reward to his soldiers, and interesting for the view of the two Houses of Parliament on the reverse.
ORDER OF PARLIAMENT CONCERNING ARMS	1154
Reproduced, by kind permission of Miss Toulmin Smith, from a copy in her possession. This order, issued March 23, 1644 (1643, old style), is interesting on account of the "mark" or monogram, L. C. E., representing the Lords and Commons of England, beneath the crown whose authority they had taken to themselves.
THE EARL OF ESSEX (after W. Hollar)	1155
OLIVER CROMWELL (picture by Walker, at Hinchinbrook)	1156
PLAN OF THE BATTLE OF MARSTON MOOR	1158, 1159
MEMORIAL MEDAL OF THE EARL OF ESSEX, 1646 (British Museum)	1160
Silver; very rare.

	PAGE
"A LOVELY COMPANY"	1162, 1163, 1164, 1165, 1166
Cromwell's own description of his brigade (see p. 1162) is well illustrated by these figures, carved in wood on the staircase at Cromwell House, Highgate. This house—now used as a convalescent home in connexion with the Hospital for Sick Children in Great Ormonde Street—once belonged to John Ireton, alderman of London, and brother of Henry Ireton, who was Cromwell's son-in-law. One of the rooms has on its ceiling (partly burnt in 1865, but restored) a coat-of-arms which seems to be that of the Ireton family. The monogram I. C., on a mantelpiece in another room, and the same initials, with a small O between them, on a boundary stone let into the garden wall, have been supposed to represent "Ireton" and "Cromwell;" but it is much more probable that while the I may stand for either "Ireton" or "John," the C represents either the surname or the Christian name of the alderman's wife, and that the house, said to have been originally built in 1630, was re-decorated by him. The persistent but apparently groundless local tradition, that it was the home of his soldier brother, may well have been suggested by the character of the decorations. Two figures were destroyed at the Restoration; the nine which remain, placed as if on guard on the newels of the staircase, are unmistakably carved from the life; the originals were in all likelihood picked men of the New Model Army. They are: <ol style="list-style-type: none"> 1. Fifer. 2. Drummer. 3. Targeteer or rondelier, a kind of infantry thought by some leaders to be valuable against pikemen. 4. Officer of infantry, perhaps pikemen; a beautiful figure, with a very ornamental breastplate. That he is not a cavalry officer is shown by his iron skirts or tassets, which are unsuited for riding, and also by his having no spurs and no long steel gauntlet on his left hand. 5. Musketeer; a capital figure, the musket-stock very well carved. From earlier descriptions of these carvings before they were so much mutilated it is known that this man originally had a rest as well as a musket. 6. Pikeman; this figure formerly had a pike. As his sword is a short side-arm, he is not an officer. 7. Caliver-man. This figure had a caliver (a smaller piece than a musket) in the left hand; his armour and dress however are those of the typical pikeman, and as he has no bandolier or belt with little boxes of powder-charges hanging from it, he seems to have been an untidy man who carried his powder loose in his pocket. 8. Targeteer; this man formerly had a pike. 9 and 10. Musketeer (two views of the same figure). This man had a musket and a rest in his left hand, and still has his bandolier on his shoulder. The attitude with the hat off occurred in drill. It is curious that among these figures there is no light horseman, though the light horseman is specially associated with Cromwell. This deficiency is supplied by a figure given below, p. 1222.
THE STAIRCASE, CROMWELL HOUSE, HIGHGATE	1167
This staircase has very fine panels, each representing a different military device, while at the top, crowning all, is a panel with the emblems of victory, laurel-wreath and crossed olive-branches. This panel is given in the illustration, with one of the lower ones, representing a drum, halberts, and spear.
SIR THOMAS FAIRFAX (from an engraving by H. Hondius)	1169
THE TREATY-HOUSE, UXBRIDGE (drawing in Sutherland collection, Bodleian Library)	1170
BRIDGE AND BRIDGE-GATES, CHESTER, 1645	1171
A sketch made just before the siege, by Randle Holme, the third of four successive bearers of that name, whose hereditary home was in Bridge Street, Chester. The first Randle Holme was Deputy to the College of Arms for Cheshire, Shropshire, and North Wales, and was an adherent of the Parliament. His grandson, who was eighteen years old when he made this sketch, became Deputy Garter for Cheshire and North Wales under Charles II., though his devotion to the King was very doubtful. He lived till 1699. A large collection of antiquarian, genealogical and topographical MSS. relating to Cheshire was begun by his grandfather, continued by his father, himself, and his son; it now forms vols. 1920—2180 of the Harleian MSS. (British Museum). The sketch here reproduced is in vol. 2073.

	PAGE
PLAN OF THE BATTLE OF NASEBY	1172
JOHN PAULET, FIFTH MARQUIS OF WINCHESTER (from an engraving by R. Cooper after Peter Oliver)	1174
SMALL BRASS CANNON (Tower of London)	1175
One of a set given by the Armourers' Company of London to Charles I. for his son (afterwards Charles II.), to teach the boy the art of war.
"TWO UPSTART PROPHETS"	1177
From the title-page of a tract, "A discourse of the two infamous upstart prophets, Richard Farnham, weaver of White-Chappell, and John Bull, weaver of Saint Butolphs Aldgate," 1636.
JOHN LILBURNE (print, 1649, in British Museum)	1178
"THESE TRADESMEN ARE PREACHERS IN AND ABOUT THE CITY OF LONDON" (broadside, 1647, in British Museum)	1179
CHURCH AND CONVENTICLE, 1648	1181
Frontispiece to "A Glasse for the Times, by which according to the Scriptures, you may clearly behold the true Ministers of Christ, how farre differing from false Teachers. . . . Collected by T. C., a Friend to Truth," 1648.
BRISTOL CASTLE (Millard's Map of Bristol, 1763)	1183
The cannon on the walls show that the original drawing from which this view was copied must have been made between 1642, when the castle was put in condition for defence, and 1656, when it was dismantled.
A "PERSWASIVE" TO UNITY	1184
From a broadside, "A Pious and Seasonable Perswasive to the Sonnes of Zion, sovereignly useful for Composing their Unbrotherly Devisions," 1647.
DENZIL HOLLES (frontispiece, by R. White, to Holles's "Memoirs," 1699)	1186
ANDERSON'S PLACE, NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE	1187
The house in which Charles I. lodged.
BLACKSMITHS, MIDDLE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY (Roxburghe Ballad)	1188
COUNTRYMAN AND CITIZEN	1189
From the title-page of a tract, "The Countrymans Care, and the Citizens feare, in bringing up their Children in good Education; set forth in a Dialogue between a Citizen and a Country-man," 1641. The countryman is warned not to send his son to the University, because it is corrupted by Popish superstitions; not to make him a "minister of God's word," because "you may see Coblers and Tinkers, arising from the very Dunghill, beating the Pulpits as conformably as if they were Kings professors of Divinity;" such persons preach in barns. He is also advised not to make his son a divine, or, if he do, "he must have good care least the Archbishop doe not cut of his eares. But I will free you from that feare," adds the citizen, "for I tell once againe, there will be no more Bishops." The citizen ends by advising his friend to apprentice his son to a vintner, as the youth may thereby one day become an alderman—evidently an allusion to the career of Alderman Abel; see above, p. xci.
HENRY IRETON (from an engraving by Houbraken of a miniature by S. Cooper)	1190
PART OF A SUIT OF GILT ARMOUR GIVEN BY THE CITY OF LONDON TO CHARLES I. (Tower of London)	1191
GATEWAY OF CARISBROOK CASTLE (after J. M. W. Turner)	1195
"THE HUMBLE PETITION OF JOCK OF BRAID SCOTLAND" (title-page of a tract, 1648)	1196
Jock's Petition complains of the civil war and the disturbances in Scotland, and desires a better settlement of divine worship.
SIEGE-PIECE, COLCHESTER (British Museum)	1198
Cut out of some article of gold plate, stamped, and used instead of coin during the siege, 1648. Silver pieces were also made in the same way.
COLCHESTER CASTLE (after W. H. Bartlett)	1199
TRIAL OF CHARLES I. (Nelson, "A true Copy of the Journal of the High Court of Justice for the Tryal of King Charles I.," 1684)	1201
A is the King; B, Bradshaw, President of the Court; C, John Lisle, D, William Say, assistants to the president; E, Andrew Broughton, F, John

Phelps, clerks of the court ; G, the table, with the mace of the Commonwealth and the sword of state lying on it ; H, commissioners ; I, the achievement of the Commonwealth ; K, Cromwell ; L, Henry Martyn ; M, spectators ; N, the floor of the hall, matted and kept clear ; O, passage leading from the Court of Wards, through which the commissioners entered the hall ; P, guard attending the commissioners ; Q, guard attending the King ; R, passage railed off for the King between his seat and the stairs ; S, counsel for the Commonwealth ; S, stairs ; U, passage leading to Sir R. Cotton's house, where the King was confined ; W and X, passages kept clear by soldiers ; Y, spectators ; Z, officers.

PAGE

OLD LONDON BRIDGE IN XVII. CENTURY Frontispice to Vol. III.

Reproduced, by permission, from a photo-chromolithograph made for the New Shakspeare Society from a drawing in Pepys' Collection at Magdalene College, Cambridge. This is the earliest genuine view of London Bridge.

The bridge itself was built 1176-1209. Between the Middlesex shore and the first pier next that side stand the waterworks, built 1582. On the eighth pier stands the Bridge Chapel, dedicated to S. Thomas of Canterbury. The twelfth pier (seventh from the Surrey side) was formerly occupied by a draw-bridge tower, on the top of which traitors' heads were set. In 1576 this tower, "being in great decay," was taken down, and in its stead was put up, c. 1584, "a pleasant and beautiful dwelling-house," made entirely of wood, and called Nonesuch House. It was made in Holland, brought over in pieces, and put together entirely with wooden pegs. Between Nonesuch House and the next block of buildings is a wooden drawbridge, "to let masted or big boats through." On the third pier from the Surrey side is another curious wooden edifice, consisting of four round turrets, connected by a curtain and embattled, and enclosing several small habitations, with a broad covered passage beneath, the building itself overhanging the bridge on both sides; this dated from 1577-9. On the next pier stands Southwark, or Traitors' Gate, built at the same time; here the traitors' heads were placed after the demolition of the old drawbridge tower. The last two arches on the Surrey side are occupied by Southwark corn-mills, built c. 1588. The rest of the buildings on the bridge were dwelling-houses and shops.

OLIVER CROMWELL (from a contemporary Dutch print) To face p. 1204

8

FRONTISPIECE TO EIKON BASILIKE, 164- 1207

9

DROGHEDA (drawing, c. 1680, in British Museum) 1209

S. LAURENCE'S GATE, DROGHEDA (from a photograph) 1210

This, one other gate, and a fine piece of the south wall are the sole remnants left by Cromwell of the fortifications of Drogheda. It had once a complete circle of walls, and of gates no less than ten.

REGINALD'S TOWER, WATERFORD (after W. H. Bartlett) 1211

One of the two towers which alone remain of the fortifications of Waterford. The "Reginald" whose name it bears is a Danish Ragnald, ruler of the Ostmen of Waterford in the eleventh century. The present building was probably erected by the Anglo-Norman conquerors in the twelfth or early thirteenth century, on the site of an earlier fortress which may have been destroyed in the war of invasion.

CORK IN THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY (Stafford, "Pacata Hibernia," 1633) . . 1212

DUNBAR 1214

MEDAL FOR VICTORY OF DUNBAR, 1650 (British Museum) 1215

On 7th Sept., 1650, the House of Commons resolved "that their special thanks be conveyed to the Lord General for his eminent services at the great victory of Dunbar, and that his Excellency be desired to return their thanks also to the officers and soldiers of the army, and that a number of gold and silver medals be distributed among them." These medals are now extremely rare; the British Museum possesses specimens of them in both metals. The design was suggested by Cromwell himself; the representation of the House of Commons on the reverse is noticeable, as showing the same feeling as the Great Seal of the Commonwealth (see below, p. 1221), the medal of the Earl of Manchester (above, p. 1153), and some other medals of the time. The Dunbar medal was the work of Thomas Simon, the finest English medallist of the day, who was sent by the Parliament to Scotland expressly to take the "effigies, portrait or statue of the Lord General, to be placed on the medal"; and he had some difficulty in satisfying the Lord General with the likeness.

	PAGE
"THE SCOTS HOLDING THEIR YOUNG KING'S NOSE TO THE GRINDSTONE." (broadside , 1651, in the British Museum)	1216
CROWNING OF CHARLES II. AT SCONE	1217
From "Konincklijke Beltenis, &c., van Karel de II.," Dordrecht, 1661. In the latter part of the seventeenth century a number of illustrations of English history are supplied by contemporary Dutch engravings; and the connexion between the two countries was so close that these engravings need not be regarded as wholly fancy pictures. In the present case the church is evidently drawn from the artist's own imagination, or from some building in which he was accustomed to worship; but its arrangement probably represents fairly that of a Presbyterian kirk of the period.
FLIGHT OF CHARLES II. FROM WORCESTER ("Konincklijke Beltenis")	1218
CHARLES II. AND JANE LANE ("Konincklijke Beltenis")	1219
Jane Lane acted as Charles's guide during a part of his flight in disguise after the battle of Worcester. They are here represented making their way through a troop of Roundheads who do not recognize the fugitive.
GREAT SEAL OF THE COMMONWEALTH, 1651	1220, 1221
A unique design for a great seal; obverse, map of England and Ireland; reverse, the House of Commons in session. It shows the noble conception which Cromwell had of the Commonwealth, and what he desired to make it. The seal was the work of Thomas Simon, the maker of the medal for Dunbar (see above, and p. 1215). The beautiful workmanship of this artist and of several of his contemporaries, and the lavish employment of them by the Government, shows that the refined taste and lofty feeling for art noticed in p. 941 as strong in the early days of Puritanism had by no means died out even in its later phases and amid the troubles of the Civil War.
LIGHT HORSEMAN, TEMP. OLIVER CROMWELL	1222
From a figure in the possession of Captain Orde Browne, who has kindly had it photographed for this book. The armour came from the Tower. The three-barred cavalry helmet, the long steel gauntlet on the left hand, the leather glove on the right, and the steel breast-piece (on the right side of which a bullet-mark is distinctly visible) formed the regular accoutrement of the light horseman under Cromwell. The dress is made up, but correct, except that there ought to be no seam across the right flap of the coat, and that the skirt should be rather longer.
THE "SAMPSON," "SALVADOR," AND "ST. GEORGE" (satirical print in British Museum)	1223
These three ships and their cargoes were captured by the English in 1652. They were sailing under Dutch colours, but to escape confiscation they produced forged papers in Flemish and Spanish, and the ambassador of Spain claimed them for his sovereign. A London silversmith named Violet, who knew the tricks of the contraband trade through having been much engaged in it himself, discovered the vessels to be Dutch, and they and their cargoes were confiscated accordingly.
DUTCH SATIRE ON THE ENGLISH GOVERNMENT, 1652	1224
From a Dutch broadside, "Impotent ambition shown to the life in the present government of obdurate England." A satire on the results of Blake's fight with Tromp, whereby the peace between England and Holland was broken. Cromwell is trampling on the broken treaty; Hugh Peters, "once a preacher, and now a colonel in London," blows into his ear with a pair of bellows decorated with three crowns, i.e. , advises him to assume the crowns of Great Britain and Ireland; before him stand Blake, Fairfax, and some members of Parliament. Some Levellers are presenting a petition; and some women and children are appealing to Cromwell against the pressing of their husbands and fathers as seamen for the war; the ships are seen in the distance. A dog is guarding the sceptre and crown against another dog. On the wall is a picture of Tromp as a doctor, physicking and bleeding Cromwell.

	PAGE
ADMIRAL MARTIN HARPENTZON TROMP, "GRANDFATHER OF THE SAILORS" (from an engraving by Sniderhoef, after H. Pott)	1225
ADMIRAL DE RUYTER (from an etching by A. Blotelingh)	1226
ADMIRAL BLAKE (from T. Preston's engraving, c. 1730, of a picture then in the possession of J. Ames)	1227
MEDAL COMMEMORATING BLAKE'S VICTORIES, 1653	1228
By Thomas Simon. Four of these gold medals were struck by order of Parliament; two, with gold chains worth £300 each, were presented to Blake and Monk; two, with chains worth £100 each, to Admirals Penn and Lawson. The original die of the reverse is in the British Museum; the obverse is here copied from Pinkerton's "Medallic History of England."
SATIRE ON THE RUMP PARLIAMENT	1229
One of a pack of playing-cards designed in the reign of Charles II., and now in the possession of Earl Nelson; here reproduced, by permission, from a facsimile issued by Messrs. Goldsmid, of Edinburgh.
SIR HARRY VANE (picture by Sir Peter Lely, at Raby Castle)	1230
SHAFT OF THE MACE OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS (Antiquary)	1231
In 1649 the Commons had a new mace made for their Speaker by Thomas Maunday, the best English silversmith of the day. This was the "bauble" turned out by Cromwell. At the Restoration a new head and base were fitted to Maunday's shaft; the shaft alone is therefore figured here.
CROMWELL EXPELLING THE PARLIAMENT, 1653 (satirical Dutch print in the British Museum)	1232
Cromwell, Lambert, Cooper and Strickland are bidding the members "be-gone"; Harrison "lends" the Speaker "a hand to come down" (see p. 1231): near the Chair Cromwell again appears, having seized the mace, and in the act of driving out a goose with a peacock's tail. In the foreground are two dogs, one of them being evidently a caricature of the British lion, who is often satirized thus in Dutch prints of the time. The owl with spectacles, and carrying a lighted candle fixed on a collar round its neck, is a detail frequently introduced in Dutch satirical compositions of this period. It occurs in a picture by Jan Steen, now in the Rijks-Museum at Amsterdam (No. † 1379), where the painter has added the motto, in minute characters, as follows:
"Wat baeten Kaers of Brill Als den Uil niet sien wil."
i.e. "Of what use are candle or spectacles when the owl will not see?"
A ROPER AND A CORDWAINER	1236
A POTTER	1236
A TAILOR	1237
A SHOEMAKER	1237
A BLACKSMITH	1238
A SPECTACLE-MAKER	1238
PAPER-MAKERS	1239
A BOOK-BINDER	1239
These eight illustrations are from the English edition, by Charles Hoole, published in 1659, of Comenius's (or Komensky's) "Orbis sensualium pictus."
THE EXCHANGE, NEWCASTLE-ON-TYNE (Brand, "History of Newcastle")	1240
Built 1655-1658.
WHITE HART INN, SCOLE, NORFOLK (Richardson, "Studies from Old English Mansions")	1241
Built in 1655 by John Peck, a merchant of Norwich. The sign, of carved oak, was the work of John Fairchild; it was taken down early in the present century, and is restored in Richardson's engraving from a drawing made by J. Kirby in 1740, and preserved in the inn. This sign, 35 feet long, and 33 feet high, had in the middle a pendent figure of a White Hart with the shield of Peck hanging from its neck, a Latin motto taken from Virgil, "They are filled with old wine and rich flour," and the date, "Anno Dom. 1655." On the two sides of the post supporting the end of the sign were figures of Cerberus and of Charon in his boat; the corbel supporting the post against the wall was carved with Jonah issuing from the whale's mouth. The middle part of the cornice represented the story of Diana and Actæon, in figures as large as life, and with another Latin inscription, "Time, the devourer of all things, Diana. I am Actæon; recognise your master." The other decorations comprised figures of Saturn supporting a weather-cock, Neptune on a dolphin, Bacchus on a wine-barrel, Prudence, Fortitude, Temperance, Justice, a shepherd, and a huntsman; crowning the whole was an astronomer seated on a circumferentor, and so constructed that in fine weather he faced the north, and in bad weather the quarter whence a change was about to come. The mythological and fantastic character of the whole design is, considering its date, even more remarkable than its elaborate workmanship, and shows very strikingly how much of the Renaissance influence, noticed in pp. 941 and 947 as strong in the early days of Puritanism, had lingered on even into its later and sterner period.

"THE ROYAL OAKE OF BRITTAYNE" (satirical print in British Museum) . . . 1244

Cromwell, standing on "a slippery place," above the mouth of Hell, and beneath the avenging fires, "late but determined," of Heaven, directs the cutting down of the Royal Oak, which represents the English constitution. Monarchy ("Eikon Basilike"), Religion (the Bible), Liberty ("Magna Charta"), Law and Order ("Statutes" and "Reportes"), hang on its branches and fall with it. A group of men gather up the fallen boughs; some swine, "fatted for slaughter," represent the common people in whose interest this destruction is nominally wrought, and who are destined to be its real victims.

SECOND GREAT SEAL OF PROTECTOR OLIVER, 1655-8 1246, 1247

By Thomas Simon. The royal arms and the map of England and Ireland have here given place to a heraldic design composed of the emblems of England, Scotland, and Ireland (the crosses of S. George and S. Andrew, and the harp); a griffin takes the place of the unicorn as dexter supporter, as it had done for some years past on the seals of the Lord Chief Justices of England; beneath is Cromwell's motto, "Peace is sought through war." On the reverse is Cromwell on horseback, a striking contrast to Charles I. in p. 1140. The shield behind him is the same as that on the obverse of the seal, but it has in the middle an escutcheon of pretence charged with the arms of Cromwell.

SATIRE ON THE EARL OF ARGYLE AND THE SCOTCH PRESBYTERIANS (Messrs. Goldsmid's facsimile of playing-card in the possession of Earl Nelson) 1249

A STREET IN GALWAY (after W. H. Bartlett) 1250

The house on the right, known as Lynch's mansion, was the residence of Thomas Lynch FitzAmbrose, mayor of Galway, who was driven out as a Catholic by Cromwell in 1654. Since Bartlett's drawing was made the lower part of this house has been altered, and the house facing it has been pulled down; both are given here as illustrations of the Saracenic character noticeable in the architecture of many old buildings in Galway, and doubtless due to the intercourse with Spain which was a chief source of the commercial prosperity of the town. The Lynches were the most illustrious of the families known as the "tribes of Galway," from the fidelity with which they stood together in their resistance to Cromwell. The first recorded provost of Galway was Thomas "de Lince," in 1274; the last was John Lynche Fitz Edmund, in 1285; the first mayor was Pierce Lynche, in the same year. The chief magistracy of the city, under the various titles of Provost, Sovereign, and Mayor, was held by a Lynch ninety-four times between 1274 and 1654. The mansion was probably built late in the fifteenth or early in the sixteenth century. On its front are sculptured the arms of the Lynch family, with their crest, a lynx; and also a group representing a monkey and a child, in allusion to a story that when the house was on fire a child of the family had been saved by a pet monkey.

IRISH MAN AND WOMAN (Hollar's Map of Ireland, 1653) 1251

AN IRISH MILKMAID 1251

Reproduced, by permission, from facsimile published by the Kilkenny Archæological Society (now the Royal Society of Antiquaries of Ireland) of a drawing in Thomas Dineley's (or Dingley's) MS. "Tour through Ireland," 1681.

FACSIMILES OF IRISH MSS., A.D. 1634-1650	PAGE 1252
--	--------------

These facsimiles, from Professor O'Curry's "Lectures on Materials for Irish History," are given in continuation of the series begun in p. 909. After the Elizabethan conquest the national literature almost died out for a time. After a few years of quiet it sprang however into new life. Keating, parish priest of Tubrid near Clonmel, compiled, about 1626-30, a history of Erin from the earliest times to 1170. This work, written among the caves and rocks of the Galtee mountains where the author was hiding from a local tyrant, is still of value, as much of it is derived from original sources which are now lost. Of Keating's own MS. however no trace now exists.

The first specimen here given is from the original MS., preserved in the Museum of the Royal Irish Academy, of the Annals of the Four Masters. It consists of the opening paragraph of the dedication: "I beseech God to bestow every happiness that may conduce to the welfare of his body and soul upon Fearghal O'Gara, Lord of Magh-Ui-Gadhra and Cuil O bh—Finn, one of the two knights of Parliament who were elected and sent from the County of Sligo to Dublin, this year of grace 1634"—i.e., the famous Parliament summoned by Wentworth; see p. 1084. It is in the hand-writing of Michael O'Clery, the chief of the "Four Masters" by whom the work was compiled, and from whom it derives its name. He thus tells his own story, and that of his book: "I, Michael O'Clery, a poor Friar of the Order of S. Francis, have come before you, O noble Fearghal O'Gara. I have calculated on your honour that it seemed to you a cause of pity and regret, grief and sorrow (for the glory of God and the honour of Ireland), how much the race of Gaedhil the son of Niul have passed under a cloud of darkness, without a knowledge or record of the death or obit of saint or virgin, archbishop, bishop, abbot, or other noble dignitary of the Church, of king or of prince, of lord or of chieftain, or of the synchronism or connexion of the one with the other. I explained to you that I thought I could get the assistance of the chroniclers for whom I had most esteem, in writing a book of Annals in which these matters might be put on record; and that, should the writing of them be neglected at present, they would not again be found to be put on record or commemorated, even to the end of the world. There were collected by me all the best and most copious books of annals that I could find throughout all Ireland (though it was difficult for me to collect them to one place), to write this book in your name, and to your honour; for it was you that gave the reward of their labour to the chroniclers by whom it was written; and it was the Friars of the convent of Donegal that supplied them with food and attendance."

The second facsimile is from the same MS., and gives the signature of Michael O'Clery, appended to the dedication.

The third is from a MS. (H. i. 18) in Trinity College, Dublin, the Chronicon Scotorum, an abstract of early Irish history down to the year 1135, in the fine bold autograph of the compiler, Duaid Mac Firbis. This man was the last of a long line of historians and scholars whose ancestral home was at Lecain, in county Sligo. In 1650 he seems to have finished the compilation of his two principal works, the Chronicon Scotorum, and a book of pedigrees of Irish families. In 1670, when over eighty years of age, he was murdered at Dunflin by a personal enemy who felt himself secure from punishment, his victim being under the ban of the penal laws. Mac Firbis was, says Professor O'Curry, "the last of the regularly educated and most accomplished masters of the history, antiquities, laws and language of ancient Erin." Under the Cromwellian settlement of Ireland, the traditional Irish scholarship, which had struggled so long and so hard for existence, at last died out. Our own age has witnessed its revival.

CARDINAL RICHELIEU (picture by P. de Champaigne in the National Gallery)	1255
MAP OF EUROPE IN 1648	1256
AUTOGRAPH NOTE OF OLIVER CROMWELL (India Office)	1258
Scrawled on a petition of the East India Company, November, 1657, and interesting as showing Cromwell's desire "for the incoragement of the East India trade." The tremulous hand is very unlike his firm, bold writing in earlier days, and indicates how his health was failing.
TETBURY MARKET-PLACE (from an old drawing)	1260
The market-house here shown was built in 1655. It was demolished in 1750, and replaced by one in a very different style of architecture.

	PAGE
THE LORD HIGH ADMIRAL (after W. Hollar)	1264
Robert, Earl of Warwick, named by Parliament to the command of the fleet in 1642 (see p. 1139), carried, as Lord High Admiral, the sword of state at the inauguration of Oliver Cromwell as Protector.
WHITEHALL FROM THE RIVER (after W. Hollar)	1265
Whitehall, built by Wolsey (see p. 635), passed at his fall into the hands of Henry VIII., and became the usual London residence of later sovereigns, by whom it was much altered. Oliver Cromwell took up his abode there as Protector.
"THE HORRIBLE TAIL-MAN" (Dutch satire, 1658, in British Museum)	1266
Cromwell receives from Fairfax three crowns; "Adm. Black" (Blake) and some members of Parliament stand by. Cromwell has a long serpent-like tail, composed of the coin of the Commonwealth, of which a Zealander ("Zeeuw"), a Hollander, a Frisian ("Fries"), an Irishman ("Yer") with a knife, Prince Rupert ("Prins Robbert") a Scot (with a sword,) and a Royalist ("Coningsman") are all trying to seize shares.
A PARTY AT THE DUKE OF NEWCASTLE'S HOUSE	1268
Frontispiece to "Nature's Pictures," by Margaret Duchess of Newcastle, 1656. The two persons crowned with laurel are the authoress and her husband the Duke, whose portrait is in p. 1137.
SATIRE ON RICHARD CROMWELL (Dutch broadside, in British Museum)	1271
Richard Cromwell, dressed as a cooper, with a mallet breaks up a cask from which issue a number of owls bearing candles and crying "King" as they fly away. "Pickleherring," a Fool, lifts up his hands in amazement at Richard's folly. On the wall is a picture of the Frogs and their King Stork (Oliver), and another of a State proclamation (evidently meant for that of King Log, i.e. , Charles II.) taking place in the courtyard of a house, above the door of which is the shield of the Commonwealth. The broadside has verses in French and German, explaining the print, and ending with the fable of the Frogs and their King.
GENERAL MONK (miniature by S. Cooper at Windsor Castle)	1274
GENERAL LAMBERT (from an old print)	1275
BANQUET AT THE HAGUE	1276
From "A Relation of the Voyage and Residence of Charles II. in Holland . . . rendered into English out of the original French, by Sir William Lower," and published at the Hague, 1660. The banquet here represented was given to Charles by the Estates of Holland, on Sunday, 20 May, 1660. The hall was decorated with garlands of orange branches. "The table was made in double potence, and laid so that that part, where the Royal Family sate, was athwart before the chimney of the right hand, thrusting from its middle a trunk, or skirt, which possessed more than two thirds of the length of the hall," and at which the representatives of the Estates were seated. "The king took his place under a cloath of estate of the same stuff whereof the rest of the furniture was made, between the Queen of Bohemia, his Aunt, who was on his right hand, and the Princess Royal, his sister, who was on his left. The king's two brothers were at one of the two ends, on the Queen of Bohemia's side, and the Prince of Orange at the other end, on the side of the Princess, his mother. The king sate so that from his place he saw easily all the Deputies of the Estates of Holland, who possessed that part of the table which came from the midst of the king's, and were seated according to the rank which the nobles and towns hold in their assemblies."
CHARLES II. EMBARKING FOR ENGLAND ("Konincklijke Beltenis van Karel II.," 1661)	1277
ENTRY OF CHARLES II. INTO LONDON (from the same)	1278
MONUMENT OF JOHN DONNE	1280
In S. Paul's Cathedral. The inscription runs: "After the various studies to which from his earliest years he devoted himself faithfully and not unsuccessfully, by the inspiration and impulse of the Holy Spirit and on the advice and exhortation of King James he embraced holy orders in the year of his beloved Jesus 1614, and of his own age 42. He was invested with the deanery of this Church 27 November 1621, and divested of it by death on the last day of March 1631. Here, though in decaying ashes, he looks for Him whose Name is the Dayspring." A striking proof of the popularity of Donne as a poet is afforded by the fact that nineteen of his poems were translated into

- Dutch by Constantijn Huygens, father of the illustrious Christiaan Huygens the philosopher. The poems were sent to him by some English friends in 1630, and are included in the complete edition of his works (Groningen, 1892-3). The monument, of very fine workmanship, is one of the very few in S. Paul's that escaped destruction in the Great Fire. Within the present century it has been restored to its original upright position, but the niche in which it now stands is smaller than that which it occupied before the Fire. It is here engraved from a drawing specially made for this book.
- JOHN MILTON (frontispiece, engraved by W. Faithorne, to Milton's "History of Britain," 1670) 1281
- MILTON'S COTTAGE AT CHALFONT ST. GILES, BUCKS 1282
 "Paradise Lost" was finished and "Paradise Regained" projected in this cottage, to which Milton withdrew for a short time in 1665 to escape the plague that had broken out in London. It is the only one of Milton's various dwelling-places still existing.
- CROWN-PIECE DESIGNED BY THOMAS SIMON (Mint Museum) 1285
 Simon, the greatest English medallist, was chief engraver of the Mint from 1646 till the Restoration (examples of his work have been given in pp. 1215, 1221, 1228, 1246, 1247). After the accession of Charles a Dutchman, Roettier, was appointed assistant engraver, and both artists made pattern pieces for the new coinage. "For the honour of our countrymen," writes Evelyn, "I cannot here omit that ingenious trial of skill which a commendable emulation has produced in a medal performed with extraordinary accuracy by one who, having been deservedly employed in the Mint at the Tower, was not willing to be supplanted by foreign competitors." Simon's magnificent crown-piece has on its obverse a bust of Charles, with the words "Carolus Dei Gra." ("Charles, by the grace of God—") and the artist's signature; on the reverse are four crowned escutcheons of England, Scotland, Ireland, and France, arranged in the form of a cross, with St. George and the Garter in the middle, and two interlaced C's in each angle, and surrounded by the continuation of the legend, "Mag. Bri. Fr. et Hib. Rex. 1663." On the edge, in two lines, is engraved Simon's petition: "Thomas. Simon. most. humbly. prays. your. Majesty. to. compare. this. his. tryall. piece. with. the. Dutch. and. if. more. truly. drawn. and. embossed. more. gracefully. ordered. and. more. accurately. engraven. to. relieve. him." To this fine piece of work Charles preferred the very inferior design of Roettier, ordered him to make the new dies, and soon afterwards appointed him chief engraver to the Mint instead of Simon, who was made engraver of royal seals, an office which he continued to hold during the rest of his life.
- AMPULLA OR ANOINTING CRUSE 1286
 In the form of an eagle. English work of the seventeenth century; probably made for the coronation of Charles II.; now among the Regalia in the Tower. The anointing was a peculiarly sacred ceremony, used in the earliest times only for the Emperor, the Kings of England, France, Jerusalem, and Sicily; in later days the Kings of Scotland obtained the privilege of anointing by special grant from the Pope. The English Kings were anointed not with mere holy oil, but with a specially prepared cream which was consecrated by the Primate or by some bishop deputed by him. The cream used for anointing Charles I. was thus consecrated by Laud, who was then Bishop of St. David's.
- CHARLES II. (illumination in letters patent, Q.R. Miscell. Books 118, Public Record Office) to face p. 1286
- SATIRE ON THE PURITANS, TEMP. CHARLES II. (Messrs. Goldsmid's facsimile of playing-cards in the possession of Earl Nelson) . 1287, 1288, 1289, 1290, 1291, 1292
- MONUMENT OF "DEMOCRITUS JUNIOR" 1294
 Robert Burton, author of the "Anatomy of Melancholy," assumed this name, professing himself an imitator of the old Greek philosopher. Born in 1577, he became vicar of S. Thomas's Church, Oxford, in 1616, rector of Segrave in Leicestershire about 1630, and kept both livings "with much ado to his dying day." The "Anatomy" was published in 1621; "I write of melancholy," he says, "by being busy to avoid melancholy." According to his epitaph, "Known to few, unknown to yet fewer, here lies Democritus

- PAGE
- Junior, to whom Melancholy gave both life and death." He died almost at the exact time which he had foretold some years before by the calculation of his nativity. This calculation was placed on the monument erected by his brother above his grave in Christ Church Cathedral, Oxford. An enlarged copy of the horoscope is given at the corner of the engraving, copied from Nichols's "History of Leicestershire."
- ELIAS ASHMOLE, WINDSOR HERALD, AND WILLIAM DUGDALE, NORROY KING OF ARMS (Sandford, "Funeral of the Duke of Albemarle," 1670) 1295
- Elias Ashmole, born 1617, was named a commissioner of excise in 1644 by Charles I., to whom he adhered throughout the civil war. At the Restoration he was rewarded with the office of Windsor Herald, from which he retired in 1672. He was considered "the greatest virtuoso and curioso that ever was known or read of in England before his time." In 1682 he presented to the University of Oxford a collection of curiosities, natural and antiquarian, chiefly left to him by his friend John Tradescant, keeper of the Botanic Garden at Chelsea, which formed the nucleus of the Ashmolean Museum. He also bequeathed to the University a number of valuable MSS., now in the Bodleian Library.
- William Dugdale, famous as the compiler of the "Monasticon Anglicanum," "History of Warwickshire," "Baronage of England," and other valuable historical works, was born in 1605, appointed Blanch Lyon pursuivant extraordinary in 1638, Rouge Croix pursuivant 1639, and Chester Herald 1644. During the early part of the civil war he was constantly in attendance on the King or employed in delivering royal warrants; his estates were in consequence sequestered by the Parliament. On 10 May, 1660, he, of his own accord, proclaimed Charles II. at Coleshill: a month later his loyalty was rewarded with the office of Norroy King of Arms; in 1677 he was knighted and promoted to be Garter King of Arms; he died in 1686.
- Ashmole and Dugdale are here represented as they appeared at the public funeral of George Monk, Duke of Albemarle, in 1670. Ashmole, as Windsor Herald, carried in the procession the Duke's target, or escutcheon, surrounded by the ribbon of the Garter; Dugdale, as Norroy, carried the Duke's sword. Francis Sandford, who compiled and illustrated the account of the ceremony from which these figures are taken, was himself present in the official capacity of Rouge Dragon pursuivant.
- WILLIAM HARVEY (from J. Hall's engraving of a picture by Cornelis Janssen at the Royal College of Physicians, London) 1296
- JOHN WILKINS (from Bloteling's engraving of a picture by Mrs. Beale) 1297 Wilkins became Bishop of Chester in 1668.
- JOHN WALLIS (portrait by Sir Godfrey Kneller, painted for Samuel Pepys; now in the Bodleian Library) 1298
- John Wallis was born at Ashford in Kent on the 23rd November, 1616. At the age of sixteen he proceeded to Emmanuel College in Cambridge, was later made fellow of Queens', and took orders. In the Civil War he joined the side of the Parliament, and served his party by deciphering intercepted despatches. In 1649 he was appointed Savilian professor of Geometry at Oxford by the Parliamentary visitors. His political opinions, however, afterwards underwent a change, and he was enabled to employ the same talent for decipherment in the interests of the Royalists. Accordingly at the Restoration he was confirmed in his appointment, and made one of the Royal chaplains. He died on the 28th October, 1703. Wallis's principal works as a mathematician are his "Arithmetica Infinitorum" (published in 1655), "Mathesis Universalis" (1657), the treatise on Mechanics (1669-1671), and the treatise on Algebra (1685). Historically considered he is the immediate predecessor of Newton, and his power of generalization, in which he surpassed all preceding mathematicians, enabled him to anticipate many of the results if not the actual processes of the Integral Calculus. For instance, "The Binomial Theorem was a corollary of the results of Wallis on the quadrature of curves, the sagacity of Newton supplying that general mode of expression which it is extraordinary that Wallis should have missed."
- The portrait of Wallis was commissioned by Pepys, as he says, "to be lodged as an humble present of mine, though a Cambridge man, to my dear

- Aunt, the University of Oxford." Kneller went to Oxford specially to paint it. Writing to Pepys he says: "And I can show I never did a better picture, nor so good a one, in my life, which is the opinion of all as has seen it." The solemn thanks of the University were returned to Pepys for his munificence on October 30th, 1702. PAGE
- JOHN FLAMSTEED (portrait by Gibson, in the possession of the Royal Society) . . . 1299
 John Flamsteed was born at Denby, near Derby, on the 19th August, 1646. In 1669 he made an astronomical contribution to the Royal Society, and from this time forward his reputation increased, until, when Charles II. founded an Observatory, he was appointed astronomer royal or "astronomical observator." He began his residence at the Observatory in 1676. From this time until his death in 1719 he was unceasingly occupied in amassing the observations afterwards published in his "Historia Cœlestis." Flamsteed has been called not inaptly "Tycho Brahe with a telescope," and his observations form the starting-point and foundation of modern astronomy.
- SOLUTION OF THE PROBLEM OF THE BRACHYSTOCHROME OR CURVE OF QUICKEST DESCENT BY NEWTON 1300
 This problem was proposed for solution to the mathematicians qui toto orbe florent by the celebrated John Bernoulli in the Acta Eruditorum, January, 1697. It was required to determine the curve in which a body would descend in the quickest time from one given point to another. On the day after he received the problem Newton sent the solution to Mr. Charles Montague, the President of the Royal Society. He announced that the curve was a cycloid, and gave a method of determining it. Bernoulli had allowed six months for the solution of the problem; but Leibnitz, who also produced a solution, begged that the period might be extended to twelve months, which Bernoulli readily granted. When the solutions were sent in, one of them (Newton's) was anonymous; but Bernoulli recognised the author, as he said, tanquam ex ungue leonem—"as a lion from his claw."
- SIGNATURES OF CHARLES II. AND JAMES, DUKE OF YORK, ATTACHED TO THE CHARTER OF THE ROYAL SOCIETY, 1663 1301
 We have a contemporary notice of the signing of the charter-book by the King in a letter from R. Moray to Christiaan Huygens, dated 20th January, 1665 ("Œuvres Complètes de Christiaan Huygens," p. 215).
 "Seulement faut il que je vous die que le Roy a signé son nom dans nostre liure de cette façon.
 "Charles R. et au dessous Founder, Son Altesse Royale James, et plus bas Fellow.
 "Monsieur le prince Royal Rupert et plus bas Fellow, aussi."
 The King and the Duke of York signed their names on the 9th January, 1665, and the book was produced at the meeting of the Society which took place on the 11th of the same month.
- THE OLD OBSERVING-ROOM, GREENWICH 1302
 Reproduced, by the kind permission of the Astronomer Royal, from a volume of Views of Greenwich Observatory preserved there. The original engravings appear to have been made by Flamsteed's directions to illustrate his "Historia Cœlestis"; that work, however, was not published till after his death, and his executors apparently omitted the illustrations. The Observatory was built by Sir Christopher Wren; he unfortunately fixed it a little askew to the meridian, and has thus much troubled astronomers. The back part of the building consists of a very large octagonal room, with windows from floor to ceiling on every side, so as to give openings for the telescope to be set towards any part of the heavens. This view gives an exact representation of the room as it was in Flamsteed's day, with the three original "observers" at their work—Flamsteed himself, his one paid assistant, and a friend, Marsh, who gave him his help. From the imperfection of scientific instruments at that time, observations could only be taken by means of telescopes of immense length; one of these is here shown, supported in a primitive manner on the rung of a ladder to give it the right elevation, and stuck out through the window of the room.

	PAGE
SIR ISAAC NEWTON (from J. Smith's engraving of a picture by Sir G. Kneller)	1303
WOOLSTHORPE HOUSE, LINCOLNSHIRE	1304
The birthplace of Isaac Newton.
CAST OF THE HEAD OF SIR ISAAC NEWTON (in the possession of the Royal Society)	1305
JOHN HALES (frontispiece to his "Tracts," 1677)	1306
WILLIAM CHILLINGWORTH (from an engraving by F. Kyle)	1307
JEREMY TAYLOR (from an engraving by P. Lombart)	1308
THOMAS HOBBS (from a picture by Michael Wright, in the National Portrait Gallery)	1311
TITLE-PAGE OF HOBBS'S "LEVIATHAN," 1651	1312
JOHN LOCKE (from G. Vertue's engraving of a picture by Kneller)	1315
A GAME OF TENNIS (English edition, 1659, of Comenius's "Orbis sensualium pictus")	1316
"BOYES SPORTS" (from the same)	1317
MACE OF THE BAILIFF OF JERSEY	1318, 1319
The present Bailiff of Jersey has kindly caused this mace, of which no reproduction has ever before been made, to be photographed specially for this book. It bears a Latin inscription which may be thus translated: "All are not esteemed worthy of such honour. Charles II., the most serene King of Great Britain, France and Ireland, desired that his royal affection towards the island of Jersey, where he twice found a refuge when he was shut out of his other dominions, should be displayed to posterity by this truly regal memorial. He therefore bade that it should henceforth be carried before the Bailiffs, in memory of the fidelity preserved towards his august father Charles I., as well as to himself, by the illustrious knights Philip and George Carteret, bailiffs and royal prefects of this island." Charles further granted to Jersey a charter with a special clause allowing, "for the great constancy, fidelity and loyalty which the bailiffs and jurats and all other inhabitants of the said island have shown to us and our predecessors," the bailiff for all future time to have a mace carried before him.
STABLES AT MARPLE HALL, CHESHIRE (Earwaker, "East Cheshire")	1321
Marple Hall was the seat of the Bradshaw family. The house was built, c. 1658, by Colonel Henry Bradshaw, elder brother of John Bradshaw the regicide; the stables are dated 1669.
A BISHOP, TEMP. CHARLES II. (after W. Hollar)	1322
A JUDGE, TEMP. CHARLES II. (after W. Hollar)	1323
TITLE-PAGE TO BOOK OF COMMON PRAYER, LONDON, 1662	1325
MITRE OF BISHOP WREN, 1660-1667	1326
Matthew Wren, Bishop of Ely 1638, imprisoned by order of Parliament, 1640, released and restored to his see 1660, built and endowed in 1663 a new chapel at Pembroke Hall, Cambridge, where he had formerly studied. In 1667 he died, and was buried in the chapel, where his mitre (here reproduced from a photograph, taken especially for this book) is now preserved. It is of English workmanship, silver-gilt, with repoussé decorations; its height is 11½ in., its diameter 7½ in. Fitting into it is a cap of crimson satin lined with white silk, and the state of this lining shows that the mitre had been not merely fitted on but worn—a proof that, contrary to a view which has been frequently asserted, such episcopal ornaments were not merely treasured by the bishops of the Restoration for their intrinsic value or their artistic beauty, but actually used, by some prelates at least, as part of their ecclesiastical attire.
MACE OF THE HOUSE OF COMMONS (Antiquary)	1327
Maunday's shaft of 1649 (see pp. xcix and 1231), with a new head and base made in 1660.
EDWARD HYDE, EARL OF CLARENDON (from an original engraving by David Loggan)	1329

	PAGE
ANTHONY ASHLEY COOPER (painting by Sir Peter Lely, in possession of the Earl of Shaftesbury)	1330
S. MARGARET'S CHURCH, WESTMINSTER, 1692-1721	1332
From a rare print by J. Brock. It shows the east window dated 1692, which was removed in 1721; the altar and reredos as they existed at the same period; several old monuments, now gone, on the north side; the pew of the Speaker of the Commons, in its original position; and a striking example of the arrangement of clerk's desk, reading desk, and pulpit common in the last century, and vulgarly known as a "three-decker."
THE HERETICAL SYNOD AT SALTERS' HALL	1334
The meeting-house adjoining (and originally forming part of) Salters' Hall, Walbrook, was first used by a Presbyterian congregation, c. 1690. In 1710 an assembly of ministers was held there to consider what steps should be taken respecting the spread of Arian opinions. A proposal that all members should be required to subscribe a declaration of Trinitarian faith led to a very stormy discussion, and as no conclusion was arrived at, the affair gave rise to a good deal of satire, of which the print here reproduced is probably an example. It shows the end of the chapel occupied by the pulpit, with sounding-board above and reading-desk below; in a pew directly under these, and facing the same way, sit "The Four Moderators." Four men facing them say, "We are for no Impositions"; one of a group in the gallery calls out to the crowd below, "All you that are for the Trinity come up, we have subscribed"; one of two men in the fore-ground says, "For or against the Trinity, beloved?" the other, who has two faces, holds in one hand a paper inscribed "As my principles," and in the other a second paper, "For my interest."
A NONCONFORMIST MINISTER, LATE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY (Tempest's "Cries of London")	1335
Fifty plates, representing the "Cries of the City of London," were engraved and published in 1688 by Pierce Tempest after drawings by Marcel Lauron, or Laron. Later editions were issued, with additional plates, either by Laron (who died 1702) or by his son. All are extremely rare. The copy in the British Museum, from which these illustrations are taken, dates from 1711.
A QUAKERS' MEETING, LATE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY (satirical print, probably by Marcel Lauron, in the British Museum)	1337
RICHARD BAXTER (picture by J. Riley, in Dr. Williams's Library, London)	1338
"THE HEBREW ALPHABET WRIT BY GEORGE FOX THE PROTO QUAKER"	1339
Attached to a page of notes on the Old Testament, part of which is in the handwriting of George Fox; now among the historical autographs in the British Museum.
BUNYAN'S MEETING-HOUSE, ZOAR STREET, GRAVEL LANE, SOUTHWARK.	1340
From "Londina Illustrata," 1819. Three Protestant Nonconformist gentlemen, named Mallet, Warburton and Holland, profited by the Declaration of Indulgence in 1687 to build this chapel, with a school-room attached, at a cost of £360. It came to be known as "Bunyan's Meeting-house"; but Bunyan cannot have preached in it more than once, on his last visit to London, as he died within sixteen months after the purchase of the ground on which it was built.
GRAVEL LANE CHARITY SCHOOL	1342
The school-room connected with, and under a part of, Bunyan's Meeting-house; opened by the founders of the Meeting-house, in 1687, to counteract the attractions of a Roman Catholic school which a gentleman named Poulter had set up in the same neighbourhood under James's protection. This early Nonconformist Charity School was still carrying on its work in the original school-room in the year 1819, as is shown by the dress of its scholars in this illustration, reproduced from "Londina Illustrata."
BUNYAN'S DREAM (frontispiece to 4th edition of "Pilgrim's Progress," 1680)	1343

	PAGE
BABYLONIAN STONE FOUND IN LONDON (British Museum)	1345
Three black diorite stones, with strange figures and letters, were found early in 1891 by workmen digging foundations for a house in Knightrider Street, London. These proved to be Babylonian stones; one of them dating from c. 1200 or 1300 B.C., another from c. 4500 B.C., and the third from c. 4000 B.C. The first seems to have been a boundary stone, the second had been used as part of a holy-water basin, and the third, which is here figured, had been made to serve as a door-socket. It bears a cuneiform inscription which states that it was dedicated to the god Nina. Knightrider Street and its neighbourhood were the favourite abode of Dutch merchants in the time of Charles II. Along with the stones were found some Dutch tiles of the seventeenth century. It has therefore been supposed that these Chaldean relics were brought, either as ballast or as curiosities, to London with other goods from the Persian Gulf, where Holland had a great trade, and lay in the Dutch counting-house till the fire of 1666, when they and the tiles were alike buried in the ruins.
STERN OF THE "ROYAL CHARLES"	1346
A part of the stern of this ship, bearing the arms of England, has been preserved as a relic in the Museum at Amsterdam, with an inscription which may be thus translated: "These arms adorned the 'Royal Charles,' of a hundred guns, the largest ship of the English Navy, conquered with other ships in the glorious expedition on the river of Rochester in the year 1667, under the command of Lieutenant Admiral M. A. de Ruyter and the Ruwaard" (an old Dutch word for "governor") "C. de Wit, brought into the Meuse the same year, and broken up at Hellevoetsluis in the year 1673." A contemporary engraving of the ship was made which is in the Amsterdam Museum, and has been photographed specially for this book.
FIGHT BETWEEN MONK AND DE RUYTER, 1666 (from a very rare contemporary Dutch print, in the British Museum)	1347
FACSIMILE OF AN ADVERTISEMENT IN THE "INTELLIGENCER," APRIL 24, 1666 .	1348
In which Charles announces that he will no longer touch for the King's Evil for fear of the infection of the Plague.
UNFINISHED TAPESTRY-WORK SAVED FROM THE GREAT FIRE OF LONDON, 1666 (Guildhall Museum)	1348
Found in a house in Cheapside.
THE MAGAZINE AT SHEERNESS BURNT BY THE DUTCH, 1667 (contemporary Dutch print in British Museum)	1349
THE "ROYAL CHARLES"	1350
From a picture by Storch, in the Museum at Amsterdam; photographed specially for this book. The picture bears a Latin inscription which, literally translated, runs thus: "The representation most accurately painted of this, once the British flagship, which stood as a memorial, first of the conquered King Charles I. and the royal army defeated at Naseby; then of the return of King Charles II. to his own realm (after whose name it was called the Royal Charles); and lastly—taken by the Dutch in Britain itself—of a gigantic victory and also of peace keenly desired,—is dedicated to Cornelis de Witt, commander of the whole Belgic fleet, and the Dutch conqueror, and to his children after him as an incitement to the valour of their father and forefather."
WATCH (South Kensington Museum)	1351
Of seventeenth century workmanship, with an engraved brass face, and a double silver case, on the inside of which are the words "Edmund Bull, Fleet Street, fecit."
CHARLES II. (miniature by Samuel Cooper, at Windsor Castle)	1352
NELL GWYNNE (picture by Lely, in the collection of Earl Spencer, at Althorpe) . .	1354

	PAGE
JAMES, DUKE OF MONMOUTH, WHEN A CHILD (miniature by S. Cooper, at Windsor Castle)	1355
HEAD-PIECE TO THE FORM OF THANKSGIVING FOR THE KING'S RESTORATION (Book of Common Prayer, 1662)	1356
JOHN MAITLAND, EARL AND DUKE OF LAUDERDALE (picture by Vandyck, at Ham House)	1358
JAMES BUTLER, FIRST DUKE OF ORMOND (from an engraving by Scriven, after a picture by Sir Godfrey Kneller)	1360
WREN'S ORIGINAL DESIGN FOR S. PAUL'S CATHEDRAL	1362
From a drawing, made specially for this book, of Wren's model preserved in the present cathedral. Its story is thus told by Allan Cunningham: "The form of the classic temple he [Wren] imagined suited the reformed worship best, being compact and simple without long aisles, our religion not using processions like that of Rome; he accordingly planned a church of moderate size, of good proportion; a convenient choir with a vestibule and porticos and a dome conspicuous above the houses. . . . Much as this plan was approved, it was nevertheless one of those which he sketched 'merely,' as he said, 'for discourse sake'; he had bestowed his study upon two designs both of which he liked; though one of them he preferred, and justly, above the other. The ground plans of both were in the form of the cross; that which pleased Charles, the Duke of York, and the Courtiers, retained the primitive figure with all its sharp advancing and receding angles; the one after Wren's own heart substituted curves for these deep indentations, by which one unbroken and beautiful winding line was obtained for the exterior, while the interior accommodation which it afforded, and the elegance which it introduced, were such as must have struck every beholder. . . . But if we may credit Spence, taste had no share in deciding the choice of the design. He says, on the authority of Harding, that the Duke of York and his party influenced all; the future king even then contemplated the revival of the Popish service, and desired to have a cathedral with long aisles for the sake of its processions. This not only caused the rejection of Wren's favourite design, but materially affected the other which was approved. The side oratories were proposed by the Duke, and though this narrowed the building and broke much in upon the breadth and harmony of the interior elevation, and though it was resisted by Wren even to tears, all was in vain—the architect was obliged to comply." (Allan Cunningham, "Lives of the most eminent British Painters, Sculptors, and Architects," iv. pp. 205-207).
THE COMTE D'ESTRADES, AMBASSADOR OF FRANCE TO ENGLAND, 1661 (Jusserand, "A French Ambassador at the Court of Charles II.," from an engraving by Etienne Picart)	1364
DUNKIRK (Dutch print, 17th or 18th century)	1365
PLENIPOTENTIARIES OF ENGLAND, FRANCE AND HOLLAND SIGNING THE TREATY OF BREDÁ (Dutch print in British Museum)	1368
SIR WILLIAM TEMPLE (picture by Sir Peter Lely, in the National Portrait Gallery)	1370
HUGUES DE LIONNE, FOREIGN SECRETARY TO LEWIS XIV. (Jusserand, "A French Ambassador," from an engraving by N. de Larmessin, 1664)	1371
TWO "DRUMMS AND A FIFE, AND THE DRUMME MAJOR" (Sandford, "Funeral of the Duke of Albemarle," 1670)	1373
FUNERAL CAR OF GEORGE MONK, DUKE OF ALBEMARLE (from the same)	1374
TWO OF "HIS GRACE'S WATERMEN" } (from the same)	1375
TWO MASTERS OF THE CHANCERY }
THE UNIVERSITY LIBRARY, LEYDEN (from a Dutch engraving, 1610, after J. C. Woudanus)	1376
FIGHT WITH THE DUTCH IN SOLEBAY, JUNE 7, 1672 (from a contemporary Dutch print, in the British Museum)	1378
BARBARA PALMER, COUNTESS OF CASTLEMAINE AND DUCHESS OF CLEVELAND (from an engraving by W. Sherwin, 1670)	1380

	PAGE
HUNTSMEN, LATE 17TH OR EARLY 18TH CENTURY (Roxburghe Ballad)	1382
ANTHONY ASHLEY COOPER, FIRST EARL OF SHAFTESBURY (miniature by S. Cooper, in the possession of the Earl of Shaftesbury)	1384
GRESHAM HOUSE, AFTERWARDS GRESHAM COLLEGE (Burgon's "Life of Gresham," from Vertue's engraving, 1739)	1386
In Bishopsgate Street, London; built by Sir Thomas Gresham, for his own residence, in 1563-6. At the death of his widow, in 1596, the house and the rents arising from the Royal Exchange both passed by his will into the hands of the Corporation of London and the Mercers' Company as trustees, for the endowment of a college. Seven professors, with a salary of £50 a year each, were to have rooms in the house and to deliver free lectures, one on every day of the week, on divinity, astronomy, music, geometry, law, medicine, and rhetoric. The first seven professors were appointed early in 1597; three came from Oxford, three from Cambridge; the professor of music, Dr. Bull, was a graduate of both Universities and was nominated by the queen. Next year it was ordained that each lecture should be delivered twice; at 8 A.M. in Latin, because it was thought "very likely that diverse strangers of foreign countries, who resort to Gresham College, and understand not the English tongue, will greatly desire to hear the reading of the said lectures, whereby the memory of the said founder in the erecting of the said college for the encrease of learning may be divulged, to the good example of foreign nations, and the honour and credit of this honourable city"; and at 2 P.M. in English. Dr. Bull was excused the Latin lecture, because he was not a classical scholar. The meetings of the Royal Society were held at the College till the Great Fire; after that the College was used as an Exchange for seven years (while a new Exchange was being built), and the Royal Society removed to Arundel House in the Strand; thence they returned to the College in 1673. In 1710 they bought a house in Crane Court, Fleet Street, which they occupied till 1780, when the Government gave them rooms in Somerset House; these were exchanged in 1857 for apartments in Burlington House, Piccadilly. In 1768 the College was pulled down, and the lectures transferred to a room over the Royal Exchange; after the destruction of this building in 1838 they were given in the theatre of the City of London School till 1843, when a new College was built in Gresham Street. The most remarkable feature of Gresham's scheme was the prominence given to astronomy and music. Astronomy in his day was an almost unknown science, and neither of the Universities had any provision for teaching it. Sir Christopher Wren held the Professorship of Astronomy for some time, and gave lectures in Gresham College.
THE SECOND ROYAL EXCHANGE (Burgon, "Life of Gresham")	1387
The Exchange built by Gresham (see pp. 786, 787) was destroyed in the Great Fire, September 1666; the founder's statue, at the north-west corner, alone escaped. In April 1667 Jerman, one of the City surveyors, was commissioned by the Corporation and the Mercers' Company to make a design for a new Exchange; the foundation-stone was laid May 6, and on October 23 Charles II. laid the base of a column on the west side of the north entrance. Pepys writes: "Sir W. Pen and I back into London, and there saw the king, with his kettledrums and trumpets, going to the Exchange; which, the gates being shut, I could not get in to see. So with Sir W. Pen to Captain Cockes, and thence again towards Westminster; but, in my way, stopped at the Exchange and got in, the king being newly gone, and there find the bottom of the first pillar laid. And here was a shed set up, and hung with tapestry and a canopy of state, and some good victuals and wine for the king, who it seems did it." The new building was burnt down in 1838. To the last the traditional connexion between Gresham College and the Royal Exchange was continued, and the Gresham College Lectures were held in it from 1768 till its own destruction.
INTERIOR OF S. STEPHEN'S CHURCH, WALBROOK	1388
From a drawing made specially for this book. The church, one of Wren's masterpieces, was built 1672-1679.
FIGURE OF S. HELEN, C. 1680	1389
In S. Helen's Church, Bishopsgate; reproduced from a drawing made specially for this book.

	PAGE
PORCH OF THE NAG'S HEAD INN, LEICESTER (Richardson, "Studies from Old English Mansions")	1390
Built 1663.
DOORWAY OF PEARCE'S CLOTHING MANUFACTORY, WEST MILLS, NEWBURY	1391
Thomas Pearce, clothier, of Newbury, who died in 1671, endowed two almshouses at West Mills, for poor weavers "of honest life and good manners." Part of the buildings of his own factory seem to have been converted for this purpose. The view here given is from a "History of Newbury" published in 1839.
INN, FORMERLY AT OXFORD, CALLED "ANTIQUITY HALL"	1392
This building dated from 1675 at latest. The print here reproduced was designed and engraved by George Vertue, about the middle of the last century, in satirical commemoration of a visit paid to the inn by the antiquary Thomas Hearne and two of his friends, and of the effect produced on them by its "mild ale." The reference to this appears on the label humorously written in Greek characters, μυδαλε .
ENTRANCE TO ARBOUR OF THE SHOEMAKERS' GILD, SHREWSBURY	1394
From an original drawing kindly lent by Mr. F. A. Hibbert. Shrewsbury contained a number of trade gilds, which before the Reformation had been wont to unite in a splendid procession on Corpus Christi day. After the abolition of the religious festival, the day was still kept by them with feasting and merry-making in the public land called Kingsland, outside the town. It seems that at the close of the sixteenth century the Corporation allotted to each gild a small plot of ground; this, being hedged in and planted with trees, was called an Arbour. Early in the seventeenth century wooden shelters were put up in the arbours, and a little later the gilds put up buildings of brick. All the arbours were fitted up inside with a long table and benches on either side of it, a raised chair under a canopy at one end for the warden of the gild, and a buttery partitioned off at the other end. The earliest as well as largest of these arbours, and also the last surviving, was that of the Shoemakers, which is first mentioned in 1637. The enclosure in which it stood had a gate of stone, erected in 1679 "by the freewill offerings of the brethren and half brethren" of the gild, aided by a contribution from the general fund; the cost was £28 6s. 7d. Two stone figures representing "Crispin and Crispianus"—the old patron saints of the gild—were placed above the arch in 1684.
CORPORATION BADGES, LEICESTER (Art Journal)	1395
The larger of these badges is now in the Museum at Leicester; it is the only one now left of the ancient badges of the town-waits, and seems to date from the sixteenth or seventeenth century. In Canterbury the scutcheon given to each of the four minstrels yearly appointed was worth 100/-, and was returned at the end of the year to the city chamberlain. The smaller badge is that of Edmund Sutton, Mayor of Leicester in 1676.
THOMAS OSBORNE, EARL OF DANBY (from an engraving "ad vivum," by Robert White, in the National Portrait Gallery)	1396
SIGN OF THE BELL, KNIGHTRIDER STREET, 1668 (Guildhall Museum)	1398
SIGN OF THE BOAR'S HEAD, EASTCHEAP, 1668 (Guildhall Museum)	1399
SIGN OF THE ANCHOR, LONDON, 1669 (Guildhall Museum)	1400
SIGN OF ABRAHAM BARTLETT, MAKER OF "BOULTING MILLS AND CLOTHES," 1678 (Guildhall Museum)	1401
PRINCESS MARY (from an etching by A. Mongin, in Hemerton's Portfolio of Art, from a picture by Sir P. Lely at Hampton Court)	1402
Possibly represents her as she appeared (at the age of twelve years) on December 16, 1674, when she and her sister performed at Court in a ballet entitled "Callista, or the Chaste Nymph."
FOUR ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE POPISH PLOT	1404, 1405, 1406, 1407
From a set of designs for playing cards by W. Faithorne, 1684; now in the British Museum.
SWORD-REST OF THE LORD MAYOR OF LONDON	1410
In S. Helen's Church, Bishopsgate; drawn specially for this book.

	PAGE
ENGRAVING ON TITLE-PAGE OF "MUSICK'S HANDMAIDE," 1663	1411
THE DUCHESS OF LAUDERDALE'S BOUDOIR, HAM HOUSE	1413
Ham House, Petersham, built by Sir Thomas Vavasour in 1610, was for a time the residence of Prince Henry, eldest son of James I. In 1643 Charles I gave it to his friend William Murray, whom he created Earl of Dysart. Title and house passed to Lord Dysart's eldest daughter, Elizabeth; from her first marriage sprang the family which still owns the place; her second husband was the too famous Duke of Lauderdale, and the state rooms at Ham, furnished and decorated by the Duke and Duchess, have remained unaltered ever since. The polished parquet floor of the boudoir is inlaid with the Duchess's monogram, E. D. L.; she and the Duke are said to have usually held their private talks seated in the two arm-chairs in the recess.
HAM HOUSE: THE CABAL ROOM	1414
In this room, which adjoins the boudoir, the Cabal ministry held its private meetings. Furniture and decorations remain exactly as they were then. The tapestry hangings represent rural scenes; they were made for the Duke of Lauderdale at the neighbouring tapestry works at Mortlake.
HAM HOUSE: THE LONG GALLERY	1415
JAMES, DUKE OF MONMOUTH (picture by Lely at Dalkeith Palace)	1417
BANNER USED BY THE COVENANTERS AT DRUMCLOG AND BOTHWELL BRIDGE (Napier, "Memoirs of Dundee")	1418
Of blue silk, the inscriptions painted in gold, white and red. The Hebrew words are "Jehovah Nissi," i.e., "The Lord is my banner."
SAMUEL PEPYS (picture by John Hayls in National Portrait Gallery)	1419
Pepys (born 1632, died 1703) was clerk of the Acts of the Navy, while James, Duke of York, was Lord High Admiral. The close relations into which they were brought by their offices served as a pretext for Pepys' imprisonment in the Tower in 1679 on account of the Popish Plot. Nine months later he was released and made Secretary to the Admiralty, a post which he kept till the Revolution. The portrait here given is mentioned by Pepys in his "Diary"; it was painted in 1666, and represents him holding in his hand a song of his own composition, "Beauty, retire," to which he frequently alludes.
FRANCIS NORTH, LORD GUILFORD, KEEPER OF THE GREAT SEAL, 1680 (from an engraving by G. Vertue after David Loggan)	1420
MEDAL OF THE DUCHESS OF PORTSMOUTH, 1673	1423
By John Roettier. The die is in the British Museum.
GEORGE SAVILE, VISCOUNT HALIFAX (from Houbraken's engraving of a picture in the possession of Sir George Savile)	1424
PARADE OF MILITIA AT ABERGWILI, 1684 (from Messrs. Blades' facsimile of Thomas Dineley's "Progress of the Duke of Beaufort through Wales, 1684") .	1426
MEDAL STRUCK TO COMMEMORATE SHAFTESBURY'S ACQUITTAL, 1681	1428
A rare silver medal, by George Bower: struck for Shaftesbury's partizans, who wore it on their breasts. Dryden thus describes it in a satirical poem entitled "The Medal":
"One side is fill'd with title and with face; And, lest the King should want a regal place, On the reverse a Tower the town surveys O'er which our mounting sun his beams displays The word, pronounced aloud by shrivell voice, Lætatur, which, in Polish, is rejoice."
The title of "king" given to Shaftesbury, and the word "Polish," allude to a tale current among his enemies, that he had hoped to be elected King of Poland in 1674.
THE LORD MAYOR AND COURT OF ALDERMEN (De Laune, "Present State of London," 1681)	1429

- | | PAGE |
|---|------|
| FROST FAIR ON THE THAMES, 1683 | 1430 |
| From a broadside (in the British Museum) entitled "God's Works is the World's Wonder." In 1683 the Thames froze so hard that a fair was held upon it. | |
| LEAD AND COAL MINES AT MOSTYN, SOUTH WALES (from Messrs. Blades' facsimile of Dineley's "Progress of the Duke of Beaufort") | 1431 |
| WILLIAM, LORD RUSSELL (from an engraving by Pieter van der Banck, after Sir G. Kneller) | 1432 |
| MONUMENT OF JOHN MARTIN, PRINTER | 1434 |
| In the crypt of S. Paul's Cathedral. The inscription contains some undecipherable words, but may be thus rendered: "Sacred to piety and to the republic of letters. Near this place lie (alas! alas!) the mortal remains of John Martin, late Warden of the . . . Printers' Company of N. . . . ; a man famous even in foreign lands for the learned books which he published, but more illustrious at home for the highly honourable qualities of his mind. He expired on the third day of May, 1680, in the 72nd year of his age. Under here rest also his children, Henry and Mary. That this should not be unknown was the care of his faithful wife, Sara (daughter of) Henry Graunt, citizen and draper, who erected this monument to her worthy husband." | |
| "THE ABOLITION OF MONARCHY." | 1436 |
| Frontispiece to the second volume of Nalson's "Collection of Affairs of State from 1639 to the Murder of King Charles I.," 1683. Some verses on the opposite page explain its meaning: | |
| "Thus black look't Heav'n, the Lightning thus did fly,
Thus th' Hurricane orespred the British sky. When th' Royal Sovereign weather-beaten lay
On the proud Billows of the popular Sea ; The Captain from his Cabin driven away
In that for ever execrable Day ; From that adjacent HOUSE, behold the cause
Of all this Tempest, whence perverted Lawes, Unpresidented, undetermin'd Power,
Blasted our Hopes, and did our Land devour,
A Land like that of Canaan heretofore ;
Till, by mad Zeal into Confusion hurl'd,
'Twas made the Scorn and By-word of the World." | |
| The chief value of the picture lies in the view which it gives of the exterior of the old House of Commons. | |
| CORPORATION INSIGNIA OF COVENTRY (Art Journal) | 1437 |
| Coventry is unusually rich in corporation insignia, including, besides a sword and several maces, a chair of state, the town keys, and some remarkable robes of office. Practically they may be said to date from the seventeenth century, although, as they have all continued in use down to the present time, all have been restored or renewed more than once; in all these restorations, however, the old pattern has been faithfully adhered to. The great mace bears the initials of Charles II.; the smallest is of the same period; the third, intermediate in size, has the arms of the Commonwealth. The sword is two-edged, and bears the inscription, "Civitas Coventre." Above the large mace is the hat of the mace-bearer; at the foot of the chair is shown the sword-bearer's cap of maintenance. On the chair lie the town keys, and the hat of the city crier, more modern than the others, and dating probably from the eighteenth century. His coat hangs above; on the left sleeve is the only ancient badge which Coventry still possesses, of silver, and dating probably from about 1606. | |

	PAGE
MACES, FIFTEENTH AND SEVENTEENTH CENTURIES.	1438
The first two figures (from the Proceedings of the Society of Antiquaries, 1888) are typical illustrations of the way in which the mace as a symbol of office was evolved out of the war-mace. When the mace was no longer wanted for fighting, its handle was first fashioned into a knob or boss to receive the royal arms; then the mace was turned upside down, the head became the handle, the flanges were converted into mere ornaments, and in course of time disappeared, and were replaced by a heavy boss, to counterbalance the weight of the head, which had meanwhile been growing in size, and to which a crown had been added. The first stage of this development is shown in the Southampton mace, where the flanged end still forms the head. In the Newtown mace the head is formed by the broad boss. The plate on the top of this bears the arms of Henry VII.; it is loose, and on its reverse are engraved the arms of the Commonwealth. The two Stamford maces (reproduced from the Art Journal) are fine examples of the complete development which the mace had reached in the time of Charles II.
ROYAL ORDER FOR THE EXPULSION OF JOHN LOCKE FROM CHRIST CHURCH, OXFORD.	1439
Locke, knowing that he was suspected by the Government on account of his intimacy with Shaftesbury, went in 1683 to Holland. In November, 1684, the Dean of Christ Church, Oxford, was desired by Sunderland to remove Locke's name from the list of Students; a few days later came a peremptory order, in the King's name, which was at once obeyed, and which is here reproduced from the original, still preserved at Christ Church. It will be noticed that neither King nor minister seems to have even known the Christian name of the great philosopher. The conduct of Charles towards Locke strikingly illustrates the "danger" to English freedom which lay "in the character and purpose of Charles himself" (p. 1438).
ENTHRONEMENT OF JAMES II. AND HIS QUEEN (F. Sandford, "History of the Coronation of James II," 1687)	1440
THE CHALLENGE (Sandford, "Coronation of James II.")	1442
The manor of Scrivelsby, co. Lincoln, had been held to carry with it the office of champion since the time of Henry I. at least, though there is no record of the actual ceremony earlier than the coronation of Richard II. At that of James II. the champion was Sir Charles Dymoke; he was "completely armed in one of His Majesties best suits of white armour, mounted on a goodly white horse, richly caparisoned." Two trumpeters, the sergeant trumpeter (carrying a mace), two sergeants-at-arms, the champion's two squires (bearing his lance and shield), and the York Herald, preceded him into the hall. On his right rode the Lord High Constable, on his left the Earl Marshal. The engraving here reproduced represents the first challenge to combat of any person who disputed the King's title. York Herald is reading the closing words of the challenge, and the gauntlet lies on the floor. After a pause it was taken up, the procession moved on, and the challenge was repeated in the middle of the hall, and then again at its upper end before the dais where sat the King and Queen. The only occasion when the challenge was taken up was the coronation of George III., when a Jacobite in woman's dress was said to have snatched up the gauntlet, and left another in its place. The ceremony was last performed at the crowning of George IV.
JAMES II. (illumination on patent in Public Record Office).	1443
BRIDGEWATER HIGH CROSS (from an engraving in the Proceedings of the Somerset Archaeological Society)	1445
The Cross, now taken down, formerly stood on Cornhill, opposite the entrance to the High Street, and was used as a market-place. On it was inscribed: "Mind your own business." Over it was a cistern supplied from a brook by an engine at Queen's Mill, and from this cistern water was conveyed to the streets. The cross was also used as a place of assembly. Monmouth was proclaimed king there, after he left Taunton, and his declaration read by the Mayor.

	PAGE
SCYTHES FOUND AT SEDGEMOOR (Tower of London)	1446
Mounted on poles and used as weapons by the peasantry.
BATTLE OF SEDGEMOOR (" Engelants Schouwtoncel verbeeldende het vlugte van Jacobus II. &c. ," Amsterdam , 1690)	1446
GEORGE JEFFREYS, LORD CHIEF JUSTICE (from an engraving by R. White after Sir G. Kneller)	1447
THE ROYAL HORSE GUARDS, TEMP. CHARLES II.	1448
From Hollar's engraving of the coronation procession of Charles II. The Guards were then commanded by the Duke of York, who is seen riding at their head.
MEDAL OF LEWIS XIV., COMMEMORATING THE REVOCATION OF THE EDICT OF NANTES (British Museum)	1449
HOUSE OF A HUGUENOT SILK WEAVER IN ST. PETER'S STREET, CANTERBURY (from a photograph)	1450
This is a typical illustration of the domestic silk-factories set up by the French Protestant refugees in England after the Revocation of the Edict of Nantes. The shop-window occupies the whole front on the ground floor; over this is the living-room of the family, where the weaver wrought at his trade, assisted by his sons and daughters; higher still, in the gable, is a tall, narrow door with two valves, opening down to the floor of the attic, through which, by means of a small crane, raw material and bales of finished goods were drawn up to be stored in this warehouse on the top story.
A CALICO-PRINTER, TEMP. JAMES II. (Bagford Collection, British Museum)	1451
THE POPE RECEIVING THE AMBASSADOR OF ENGLAND, 1687	1452
In 1687 Roger, Earl of Castlemaine, was sent by James II. on a special embassy to Rome. Next year an authorised "Account" of his journey and reception was published in Italian and English, with this frontispiece and other illustrations, by Castlemaine's secretary, John Michael Wright.
TITLE-PAGE OF MISSAL	1454
From a photograph obtained through the kindness of the Rev. Dr. Stokes. This missal was given by James II. to John Brenan, Roman Catholic Archbishop of Cashel. Brenan, as the inscription in his handwriting on the title-page shows, presented it to Cashel Cathedral (of which he had possession throughout James's reign, no successor having been appointed to the Protestant Archbishop Price, who died in 1685). Thence it passed with the books left by the next Protestant Archbishop, Narcissus Marsh, to the library of St. Patrick's Cathedral, Dublin, where it is now.
SATIRICAL PLAYING-CARD, TEMP. JAMES II. (British Museum)	1455
HALBERT (SEVENTEENTH CENTURY) FROM ROME (Tower of London)	1457
MAGDALEN COLLEGE, OXFORD, IN THE SEVENTEENTH CENTURY (picture in the College, painted temp. Charles I.)	1460
THE SEVEN BISHOPS (picture in National Portrait Gallery)	1462
THE SEVEN BISHOPS GOING TO THE TOWER (" Engelands Godsdienst en Vryheid hersteld door den Heere Prince van Oranjen ," Amsterdam , 1689)	1463
MEDAL COMMEMORATING VICTORIES OF DENMARK OVER SWEDEN	1464
Reverse of a gold medal, struck after a triple success gained at sea by the King of Denmark over Sweden, in 1677.
LEWIS XIV. AND OFFICERS OF HIS STAFF	1466
From the "Cabinet du Roy," i.e. , original engraving of the designs for the tapestry and other decorations at Versailles, made specially for Lewis XIV.
CARDINAL MAZARIN (miniature by Petitot, in South Kensington Museum)	1467
MARSHAL TURENNE (miniature by P. Sevin, in same collection)	1468
LEWIS XIV. (from engraving by R. Nanteuil, 1670)	1469

	PAGE
LOUIS II., PRINCE OF CONDÉ (miniature in South Kensington Museum)	1470
JOHN DE WITT (from an engraving by Lambert Vischer)	1472
WILLIAM III. OF ORANGE WHEN A CHILD (Picture by Cornelius Jansen Van Ceulen the younger, in the National Portrait Gallery)	1474
DUTCH MUSKET (Tower of London)	1475
The inscription means "True to Orange until death."
FRENCH PISTOLIERS AT THE STORMING OF AERDENBURGH, 1672 (contemporary Dutch engraving)	1476
The pistoliers here depicted show that the lock has been so far perfected as to admit of a piece being used easily with one hand. A formidable volume of fire was delivered on a given point by lines charging, halting, firing and wheeling in rapid succession. The French are said to have adopted this system of warfare from the Germans.
PALACE AT THE HAGUE; EXTERIOR	1478
PALACE AT THE HAGUE; COURTYARD	1480
These two views are from engravings published while William III. was Stadholder. The palace was the residence of the Princes of Orange, and in it were held the Sessions of the High Court of Justice, the Provincial Court of Brabant, and the States-General of the United Provinces.
THE SEVEN BISHOPS RETURNING FROM THE 'TOWER' ("Engelands Godsdienst, &c., hersteld")	1482
SATIRICAL PLAYING-CARD, TEMP. JAMES II. (British Museum)	1483
WILLIAM OF ORANGE LANDING IN ENGLAND ("Engelands Godsdienst," &c)	1484
"THE PROTESTANTS' JOY" AT THE "GLORIOUS CORONATION OF KING WILLIAM AND QUEEN MARY" (Ballad in Bagford Collection, British Museum)	1488
GREAT SEAL OF WILLIAM AND MARY	1490, 1491
The art of seal-engraving, which had reached its perfection in England under the Commonwealth, had since the Restoration been gradually declining, both as to design and execution. This example shows that it was now fast approaching the lowest depth to which it sank under the House of Hanover.
KING WILLIAM III. (picture by Kneller at Windsor Castle)	1493
JOHN GRAHAM OF CLAVERHOUSE, VISCOUNT DUNDEE (picture in the possession of Lady Elizabeth Leslie-Melville-Cartwright)	1495
THE BATTLE-FIELD OF KILLIECRANKIE	1496
GLENCOE (from a photograph)	1497
JAMES II. LANDING AT KINSALE ("Engelants Schouwtoncel," &c., 1690)	1499
THE WALLS OF LONDONDERRY (after W. H. Bartlett)	1500
Built 1609.
SIEGE OF LONDONDERRY ("Engelants Schouwtoncel")	1501
TABERNACLE AND CANDLESTICKS GIVEN BY JAMES II. TO CHRIST CHURCH, DUBLIN	1502
From a drawing very kindly made by Mr. Thomas Drew, R.H.A., specially for this book. The Cathedral of the Holy Trinity (commonly called Christ Church) was from the English invasion till 1870 the Chapel Royal of Dublin Castle. During the occupation of Dublin by James II., April, 1688—July, 1690, Mass was said in the Cathedral for the King. The tabernacle and candlesticks then used are preserved in the crypt; they were originally richly gilt and decorated. The ornamental cover of the ciborium was stolen many years ago, and is now in the Carmelite Church, Whitefriars Street.
LONDONDERRY EXCHANGE (from print in British Museum)	1503
The old Exchange was destroyed in the siege; William and Mary gave £1500 towards the building of the new one here represented.
MACE (IRISH), 1696 (South Kensington Museum)	1504
Made in 1696 by a silversmith named Martin, of Cork, for the Gilds of that city, but not bought by them, owing to a dispute about the price. The head is given here to show that in the time of Ireland's deepest desolation the Irish metal workers had yet lost nothing of the artistic feeling and manual skill which had characterised their race from the very beginning of its history
WILLIAM III. IN PARLIAMENT (from an engraving by Romeyn de Hooge)	1506

	PAGE
NONCONFORMIST CHAPEL, DEAN ROW, CHESHIRE (Earwaker, "East Cheshire")	1508
Probably the oldest Nonconformist Chapel in the hundred of Macclesfield. It was built c. 1693, for a Presbyterian congregation, whose minister was Eliezer Birch. It is now used by a congregation of Unitarians.
THE SOLEIL ROYAL (Charnock, "History of Marine Architecture")	1510
The finest ship of the navy of Lewis XIV., or of any navy in its day; built in 1690; carried 104 guns, and 1000 men. It was Tourville's flagship at La Hogue, and was burnt at Cherbourg by Admiral Delaval.
MEDAL COMMEMORATING RESTORATION OF CHARTERS TO TOWNS, 1690	1512
In January, 1690, a bill was passed to restore the rights of all towns which had lost their charters under Charles and James. As the inscription on the reverse of the medal says, "Privileges are restored, liberty revived."
LIMERICK FROM THE SEA (drawing c. 1685, in British Museum)	1513
CARRICKFERGUS (drawing c. 1680, in British Museum)	1513
ARMOUR WORN BY JAMES II. AT THE BOYNE (Tower of London).	1514
The head which originally belonged to this figure is now on a pikeman opposite, while James has the head and the bridle of William III. In the illustration the face is hidden and the bridle omitted.
KING JOHN'S CASTLE, LIMERICK	1515
From a view by Bartlett, made before modern changes. The castle was really built by John; it is now used as barracks.
MEDAL COMMEMORATING FRENCH VICTORY AT BEACHY HEAD (REVERSE)	1517
Represents a sea-fight—"The fight at Beves" [Beachy Head], "English and Dutch together put to flight, 10 July 1660;" in the foreground Lewis XIV. is represented as Neptune, and the vanquished are sarcastically admonished—"Speed your flight; to him belongs the empire of the seas."
MONS IN THE 17TH CENTURY (from a Dutch print)	1518
THE BATTLE OF LA HOGUE (from an engraving by Romeyn de Hooge)	1520
MEDAL COMMEMORATING VICTORY AT LA HOGUE (REVERSE)	1521
William's reply to Lewis's medal for Beachy Head (see above, and p. 1517). William, as Neptune, drives away Lewis, the pseudo-Neptune, with his trident, saying "To me it" [i.e. , the empire of the seas] "is given by Fate"—"The offences committed are expiated by a like punishment."
ROBERT SPENCER, SECOND EARL OF SUNDERLAND (from an engraving by R. Cooper of a picture by Carlo Maratta at Althorpe)	1524
MEDAL COMMEMORATING THE STORMING OF TOUBOCAN, 1700	1527
A gold medal, given by the African Company of Scotland as a reward to Alexander Campbell, who, at the head of 200 men whom he had commanded in Flanders, drove 1,600 Spaniards from their entrenchments at Toubocan on the Isthmus of Darien, and thus for a time delivered the Scottish settlers from danger. The obverse represents a Highlander scaling a fortress, with the words: "What not for our country?" "Toubocan, where Captain Alexander Campbell defeated 1,600 Spaniards, 8th February, 1700." The reverse bears the shield of the African and Indian Company of Scotland, with the legend: "Whithersoever the world extends. Strength united is stronger."
THE MINT, BRISTOL (Seyer, "Memorials of Bristol")	1528
In 1696 a new coinage was ordered. A tax was laid upon windows to defray its expenses; and in order that it might be the sooner ready, mints were set up at Chester, York, Bristol and Exeter. At Bristol a "sugar-house" behind S. Peter's Church was bought and fitted up for the purpose; £450,000 was coined there in 1696-7; then the house was bought by the Guardians of the Poor, "therein to employ the poor and youth of this city in spinning and weaving cotton." Thenceforth its proper title was S. Peter's Hospital, but its older name of the Mint still clung to it in popular speech in the early years of the present century.
MARLBOROUGH (drawing by Kneller, in British Museum)	1530
SILVER CALL-WHISTLE	1531
Used to summon a household before the introduction of bells. This whistle is English work of the 17th century; it was dug out of a hedgerow at Reigate in 1854, and is the property of Lord Zouche, by whose kind permission it is reproduced here.

	PAGE
MEDAL COMMEMORATING FIRST PARTITION TREATY	1533
The enclosure in which hangs the Golden Fleece is guarded by a dragon, representing William III. ; legend, "Watchful, he disappoints the greedy one." On the reverse, William, Lewis, and three other allies join hands over an altar inscribed, "to Jupiter, guardian of boundaries;" the legend runs, "Agreement of sovereigns for public safety."
DUTCH GUARDS, TEMP. WILLIAM III.	1534
From an engraving by Romeyn de Hooge, in "Relation du Voyage de S. M. le roi d'Angleterre en Hollande," the Hague, 1692. These foot-soldiers are armed with muskets; the collar of bandoliers, or little cylinders containing charges of powder, may be seen suspended from the shoulder. William's Blue Guards marched across St. James's Park with lighted matches to take possession of St. James's Palace, December 17th, 1688.
MEDAL COMMEMORATING HOMAGE OF DUKE OF LORRAINE TO LEWIS XIV. 1699 (REVERSE)	1535
MEDAL COMMEMORATING OFFER OF THE CROWN OF SPAIN TO THE DUKE OF ANJOU, 1700 (REVERSE)	1535
SATIRICAL PLAYING-CARD (British Museum)	1536
One of a pack designed under Queen Anne. The Duke of Anjou is represented stealing the Spanish Crown.
JOHN DRYDEN (picture by Sir G. Kneller)	1537
SOPHIA, ELECTRESS OF HANOVER	1539
Reverse of a medal struck in commemoration of the Act of Settlement, 1701. The obverse bears another female head, meant to represent Matilda, Duchess of Saxony, daughter of Henry II., through whom the Electors of Hanover were descended from the old royal house of England.
ENSIGN JOHN CHURCHILL (AFTERWARDS DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH)	1540
From an engraving (in the British Museum) thus inscribed: "Mr de Marlborough tel qu'il était en 1668, quand il servait en qualité d'enseigne dans le Régiment des Gardes françaises. Gravé d'après Van der Meulen."
JOHN CHURCHILL, DUKE OF MARLBOROUGH (picture by J. Closterman in National Portrait Gallery)	1542
SARAH, DUCHESS OF MARLBOROUGH (picture by Sir G. Kneller, in National Portrait Gallery)	1543
MEMORIAL OF WILLIAM III. (British Museum)	1544
An unique gold medal, formerly in the possession of the Scott family, of Ballingarry, co. Tipperary, to whose ancestor land was granted in Ireland for his services at the Boyne. The obverse, which bears a portrait of William, is cast and chased; the reverse, representing the Irish harp and some military emblems, is engraved.
SATIRICAL PLAYING-CARD	1547
A satire on Marlborough's known avarice and alleged peculations; one of the same pack as the card given in p. 1536.
RUNNING FOOTMEN	1548
Reproduced for the first time, by kind permission of the Duke of Marlborough, from tapestry at Blenheim Palace, made for the first Duke. This illustration and that on p. 1552 are taken from the tapestry which represents the battle of Blenheim. The figures of the footmen who ran in front of the carriage are of special interest as features of domestic life, as no similar figures occur in pictures of the time.
EUGENE AND MARLBOROUGH RECONNOITRING (from an engraving by Camsvelt)	1549
THE BATTLE OF HOCHSTÄDT (from an engraving by J. van Huchtenburg)	1550
SURRENDER OF MARSHAL TALLARD (reproduced for the first time from tapestry at Blenheim Palace)	1552
"MALBOROUK"	1554
From a broadside in the Bibliothèque Nationale in Paris. This illustration of the French popular song "Malborouk s'en va-t-en guerre," dating from the early part of the present century, witnesses to the persistence of the Marlborough legend.

	PAGE
CHARLES MORDAUNT, EARL OF PETERBOROUGH (from a mezzotint by J. Simon of a picture by M. Dahl)	1557
MEDAL COMMEMORATING VICTORY OF RAMILLIES	1558
A very rare bronze medal; reproduced here from an engraving in the Metallic History of William III., Anne, &c. , published in 1747, to illustrate Rapin's History of England . The obverse represents the victory—"French, Bavarians, and Spaniards captured, destroyed, or put to flight all in one battle at Ramillies, 1706"; round the edge is written: "May 23. Ill-gotten gains are not enjoyed by the third generation." The reverse represents "Brabant and Flanders restored to their lawful ruler by the alliance of England and Holland." The encircling legend runs: "They shine with stainless honours. Under this commander I preserve my country; with him" [i.e. Marlborough] "for my leader, I maintain the King."
SECOND GREAT SEAL OF ANNE, 1707	1560, 1561
The first seal of Great Britain. On the obverse is the Queen enthroned, with the emblems of her three kingdoms; on the reverse, the union just accomplished between two of them is commemorated in a wholly new design, the figure of Britannia.
JOSEPH ADDISON (picture by Sir Godfrey Kneller)	1563
Addison entered the Ministry in 1706 as Under Secretary of State. In 1709 he became Secretary to Lord Wharton, when the latter was Lord-Lieutenant of Ireland (see p. 1565). He was also made Keeper of the Records, but lost his office at the fall of the Whig Ministry in 1710.
ENGLISH SQUADRON CARRYING TROOPS TO TAKE POSSESSION OF DUNKIRK ("History of Queen Anne," 1740)	1564
THE BATTLE OF MALPLAQUET (from the same)	1566
DESIGNS FOR PLAYING-CARDS, 1710 (British Museum)	1567, 1568, 1569
From a sheet of designs for twenty-six cards, evidently made in 1710. The first card here reproduced shows Sacheverell in his coach and the crowd cheering him; the second represents the newly-elected members for London addressing their constituents in the Guildhall; in the third the Queen is receiving an address from the new Parliament which met in November 1710.
HENRY ST. JOHN, VISCOUNT BOLINGBROKE (picture by Kneller, at Petworth) .	1571
ROBERT HARLEY, EARL OF OXFORD (from an engraving by J. van Huchtenburg)	1572
EMBLEMS OF THE SILVERSMITHS' CRAFT, c. 1700 (Bagford Collection, British Museum)	1573
By Robert White, who died 1704.
INVITATION TO A MEETING OF THE GOLDSMITHS' COMPANY, 1707 (same collection)	1574
ADVERTISEMENT OF JOHN MARSHALL, OPTICIAN, 1694 (same collection)	1575
ADVERTISEMENT OF JOHN HEATON, 1709 (Crowle Collection, British Museum) .	1576
John Heaton seems to have been a printer. The curiosity of his advertisement consists in its having been printed on the frozen Thames, like the picture of "Frost Fair" in 1683, given in p. 1430.
PRINTING-OFFICE, c. 1710 (Bagford Collection)	1577
CRIES OF LONDON, 1688—1711	1578, 1579, 1580, 1581
From Laroon and Tempest's Cries of the City of London ; see above, p. cvii.
SIR ROBERT WALPOLE (picture by J. B. van Loo, in National Portrait Gallery)	1583
THE SIX LORDS PLEADING IN WESTMINSTER HALL	1585
LORD NITHSDALE'S ESCAPE	1586
These two illustrations are parts of a contemporary broadsheet, representing the events of the Jacobite rising in 1715-16. The six lords—Derwentwater,

	PAGE
Nithsdale, Carnwath, Kenmure, Widdrington, and Nairne—who surrendered at Preston in November 1715 (see p. 1586), were impeached in Parliament, and condemned to death in February 1716. Derwentwater and Kenmure were beheaded, February 24; Nithsdale's wife visited him in prison on the previous night, changed clothes with him, and thus effected his escape.
CRIES OF LONDON (Tempest and Lauron, 1688—1711)	1587, 1588, 1589, 1590
TRADE LABEL OF THE SOUTH SEA COMPANY (Guildhall Museum)	1591
MEDAL COMMEMORATING THE SIEGE OF GIBRALTAR, 1727	1593
A very rare bronze medal. Obverse: "Gibraltar besieged, 22nd Febr., 1727. To conquer or to die." Reverse: "But there is given a third course, less perilous—to go away"; a sarcastic allusion to the withdrawal of the Spanish besiegers (see p. 1594).
JONATHAN SWIFT, DEAN OF S. PATRICK'S, DUBLIN (from an engraving by E. Scriven, after F. Bindon)	1595
ALEXANDER POPE (picture at Chiswick House)	1596
THE HOUSE OF COMMONS IN WALPOLE'S ADMINISTRATION (from A. Fagg's engraving of a picture by Hogarth and Thornhill)	1598
The chief persons represented are Walpole, Speaker Onslow, Sydney Godolphin, Sir Joseph Jekyll, Colonel Onslow, Edward Stables (clerk of the House), Sir James Thornhill (the painter), and Mr. Aiskew (clerk-assistant).
"IN PLACE" (satirical print, 1738, in British Museum)	1600
The age of political caricature began in England under George II., and instead of the half-emblematical satires, chiefly Dutch, which were common in the preceding century, we now have a series of real caricatures by English artists. After the Revolution of 1688, the progress of the art of engraving made possible the effective production of caricatures, and from the time of George II. a number of artists were actively employed in satirizing political intrigues. Walpole is here represented turning away from Jenkins, who shows his severed ear (see p. 1601). Opposite Walpole sits a lady (probably his wife) receiving a box of jewels from a Frenchman (an allusion to Walpole's alleged secret intelligence with France). In the foreground a man burns a number of The Craftsman in which Walpole's Bill for licensing the stage had been attacked. A courtier pushes away a merchant holding a memorial on "Spanish Depredations," and a pet dog tears the "Merchants' Complaint." In the next room a man pours "£10,000" through a gridiron into the "Sinking Fund"; and in the distance, through the open door, an English ship is seen defeated by a Spanish one.
"THE MOTION" (satirical print, 1741)	1602
Inside the coach, crying, "Let me get out," is Lord Carteret, who had moved in the Lords a resolution "that Sir R. Walpole should be dismissed from his Majesty's presence and councils for ever." The driver is the Duke of Argyll, represented with a flaming sword for a whip, because he had supported the motion with such vehemence that his speech alarmed his own party, and nearly defeated its own object. Between his feet is a dog, "Bub." i.e. , Bubb Doddington, an obsequious follower of the Duke. The postillion is Lord Chesterfield, the footman Lord Cobham. The bishop who bows to the carriage is Smalbroke of Lichfield. The man dropping the "Place Bill" is Mr. Sandys; he had introduced in the Commons a motion for removing Walpole, and he here seems to ascribe its failure to the rash violence of Argyll. Pulteney, the leader of the Opposition, is seen leading his followers by the nose.
MEDAL COMMEMORATING CAPTURE OF PORTOBELLO, 1739	1603
ACTION AT CARTHAGENA (engraving, 1741, from drawing by H. Gravelot)	1604
STATE LOTTERY, 1739 (contemporary print in British Museum)	1606
A State Lottery, the earliest of a long series, was set on foot by Act of Parliament in 1737, to raise money for building a bridge at Westminster. The drawing of the lots began on 10th December, 1739, in Stationers' Hall; the hall here represented, however, appears to be the Guildhall. The Government commissioners superintending the lottery sit at the table on the platform. Behind them are two closed lottery-wheels, under the table is a wheel in use; four secretaries sit at a lower table. According to a practice which became usual, the lots are being drawn by boys of the Blue-Coat School.

	PAGE
CHAINED LIBRARY, ALL SAINTS CHURCH, HEREFORD (Blades, "Biographical Miscellanies")	1607
Interesting as the latest example of a chained library. The books (285 volumes) were bequeathed to the parish by Dr. W. Brewster in 1715; they fill three shelves along two sides of the vestry. The chains were evidently copied from those in the neighbouring cathedral library.
THE VICAR OF THE PARISH RECEIVING HIS TITHES	1608
THE CURATE OF THE PARISH RETURNING FROM DUTY	1609
From engravings, 1793, by T. Burke, after pictures by H. Singleton.
READING POOR-HOUSE (Coates, "History of Reading")	1610
Built in 1727.
FROME SCHOOL AND BRIDGE (drawing in British Museum)	1611
This school was built in 1720.
DEAN BERKELEY, HIS WIFE, AND FELLOW-MISSIONARIES (picture at Yale College)	1612
In 1728 George Berkeley (then Dean of Derry, afterwards Bishop of Cloyne) sailed with his wife, her friend Miss Handcock, Sir James Dalton, Mr. John James, and Mr. John Smybert, to found a missionary college in America. Bermuda was the place fixed upon, but the home government failed to give Berkeley the support which it had promised him, and three years later he went back again, having never got further than Rhode Island. It was there that Smybert painted this picture. Berkeley stands on the spectator's right; next him sits his wife with one of their children in her lap; beside her sits Miss Handcock; James stands behind them; Dalton is seated at the table, writing; behind him stands Mr. Moffat, a friend of Smybert's, and furthest to the left is Smybert himself.
GEORGE WHITEFIELD (picture by Nathaniel Hone)	1613
JOHN WESLEY (picture by William Hamilton, in the National Portrait Gallery) .	1615
SCHOOL (from T. Faber's engraving of a picture by P. Mercier)	1617
The subject of this picture is English, although the style of treatment is French. Philippe Mercier was a Frenchman by birth, but he lived and worked in England.
SAMUEL JOHNSON (from an engraving by Finden)	1618
HANNAH MORE (picture by Opie, 1786)	1619
JOHN HOWARD (picture by Mather Brown in the National Portrait Gallery) . .	1620
MEDAL COMMEMORATING BATTLE OF DETTINGEN	1622, 1623
PIPER IN HIGHLAND REGIMENT (Grose, "Military Antiquities")	1625
SOLDIERS IN HIGHLAND REGIMENT (from the same)	1626
MEDAL COMMEMORATING BATTLE OF CULLODEN	1627
FORT WILLIAM (old print in British Museum)	1628
THE MOGUL EMPERORS (miniature at Windsor Castle)	1630
The Emperor seated in the middle is Timur; on his right are Baber, Akber, Shah Jehan, Muhammed Shah, Ahmed Shah and Alamgir II.; on his left, Humayun, Jehangir, Aurungzib, Bahadur Shah, and Farokhsir. The buildings in the distance are some of their works, among the them Taj Mahal and the Jumna Musjid.
A FRENCH CANADIAN (Bacqueville de la Potherie, "Histoire de l'Amérique septentrionale," 1722)	1632
The inscription in the corner explains that this man is "going out over the snow to war."
"HABITATION DE L'ILE STE. CROIX" (Champlain, "Voyagés," 1613)	1633
This "habitation," founded in 1604, was the earliest French settlement in Acadie. The island, now called Douchet, lies at the mouth of the river Ste. Croix.
FREDERICK II., KING OF PRUSSIA AND ELECTOR OF BRANDENBURG (from an engraving in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris)	1635

	PAGE
GREENWICH HOSPITAL	1636
The English kings had long had a residence at Greenwich when Charles II., in 1664, resolved to build there a new palace, which was begun by Inigo Jones, but never completed. James II. wished to convert the building into a hospital for disabled seamen; Mary eagerly desired to commemorate the great victory of La Hogue (1692) by carrying out her father's project, and after her death (1694) William took it up no less eagerly, as a memorial of her. Wren drew the plans and superintended the work without charge, saying, "Let me have some share in a work of mercy." His designs were hampered by the necessity of adapting them to the existing work of Inigo Jones, which Mary had desired to retain untouched; but the result was a triumph of Wren's genius. The effect of the whole group of buildings, seen from the river, is extremely fine, and it evidently formed in Wren's mind part of a grand scheme for giving a worthy approach to the capital, where he was already embellishing the Tower and erecting the new cathedral of S. Paul's, and which he had proposed to rebuild entirely according to a design still in existence, though never carried into execution. The view here given shows the hospital as Wren left it, with the road originally reserved from the Thames up to the "Queen's House" (at the rear of the hospital), built by Inigo Jones for Anne of Denmark and Henrietta Maria. King Charles's building forms the west wing; behind it is "King William's building," erected 1696-8; opposite to this is "Queen Mary's building," begun in 1702, finished in 1752. The east wing (fronting Charles's building) is known as "Queen Anne's building," and was begun in 1698, but not completed till after Anne's death; it was here that Admiral Byng was confined after his disgrace in 1756 (see p. 1635).
AN ELECTION ENTERTAINMENT, 1755 (picture by W. Hogarth)	1638
WILLIAM PITT (picture by Hoare)	1639
SWORD-BEARER AND MACE-BEARER OF THE CITY OF LONDON (map of London, 1726, in Crace collection, British Museum)	1641
MARDOL STREET, SHREWSBURY (Owen and Blakeway, "History of Shrewsbury")	1642
A good example of the houses which the "great middle class" in the country towns were beginning to build for themselves in Pitt's time.
TOWN-HALL, CARLISLE (Nutter, "Carlisle in the Olden Time")	1643
From a drawing c. 1780; showing the Mayor's procession. The hall itself was built in the reign of Elizabeth.
WILLIAM PITT, EARL OF CHATHAM (picture by Richard Brompton, in the possession of Earl Stanhope, at Chevening)	1645
SURAJAH DOWLAH (miniature in the India Museum)	1647
MEDAL COMMEMORATING BATTLE OF PLASSEY	1648
A Society for promoting Arts and Commerce, founded in 1754, caused medals to be struck on various occasions, as an encouragement to art. The first of these was the medal here reproduced, struck by Thomas Pingo in 1758.
MEDAL COMMEMORATING BATTLES OF ROSSBACH AND LEUTHEN	1649
A brass medal, illustrating English feeling towards Frederick and Maria Theresa. The obverse bears a head of Frederick; on the reverse he brandishes his sword over the head of the kneeling queen.
MEDAL COMMEMORATING THE BATTLE OF MINDEN	1650
A rare brass medal. The obverse represents the opening of the battle by an attack on the village of Dodenhausen; the reverse shows the victor, Prince Ferdinand of Brunswick-Wolfenbüttel, on horseback, with his camp in the background.
"A VIEW OF THE CITY OF QUEBEC IN NEW FRANCE IN AMERICA"	1651
From a drawing signed "Margaret Cecil, 1740," in the British Museum; interesting as the work of an Englishwoman who had somehow visited Quebec while it was still in French hands.

	PAGE
MEDAL COMMEMORATING THE CAPTURE OF LOUISBURG AND CAPE BRETON	1652
Brass ; rare, because of inferior workmanship, and thought at the time not worth preserving. The design is, however, more interesting than those of some much finer medals issued on the same occasion, as the one side bears a head of Admiral Boscawen and the other a curious little view of Louisburg harbour and fort.
GENERAL WOLFE (picture by Schaak, in National Portrait Gallery)	1653
THE CAPTURE OF QUEBEC (contemporary print)	1654
MEDAL COMMEMORATING SUCCESSES OF 1759	1655
Bronze ; an illustration of the feeling towards Pitt. The reversed lily symbolizes the defeat of France ; the lion and the horse are the emblems of England and Hanover ; the list of the year's triumphs, with the names of the victorious commanders, is grouped around the name of the leader to whom all these successes were ascribed, "William Pitt, Prime Minister, under the auspices of George II."
FIGHT BETWEEN THE "CENTURION" AND a MANILLA SHIP (Harris's "Voyages")	1656
In 1740 an English squadron commanded by George Anson was sent to attack the Spaniards in the South Seas. It sailed round the world ; one of the great exploits of the expedition was the fight which took place off Macao, 21st June, 1743, between Anson in the "Centurion" and the great Spanish ship which traded between Manilla and Acapulco, and which was captured by Anson.
NORTH AMERICAN TRADERS AND INDIANS (Gauthier and Faden's Map of Canada, 1777)	1657
SHAH ALLUM, MOGUL OF HINDOSTAN, REVIEWING EAST INDIA COMPANY'S TROOPS	1658
From a picture painted in India in 1781, for Sir Robert Barker, by Tilly Kettle ; now in the possession of Mr. Robert Webb, who has kindly allowed it to be reproduced for the first time here. The Mogul is reviewing the third brigade of the Company's troops, from a state tent, on the plain of Allahabad ; an officer of Sepoys is explaining to him the manœuvres.
CAPTAIN COOK (from Sherwin's engraving, 1784, of a picture by N. Dance)	1660
MAP OF THE COLONIES OF NORTH AMERICA AT THE DECLARATION OF INDEPENDENCE	to face 1661
WILLIAM PENN (picture in National Museum, Philadelphia)	1661
PINE-TREE SHILLING OF MASSACHUSETTS	1662
In 1652 Massachusetts set up at Boston a mint of its own, which issued coins bearing for device an American pine-tree. Charles II. on his restoration was very angry at this infringement of his royal prerogative, but Sir William Temple appeased his wrath by assuring him that the tree was meant for the Royal Oak, and thus symbolized the loyalty of Massachusetts at a time when England itself was in rebellion.
NEW AMSTERDAM (N. J. Visscher's Map of New England and New Belgium, mid 17 Century)	1662
New Amsterdam was the original name of the town which, when transferred to British rule, became New York (see p. 1661).
"A PROSPECT OF THE COLLEDGES AT CAMBRIDGE IN NEW ENGLAND" (American print, c. 1739)	1663
These are the three old halls of Harvard College, Cambridge, Massachusetts. On the left is the original Harvard Hall, founded by John Harvard in 1650 and completed in 1675 ; the middle building is Stoughton Hall, founded by William Stoughton in 1699 ; on the right is Massachusetts Hall, added in 1720.
GEORGE III. (picture by Allan Ramsay, in National Portrait Gallery)	1666
STATE COACH (BUILT 1762) OF GEORGE III. (South Kensington Museum)	1667
FREDERICK THE GREAT (print in Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris)	1669

	PAGE
THE TSCHUDI FAMILY	1670
Burkhardt Tschudi, of an old Swiss family, came to England in 1718, and founded in 1732 the famous business of J. Broadwood and Sons, the oldest business devoted to key-board instruments in the world, and the oldest of any kind in England that is still carried on in the very house where it was first started. That house, known in Tschudi's time by its sign of "The Plume of Feathers" (adopted under the patronage of the then Prince of Wales), is now No. 33 Great Pulteney Street, the piano factory of Messrs. Broadwood. The picture here reproduced belongs to Mr. J. H. Tschudi Broadwood, Tschudi's great-great-grandson, who has kindly allowed it to be photographed for this book. The painter is unknown. The group consists of Tschudi, his wife and his two sons, one of whom continued the business in partnership with his brother-in-law, John Broadwood. The harpsichord Tschudi is tuning was presented by him to Frederick the Great in 1744-5, after the battle of Prague (see p. 1623), when Frederick became the Protestants' great hero, Tschudi being a zealous Protestant. Mr. A. J. Hipkins, the writer of the articles on key-board instruments in the Dictionary of Music, has been unable to discover this harpsichord in Berlin or Potsdam, but he there identified two other harpsichords which Frederick purchased from Tschudi in 1766 for his new palace at Potsdam. In 1773, the last year of Tschudi's life, a harpsichord made by his firm was presented by the Prussian King to Maria Theresa, and another to the Empress Catherine of Russia as tokens of reconciliation; the three sovereigns having just divided Poland, among them, and thus become allies (see p. 1748).
THE MANSION HOUSE, LONDON	1673
This and the next two illustrations are from pictures by Samuel Scott, c. 1750, in the Guildhall Art Gallery.
LONDON BRIDGE AND DYERS' WHARF	1674
THE FLEET RIVER	1675
"THE CITY CHANTERS" (from an engraving by S. Okey, 1775, of a picture by John Collett)	1679
An illustration of the "Wilkes and Liberty" excitement.
BENJAMIN FRANKLIN (Medallion by Nini, in the National Portrait Gallery)	1681
BRITISH STAMPS FOR AMERICA (Harper's Magazine)	1682
EDMUND BURKE (picture by Reynolds, in National Portrait Gallery)	1683
SATIRICAL SKETCH OF BURKE (by Sayer, 1782)	1684
"THE ASTONISHING COALITION—NEITHER WAR NOR PEACE"	1685
A satirical but characteristic sketch by James Gillray, the great caricaturist of this period. The occasion of the sketch was the union of Burke and Fox with Lord North, to whom they had been opposed, in denouncing the Shelburne ministry of 1783, which their coalition brought to ruin. This and the preceding drawing are given to illustrate the effect produced by Burke's vehement and impassioned manner.
WILKES BEFORE THE COURT OF KING'S BENCH (Gentleman's Magazine, 1768)	1688
FRONTISPIECE TO THE MIDDLESEX PETITION, 1769	1690
The petition was from 1565 freeholders of Middlesex, protesting against the "despotic counsellors" to whom was attributed the violation of constitutional rights in the matter of Wilkes's election. The frontispiece, here reproduced from a copy in the British Museum, represents a deputation presenting the petition to the king.
WILLIAM BECKFORD (monument in Guildhall, London)	1691
The inscription below the statue is as follows:—"William Beckford, Esq., twice Lord Mayor. His speech to His Majesty King George III, on the 23rd of May, 1770. "Most Gracious Sovereign,—Will your Majesty be pleased so far to condescend as to permit the Mayor of your loyal City of London to declare in your Royal Presence, on behalf of his Fellow Citizens, how much the bare apprehension of your Majesty's displeasure would at all times affect their minds. The declaration of that displeasure has already filled them with inexpressible anxiety, and with the deepest affliction. Permit me, Sire, to assure your Majesty that your Majesty has not in all your dominions any subjects more faithful, more dutiful, or more affectionate to your Majesty's person and family, or more ready to sacrifice their lives and fortunes in the maintenance of the true honour and dignity of your Crown. We do therefore, with the greatest humility and submission, most earnestly supplicate your Majesty that you will not dismiss us from your presence, without expressing a more favourable opinion of your faithful Citizens, and without some comfort, some prospect at least, of redress. Permit me, Sire, farther to observe, that whoever has already dared or shall hereafter endeavour by false insinuations and suggestions to alienate your Majesty's affections from your loyal subjects in general, and from the City of London in particular, and to withdraw your confidence in, and regard for your people is an enemy to your Majesty's Person and Family, a violator of the public peace, and a betrayer of our happy constitution as it was established at the glorious Revolution."

- "A POLITICIAN" (after W. Hogarth) 1693
 Hogarth is said to have here caricatured a Mr. Tibson, a laceman in the Strand, well known in his day for his keen interest in politics. The picture marks the growth of journals, mentioned in the text, and the popular interest excited by them.
- "EXACT DRAUGHT OF BOSTON HARBOUR" (drawing, 1733, in British Museum) 1694
- LANDING OF BRITISH TROOPS AT BOSTON, 1768 (contemporary engraving by Paul Revere) 1695
- GEORGE WASHINGTON (picture by Gilbert Stuart, in possession of the Earl of Rosebery) 1698
- AN AMERICAN RIFLEMAN } (E. Barnard, "History of England," 1790) 1700
- AN AMERICAN GENERAL }
- FIGHT OF BUNKER'S HILL AND BURNING OF CHARLESTOWN (from the same) . . 1701
- MEDAL COMMEMORATING WASHINGTON'S CAPTURE OF BOSTON (British Museum) 1702
 Several medals in honour of Washington and American Independence were struck in 1789 at the Royal Mint of Paris; possibly owing to the influence of Lafayette, who had returned from America in 1783. The reverse of the finest of these medals is figured here. It represents Washington, surrounded by his officers, watching from a distance the evacuation of Boston by the English: "The enemies first put to flight—Boston recovered, 17 March 1776." On a cannon to the right is the engraver's signature, "Duviv.," i.e. Benjamin Duvivier, chief engraver to the Royal Mint of France. The obverse bears a fine portrait of Washington, with the inscription, "To George Washington, commander-in-chief, assertor of liberty—American Congress." "Duvivier, Paris, f."
- MEDAL COMMEMORATING DECLARATION OF AMERICAN INDEPENDENCE (Snowden, "Medalllic Memorials of Washington") 1703
 A medal designed and engraved by C. C. Wright. The obverse bears the head of Washington; there are two reverses; one consists of a tablet on which are inscribed the chief events of American history, from the "Discovery of North America by the English, July 3, 1497" to the "Assault on Quebec by the Americans, December 31, 1775;" the other, here figured, is copied from a picture by Colonel Trumbull of the signing of the Declaration of Independence.
- THE LIBERTY BELL, PHILADELPHIA (Lossing, "Cyclopaedia of United States History") 1704
 In 1751 the State House at Philadelphia (built 1720-44) received the addition of a tower and belfry, for which the Assembly of Pennsylvania ordered "a good bell of about 2000 lbs. weight" to be cast in England, and inscribed with these words: "Proclaim liberty throughout all the land unto all the inhabitants thereof" (Levit. xxv. 10). The bell was cast in London and sent over, but cracked on first trial. Pass and Stow, bell-founders at Philadelphia, re-cast it twice, and it was finally hung in its place on June 7, 1753. Its sound was the first proclamation of the signing of the Declaration of Independence on July 4, 1776. In September 1777 it was taken down and removed to Allentown to save it from falling into the hands of the British when Philadelphia was abandoned to them ; the seizure of bells as spoils of war, and their employment for casting cannon-balls, being a recognised military privilege. In 1778 the bell was restored to its place. In 1835 it cracked, and is now preserved as a relic.

	PAGE
THE DEATH OF CHATHAM (picture by J. S. Copley, 1779, in the National Gallery)	1706
ROBERT, LORD CLIVE (from Bartolozzi's engraving of a picture by N. Dance)	1708
WARREN HASTINGS (from a mezzotint by T. Watson, 1777, of a picture by Reynolds)	1710
SURRENDER OF LORD CORNWALLIS AT YORKTOWN (Barnard, "History of England," 1790)	1713
THE PARLIAMENT HOUSE, DUBLIN (from a photograph)	1714
Built in 1782 for the independent Parliament of Ireland ; now used as the Bank of Ireland.
ADMIRAL RODNEY (from an engraving by E. Scriven of a picture by Reynolds)	1715
THE RELIEF OF GIBRALTAR (European Magazine, 1782)	1716
THE "DISCOVERY" (Lindsay, "History of Merchant Shipping," from a drawing by E. W. Cooke, R.A.)	1717
The ship which, under the command of Captain Clerke, accompanied Cook in his last voyage. When this drawing was made she was being used as a coaling-vessel at Newcastle ; hence the addition of the steam-funnels.
"THE IMPEACHMENT—THE FATHER OF THE GANG TURNED KING'S EVIDENCE" (after Gillray)	1718
A satire upon Burke's separation from the Tories in May, 1791 (see p. 1753). Fox, Sheridan, and their party regarded themselves as Burke's disciples, and now represented him as turning against and impeaching his own political children.
POSTAGE-STAMP, NEWFOUNDLAND	1718
POSTAGE-STAMP, CANADA	1718
SEAL OF CAPE COLONY, EASTERN DIVISION (collection of Mr. Allan Wyon)	1719
SEAL OF NATAL (same collection)	1719
POSTAGE-STAMP, NEW SOUTH WALES	1719
POSTAGE-STAMP, TASMANIA	1719
Each of these stamps and seals bears a device typical of the colony to which it belongs. Newfoundland is represented on its stamp by a seal, Canada by a beaver ; on the Cape seal is figured a native with spear and shield, on that of Natal the gnu, a species of antelope peculiar to South Africa ; New South Wales places on its stamp the lyre-bird indigenous to its woods, and Tasmania's emblem is the singular animal known as platypus or ornithorhynchus, which is found nowhere else. The stamp of New South Wales here reproduced belongs to a Centenary issue, designed to commemorate the hundredth year from the foundation of this colony, in 1788.
WILLIAM PITT (picture by Gainsborough)	1720
CHARLES JAMES FOX (picture by Karl Anton Hickel, in National Portrait Gallery)	1721
FRONT OF THE OLD EAST INDIA HOUSE	1723
This illustration, kindly lent by Mr. F. C. Danvers from his paper on "India Office Records," represents the original headquarters of the East India Company in Leadenhall Street. The escutcheon with the royal arms and Elizabeth's motto, "Semper Eadem," shows that the façade was coeval with the incorporation of the Company in 1600. The carved woodwork and latticed windows may be compared with those of the contemporary house of Sir Paul Pindar, engraved in p. 988. The design of the frieze seems to be a bold and free development of the Company's arms, figured in p. 990 ; it displays the ships, but increased in number from three to seven ; the sea-lions again appear as supporters, though here with their heads downwards : while

PAGE

- the figure at the top doubtless represents a merchant adventurer with his staff in his hand. The house was pulled down and rebuilt in 1726; to this new building, again, a front was added in 1799; finally, the Company having been dissolved on the transfer of India to the Crown in 1858, the house was entirely demolished in 1862.
- A VIEW OF BOMBAY GREEN IN 1767 (Forbes, "Oriental Memoirs") 1724
 From a drawing made by one of the Company's writers of what he saw from his apartment at the Bunder; viz. part of Government House, the English church, the Secretary's office, the residence of the Second in Council, all interesting for the style of architecture; while the daily life of the place is illustrated by the groups on the green, the official English coach with liveried servants after the fashion of London, the Company's troops, the palanquin, the Bengal chair, and the hackeree drawn by a white Indian ox.
- THE HOUSE OF COMMONS IN 1793 (picture by Karl Anton Hickel, in the National Gallery) between pp. 1726 and 1727
- WAGGON (Pyne, "Costumes of Great Britain," 1808) 1728 Illustrates "the want of a cheap and easy means of transport" for goods, as mentioned in the text.
- AQUEDUCT OVER THE IRWELL AT BARTON, LANCASHIRE ("drawn and engraved by W. Orme, 1793") 1729
- WEAVING AT SPITALFIELDS (Hogarth, "Industry and Idleness") 1730
- JAMES WATT (picture by Sir T. Lawrence) 1731
- SAMUEL CROMPTON (picture by Allingham) 1732
- RICHARD ARKWRIGHT (picture by Joseph Wright of Derby, in the possession of Mr. P. A. Hurt) 1733
- ADAM SMITH (from engraving by Holl of a medallion by Tassie) 1734
- TOKEN OF JOHN WILKINSON (W. Hawkes Smith, "Birmingham") 1735
 John Wilkinson, ironmaster at Bradley, near Wrexham, made the first castings for Boulton and Watt, before they set up their own foundry in Soho.
- COLLIERY-WORK (Pyne, "Microcosm," 1803-6) 1735
- IRON-FOUNDRY (from the same) 1736
- CASTING CANNON-BALLS (from the same) 1737
- THE LINEN HALL, DUBLIN (from engraving by W. Hincks, 1783) 1738
- BAS-RELIEF IN WEDGWOOD WARE 1739
 Pottery, now so universally used for all purposes of utility and ornament, was unknown, except to the wealthy, in the beginning of last century. Its place was taken for domestic purposes by wood, pewter or horn. The change was effected by Josiah Wedgwood (1738-1795), who, in the words on his monument in Stoke Church, "converted a rude and inconsiderable manufactory into an elegant art, and an important part of national commerce." Born in the humblest class, he set himself to improve upon the imperfect ware then sparsely employed in domestic use, and, by means of experiments of a very enterprising character in the then state of chemical knowledge, achieved the production of earthenware, substantially such as we have it now, and called by him Queen's Ware. The practical benefit to the community of such a new appearance among the commodities of daily life can hardly be over-estimated, but the invention with which his name is more particularly connected is that of the material he called Jasper; a fine semi-vitreous unglazed body, coloured in severely quiet tones, and decorated with white bas-reliefs. In this form of pottery he developed a branch of art deriving its inspiration from classic Greece, though not directly imitative. It is peculiar in being entirely the work of the potter, without aid from painter or gilder, and appeals to educated taste by the beauty of its form, and the perfection combined with simplicity of its execution. In its production he was assisted by the refined taste of Bentley and the genius of Flaxman. The engraving here reproduced is kindly lent by Mr. Godfrey Wedgwood. It represents Mercury, as the god of commerce, joining the hands of England and France. This bas-relief was modelled by Flaxman in 1787, to commemorate the negotiation of the commercial treaty with France in that year.

	PAGE
THE "FOURTEEN STARS" TAVERN, BRISTOL (old drawing in British Museum)	1741
This tavern, which stood at the end of Tucker Street, was a favourite resort of the sea-captains who traded with the Guinea coast. Clarkson frequently visited it in order to obtain from these men information about the slave-trade.
WILLIAM WILBERFORCE (monument in Westminster Abbey)	1742
THE FRUIT BARROW (from an engraving by J. Raphael Smith after H. Walton)	1743
A good illustration of children's dress in the latter half of the eighteenth century.
ITINERANT TRADES OF LONDON	1743, 1744, 1745, 1746
Drawn by Francis Wheatley, engraved by Schiavonetti, Cardon, and Vendramini, 1794—5.
MEDAL COMMEMORATING THE CAPTURE OF THE BASTILLE, 1789	1747
MEDAL COMMEMORATING THE KING'S ENTRY INTO PARIS, 1789	1749
MEDAL COMMEMORATING THE GENERAL CONFEDERATION, 1790	1750
"THE TREE OF LIBERTY, WITH THE DEVIL TEMPTING JOHN BULL," (satire by Gillray, 1798)	1754
The serpent is Fox, tempting John Bull to taste the fruit of the "tree of liberty," i.e. , of revolution: "Nice apple, Johnny! nice apple!" John Bull replies: "Very nice napple, indeed! but my pokes are all full of pippins from off t'other tree" (the British Constitution); "and besides, I hates medlars, they're so donn'd rotten, that I'se afraid they'll gee me the guts-ach for all their vine looks!"
"DE QUOI VOUS PLAIGNEZ-VOUS?" (after Raffet)	1758
"L'ennemi menace la France, vous vous élancez, il est foudroyé! Les peuples gémissent dans l'esclavage, ils vous tendent les bras et vous les affranchissez du joug qui les opprime!!! Le drapeau tricolore couvre de ses plis généreux les capitales conquises par vous!!! Et vous vous plaignez! quand il n'est pas un mortel qui ne vous porte envie!"
An officer is represented encouraging by this address a troop of peasant recruits, wounded, ragged, and shod with bands of straw. The splendid series of Raffet's illustrations of the war, one of which is here reproduced from H. Béraldi's "Raffet," revives the finest traditions of the army of the Republic and of the whole career of Napoleon.
PLACARD OF ORDER FOR EXECUTION OF LEWIS XVI.	1760
This placard, which is here reproduced for the first time, has been photographed from the only one of the original placards which escaped destruction, and is now preserved in the Musée Carnavalet. The proclamation was posted up in the streets of Paris, and set forth the decree issued, 20 January, 1793, by the Executive Council for the carrying out on the following day of the sentence of death passed upon "Louis Capet," with the time appointed and the order to be observed in the proceedings.
"GEORGES TOURNANT LA MEULE DE PITT" (print in the Bibliothèque Nationale, Paris)	1761
A French satire on Pitt and George III.
HORATIO NELSON (picture by J. Hoppner, in St. James's Palace)	1762
AN ENGLISH SAILOR	1763
From a print, dated 1779, entitled "A Dance by the Virtue of British Oak." The Englishman is defying a Frenchman and a Spaniard.
"KIDNAPPING, OR A DISGRACE TO OLD ENGLAND," 1794	1764
A satirical picture of the horrors of the press-gang.
RECRUITS (satirical sketch by W. H. Bunbury, 1780)	1765
NAPOLEON BONAPARTE (from an engraving by Fiesinger of a picture by Guérin, 1799)	1766
"THE GLORIOUS FIRST OF JUNE" (from an engraving by T. Medland of a picture painted 1794 by R. Cleveley, R.N.)	1768

	PAGE
NELSON AT CAPE ST. VINCENT	1770
In this battle Nelson held the rank of Commodore. His ship, the "Captain," after engaging with six Spanish vessels in succession, ran alongside the Spanish "San Nicolas" and took her by boarding; Nelson himself boarded through the cabin windows. Beyond the "San Nicolas" lay the "San Josef," which carried the Spanish Rear-Admiral. Nelson led his men from the one ship to the other, captured the "San Josef," and received on her quarter-deck the surrender of the Admiral and officers. The view of this incident here reproduced was "painted under the direction of Lord Nelson and the officers of H.M.S. 'Captain,'" by D. Orme, "historical engraver to the King and the Prince of Wales," and published by him in 1800.
FLAG OF THE "NIGER," 1797 (United Service Museum)	1771
The "Niger" was the one ship whose crew remained loyal during the mutiny at the Nore. This flag was designed at the time by the men themselves, and presented by them to their captain, E. J. Foote.
VIEW OF ONORE FORT AFTER THE SIEGE IN 1783 (Forbes, "Oriental Memoirs")	1772
A fort on the Malabar coast, taken from Tippoo by the English under Captain Torriano in January 1783, held by them against Tippoo's forces through a siege of three months, and a blockade of seven more, May 1783—March 1784, and only surrendered on the conclusion of peace between Tippoo and the East India Company, in the condition which this view displays, and which tells something alike of the character of Tippoo's fortifications and of the stubbornness of the English resistance.
TIPPOO'S TIGER (India Museum)	1773
This representation of a tiger mauling one of the Company's servants was found on the fall of Seringapatam (1799) in Tippoo's palace, in a room full of musical instruments. The tiger and the man are both life-size, and both figures are hollow. A handle on the tiger's left shoulder turns a crank; this works some machinery inside, which causes the man's arm to move up and down with a gesture of supplication, while from his mouth issue a succession of cries, to which the tiger responds at intervals by a harsh growl. A door in the animal's side gives access to another and wholly independent musical mechanism, consisting of an organ with a row of keys to be played on with the hand, and two stops placed near the tail of the tiger.
MEDAL COMMEMORATING THE BATTLE OF MARENGO	1774
Obverse, head of "Napoleon, First Consul of the French Republic"—"Battle of Marengo, 25 and 27 Prairial, year 8." Reverse: "The First Consul commanding the Army of Reserve in person. Remember, my lads, my custom is to sleep on the battle-field."
"PORTRAIT OF AN IRISH CHIEF, DRAWN FROM THE LIFE AT WEXFORD" (satire by Gillray, 1798)	1775
THE IRISH VOLUNTEERS SALUTING THE STATUE OF WILLIAM III. ON COLLEGE GREEN, DUBLIN, 1779 (contemporary picture by F. Wheatley)	1776
The original water-colour for this engraving is in the South Kensington Museum, and in the library is an old engraving of it, bearing the following title:—"The Volunteers of the City and County of Dublin, as they met on College Green, the 4th November, 1779."
JOHN PHILPOT CURRAN (from a mezzotint by J. Raphael Smith, of a picture by Lawrence)	1777
Curran, one of the most brilliant and chivalrous of Irish patriots, stands as an orator among the greatest of his countrymen. In the opinion of Burke he was "the greatest advocate that ever lived." He acted as counsel for the prisoners in all the great trials of 1798; and Lord Brougham declared his defence of Hamilton Rowan to be the most eloquent speech ever delivered at the Bar. O'Connell's judgment that he was "the most eloquent man that ever spoke in English," is probably true in the sense which O'Connell intended—a passionate appeal to the reason, the imagination, and the feelings. His marvellous imagination and humour are commemorated by Byron, who describes him:—

"wild as an Æolian harp
With which the winds of heaven can make accord."

	PAGE
HENRY GRATTAN (picture by F. Wheatley, 1782, in National Portrait Gallery)	1778
Grattan first entered the Irish Parliament in 1775, and became the greatest leader of the movement for Catholic emancipation, and opponent of the Act of Union. In Mr. Lecky's judgment his eloquence was perhaps the finest that has been heard in either country since the time of Chatham. Montalembert thought him the greatest of all modern orators. Byron's tribute to him is well known. " Ever glorious Grattan, the great and the good, With all that Demosthenes wanted endued, And his rival or master in all he possessed." The noble personal side of his character is also marked by Sydney Smith's words. " What Irishman does not feel proud that he has lived in the days of Grattan? No government ever dismayed him—the world could not bribe him—he thought only of Ireland—lived for no other object—dedicated to her his beautiful fancy, his elegant wit, his manly courage, and all the splendour of his astonishing eloquence All the highest attainments of human genius were within his reach, but he thought the noblest occupation of man was to make other men happy and free; and in that straight line he went on for fifty years, without one side-look, without one yielding thought, without one motive in his heart which he might not have laid open to the view of God and man."
HENRY FLOOD (from an engraving, in Barrington's "Memoirs of Ireland," of a drawing by J. Comerford)	1779
Flood, who entered the Irish Parliament in 1759, inaugurated the great movement for its reform and independence. He was one of the very greatest of Parliamentary reasoners, the finest orator whom Ireland had till then produced, and by the universal judgment of his contemporaries one of the greatest intellects that ever adorned the Irish Parliament. If oratorically Grattan and Curran may be called the Irish Demosthenes and Cicero, Flood may be distinguished as the Irish Mirabeau.
ILLUSTRATIONS OF THE IRISH LINEN MANUFACTORY, COUNTY DOWN ("drawn, engraved and published by W. Hincks, London, 1783")	1780—1790
MAP OF EUROPE AFTER THE PEACE OF LUNEVILLE	to face p. 1792
MEDAL GIVEN TO THE INDIAN TROOPS WHO SERVED IN EGYPT, 1801 (Tancred, "Record of Medals")	1793
Obverse, a Sepoy with the Union Jack; legend in Persian, "This medal has been presented in commemoration of the defeat of the French armies in the Kingdom of Egypt by the great bravery and ability of the victorious army of England." Reverse, an English ship, with the Pyramids and obelisk in the background.
PROCLAMATION OF THE PEACE OF AMIENS AT THE ROYAL EXCHANGE (print, 1802)	1794
MALTA (after J. M. W. Turner)	1795
THE ACTION OFF PULO AOR, 15TH FEBRUARY, 1804 (picture by T. Butterworth, in the India Office)	1796
From 1793 onwards great efforts were made by France to destroy British commerce in the Eastern Seas by squadrons of heavy frigates reinforced occasionally by ships of the line, and aided by numerous privateers. The Company itself fitted out ships to cruise for the protection of trade, and an animated warfare was carried on for several years. In the East India Office there is a print which represents the English fleet along with a strong contingent of the Company's ships sent to reinforce it. The ordinary vessels, however, by which the East India Company carried on the Eastern trade of Great Britain were of a size altogether exceptional in those days. Traders between America and Europe averaged under 300 tons, while a large proportion of the East Indiamen were of 1,200 tons burden, considerably larger than a first-class frigate and almost the size of a small ship of the line. No other trading ships carried so formidable an armament for defence against privateers, though quite inferior in fighting power to men- of-war. The picture here reproduced represents the celebrated encounter which took place on 15th February, 1804, in the China Seas between a fleet of merchant vessels under Commodore Dance and a squadron of French men-of-war under Admiral Linois, and in which, as stated in an address afterwards presented to Dance by the Society of East Indian Commanders, he and the other English commanders, officers, and men "under the favour of Divine Providence preserved these 16 sail of the Hon. East India Company's ships, with 11 more belonging to the Merchants of India, from this formidable enemy, who had sailed from the Isles of France and Batavia for the avowed and almost for the sole purpose of intercepting them; a noble incitement to provoke his valour and enterprise considered either with relation to the value of the booty—not less than six millions sterling—or to the incalculable loss which his success would have brought on the commercial and public interests of the British Empire." According to the account given by Capt. Mahan this body of trading ships "by their firm bearing and compact order imposed upon a hostile squadron of respectable size commanded by an admiral of cautious temper though of proved courage, making him for a brief period the laughing-stock of both hemispheres and bringing down on his head a scathing letter from the Emperor. . . . The ships which thus 'bluffed' Admiral Linois were none of them a match for a medium frigate." In a letter to the Secretary of the East India Company Captain Dance gives a singularly modest and interesting account of the manner in which his traders bore down upon and gave chase to the French squadron with its line-of-battle ships. He concludes with the words: "In justice to my brother commanders, I must state that every ship was clear and prepared for action; and as I had communication with almost all of them during the two days we were in presence of the enemy, I found them unanimous in the determined resolution to defend the valuable property intrusted to their charge to the last extremity, with a full conviction of the successful event of their exertions; and this spirit was fully seconded by the gallant ardour of all our officers and ships' companies." For this engagement Dance was rewarded by knighthood and a pension.

PAGE

The five French ships are seen on the right, formed in close line; they are under full sail, and are discharging their broadsides at the Indiamen. These occupy the centre and left of the picture; the rest of the English fleet are seen to leeward.

THE KING OF BROBDINGNAG AND GULLIVER (after Gillray) 1798

A satire on Napoleon's preparations for an invasion of England in 1804. Napoleon, as Gulliver, is "manceuvring with his little boat in the cistern," intently watched by King George, Queen Charlotte, and their children.

MEDAL COMMEMORATING THE OATH AT BOULOGNE 1799

On 16th August the army assembled for the invasion of England swore fidelity to Napoleon, and he distributed to officers and men crosses of the Legion of Honour, from the casque of Bayard, which he sent for to grace the ceremony. This distribution of crosses is represented on the side of the medal here figured, with the date; the other side has a plan of the positions occupied by the different corps on that day, with some of their names, and the legend, "Oath of the army of England to the Emperor Napoleon."

MEDAL DESIGNED TO COMMEMORATE NAPOLEON'S INVASION OF ENGLAND . 1799

The die of this medal was prepared in Paris, with the intention of using it in London after the expected victory. It represents Hercules overthrowing a merman, and bears the legend, "Frappée à Londres"—"Struck in London," "1804." It was afterwards counterfeited in England; but the counterfeit betrays its origin by spelling "frappé" with only one e.

AUTOGRAPH OF NELSON (Royal Naval College, Greenwich) 1800

Part of Nelson's last letter to Lady Hamilton, written just before going into action at Trafalgar, "Monday 21st" [October] "1805." The whole paragraph runs thus: "May the great God whom I worship grant to my country and for the benefit of Europe in general a great and glorious victory, and may no misconduct in any one tarnish it, and may humanity after victory be the predominant feature in the British fleet. For myself individually I commit my life to Him who made me, and may His blessing light upon my endeavours for serving my country faithfully; to Him I resign myself and the great cause which is intrusted to me to defend. Amen. Amen. Amen."

	PAGE
OLD BRISTOL VOLUNTEER (Nicholls and Taylor, "Bristol")	1801
In 1797 Bristol raised a Volunteer regiment consisting of ten companies of infantry and two troops of light horse; the Mayor was honorary colonel. While waiting to procure regular arms, they bought up all the mopsticks in the city and turned them into pikes with iron heads; with these weapons they mounted guard over the French prisoners, when the soldiers who had been performing that duty were ordered away to meet the French invasion at Fishguard.
SARCOPHAGUS OF NELSON (in crypt of St. Paul's Cathedral)	1802
Part of a great tomb begun for Wolsey at Windsor by Benedetto da Rovézano: continued on a grander scale for Henry VIII., but left unfinished: then designed for Charles I., but at his execution Parliament ordered all the bronze work to be sold: the sarcophagus and upper base were taken, 1806-1810, for Nelson's tomb, the rest destroyed for the vault of George III.
AKBER, KING OF DELHI, AND SIR THOMAS METCALFE (illumination in India Museum)	1804
Delhi, the last remnant of the Mogul Empire, passed into English hands in 1803. The Moguls, whose sovereignty had long been merely nominal, received the honorary title of Kings of Delhi, with a grant of lands, to be managed by British officers, for their support. Akber was thus titular king of Delhi from 1806 to 1837. Sir T. Metcalfe, whose dress and features contrast so oddly with those of the Orientals around him, held various appointments in the Delhi territories under the Bengal Civil Service from 1813 onwards, and was Commissioner and Governor-General's agent at Delhi, 1835-53. The illumination, by an Indian artist, probably dates from about 1830.
CALCUTTA MILITIA, 1802 ("Gentleman's Magazine")	1805
MAP OF EUROPE AFTER THE PEACE OF TILSIT	to face p. 1806
GEORGE CANNING (bust in National Portrait Gallery)	1807
OFFICER OF THE 40TH REGIMENT, 1792 (Smythies, "History of the Fortieth Regiment")	1808
OFFICER OF THE 15TH, OR KING'S HUSSARS, 1807 (contemporary print)	1808
FRENCH EAGLE FROM THE PENINSULA (United Service Museum)	1809
Napoleon distributed eagles to the French regiments in the camp at Boulogne in 1804, when he took the title of Emperor. The new flags differed from the old Republican ones in having an eagle instead of a spike on the top of the staff. A small number of these were captured at various places—Salamanca, Vitoria, Waterloo, Maida, &c.—and some of them are in public institutions in London.
SPANISH ROYALIST COCKADE (United Service Museum)	1809
Inscribed in Spanish, "Long live Ferdinand and George III."
MAJOR-GENERAL WELLESLEY (engraved by O. Lacour from a picture by Robert Home, 1806)	1810
SILVER PENNY OF WASHINGTON, 1792 (Snowden, "Medals of Washington")	1813
The mint of the United States was founded in 1792, and issued its first coins in 1793. As early as 1791, however, some experimental dies were prepared, bearing on the obverse a head of Washington, and on the reverse the design shown here. Washington himself objected to the placing of his likeness on the coinage, and in the Bill for establishing the mint it was accordingly ordained that "an impression emblematic of Liberty" should be substituted for the portrait of the President.
LIVERPOOL HALFPENNY, 1793 (from a cast in the British Museum)	1813
An early American coin, or token, used in trade with England; on the edge is inscribed, "Payable in Anglesey, London, or Liverpool." The other side bears a head of Washington.
ENGLISH SAILOR, 1807 (Atkinson, "Costumes of Great Britain")	1814
MIDSHIPMAN, 1799 (after T. W. Rowlandson)	1814
PROCESSION AND CHAIRING OF SIR FRANCIS BURDETT ON HIS ELECTION FOR WESTMINSTER, 1807 (contemporary print)	1816
MEDAL COMMEMORATING WELLINGTON'S ENTRY INTO MADRID (South Kensington Museum)	1819

	PAGE
MEDAL GIVEN TO AMERICAN INDIAN CHIEFS (Tancred, "Record of Medals")	1822
During the American War of Independence the English Government caused medals to be struck as rewards for the Indian chiefs who adhered to the English side. This practice was renewed in the later wars with America. These medals all bore on their obverse a bust of the King; the reverse of the one here figured is interesting for its design, an Indian and an Englishman smoking the pipe of peace together—"Happy while united." The loop for suspension is formed by an eagle's wing and a calumet, or pipe of peace, placed crosswise.
HOUGOMONT (after J. M. W. Turner)	1825
THE "BELLEROPHON" (after J. M. W. Turner)	1827
The ship which carried Napoleon to St. Helena.
CHELSEA PENSIONERS READING THE GAZETTE OF WATERLOO (picture by Sir David Wilkie, 1822)	1828
THE HAT-FINISHERS IN COMBINATION, 1820 (Place MSS., vol. i., MS. Add. 27799, British Museum)	1829
A print at the head of a written paper of "Resolutions agreed to at a meeting of finishers held at the 'Prince and Princess,' Gravel Lane, on Thursday, the 25th of May, 1820." The assembled finishers fix the price for hats (11s. per dozen, or 12s. per dozen, according to "inches yeoman"), and for the finishing work; they resolve that all workmen in shops where the prices thus fixed are not agreed to, shall "solicit their employers" and bring their answer to another meeting, to be held a week later; that each shop shall send to the next and every succeeding meeting representatives in the proportion of one for every five men; and "that Thos. Meyers be Fined 1s. 10d. for the first, and 5s. 3d. for the second offence of being disorderly at this meeting."
THE BOMBARDMENT OF ALGIERS BY VISCOUNT EXMOUTH, 1816 (picture by George Chambers, at the Royal Naval College, Greenwich)	1830
DANIEL O'CONNELL (miniature by B. Mulrenin, 1836, in the National Portrait Gallery)	1833
REPEAL BUTTONS ("Illustrated London News," 1843)	1833
TOWN HALL, BIRMINGHAM (built 1834)	1834
A MANCHESTER OPERATIVE ("Illustrated London News," 1842)	1836
STAFFORDSHIRE COLLIERS ("Penny Magazine," 1836)	1836
THE "ROCKET"	1837
Built by George Stephenson to compete in a trial of locomotive engines for the Liverpool and Manchester Railway at Rainhill, in October, 1829, where it gained the prize of £500 offered by the directors to the makers of the best locomotive complying with certain stated conditions. The greatest speed it attained in the trial was 29 miles an hour; some years later it ran 4 miles in 4½ minutes (= 53 miles an hour). It was used on the Liverpool and Manchester line till 1837, thence removed to the Midgeholme Railway, near Carlisle, ceased working in 1844, and was placed in the South Kensington Museum in 1862. It has been much altered at different times; the view here given is from a photograph of a model at Crewe, made from drawings in the possession of the London and North Western Railway Company, showing the engine as it was originally built. Diameter of driving wheels, 4 ft. 8½ in.; diameter of cylinders, 8 in., with stroke of 16½ in.; weight of engine when empty, 3 tons 5 cwt.; in working order, 4 tons 5 cwt. Total working weight of engine and the four-wheeled truck which formed the tender, 7½ tons.
"GREATER BRITAIN"	1837
London and North Western compound express passenger engine, designed by Mr. F. W. Webb, and built at the Company's works, Crewe, 1893. Diameter of driving wheels, 7 feet; diameter and stroke of cylinders, low, 30 × 24, high, 15 × 24. Total weight of engine, 52 tons 2 cwt.; total weight with tender, 77 tons 2 cwt.; length of engine and tender over buffers, 54 ft. 0½ in.; heating surface, 1,505 sq. ft. 7 sq. in. The leading wheels are fitted with a patent radial axle-box to allow the engine to travel over curves with safety.

	PAGE
MEDAL COMMEMORATING THE BOMBARDMENT OF ACRE	1838
Given by the Sultan to the officers and crews of the English ships which took part in this exploit. The design represents a fortress on which flies the Turkish flag; above are six stars, below is a Turkish inscription with date. The other side has the Sultan's cypher surrounded by a wreath of laurel.
CHINESE SKETCH OF AN ENGLISH SAILOR ("Illustrated London News," 1857)	1838
Issued during the war between China and England in 1839. The cloud issuing from the mouth of the figure is doubtless meant for tobacco-smoke. The original has at the side an inscription in Chinese which runs thus: "This creature appears in the Tsing-teen-heen district of Choo-chow-foo, of the capital of Che-keang. Several troops of men surrounding it, it then changed into blood and water. Soldiers should shoot it with fire-arms, for bows and arrows are unable to injure it. When it appears, the people and troops should be informed that whoever is able to destroy or ward it off will be most amply rewarded. If the monster find itself surrounded by soldiers, it turns and falls into the water. When it meets any one it forthwith eats him. It is truly a wonderful monster."
VISCOUNT MELBOURNE (picture by Sir T. Lawrence)	1839
GREAT SEAL OF QUEEN VICTORIA	1840, 1841
SIR ROBERT PEEL (picture by John Linnell, 1838, in National Portrait Gallery)	1842
LORD JOHN RUSSELL (bust by John Francis, in National Portrait Gallery)	1843
MEDAL COMMEMORATING DEFENCE OF SILISTRIA (Tancred, "Record of Medals")	1844
Given by the Sultan to the English officers who took part in the defence of Silistria against the Russians in May—June, 1854. The reverse, here figured, has a view of the fortress of Silistria, with the Turkish flag flying over it, and the river Danube in the foreground; below is the date in Turkish, "Hegira 1271, A.D. 1854."
RUPEE OF BOMBAY, 1675	1845
Obverse: "Money of Bombay, seventh year of the English rule. Peace and increase come from God." Reverse, the arms of the "Honourable East India Company of England." Bombay, ceded by Portugal to Charles II. in 1662 (see pp. 1345, 1329), was made over to the East India Company in 1668. These first coins were for use in Bombay alone; in 1676 a mint was set up there to coin money current throughout all the Company's possessions.
RUPEE OF BHURTPOOR	1845
A native coin struck just after the transfer of India from the Company to the Crown. It bears the Queen's head and an inscription in Persian, "In the year 1858, of her Majesty the victorious lawful sovereign of England."
VISCOUNT PALMERSTON (from an engraving by Joseph Brown of a photograph by John Watkins)	1846
BENJAMIN DISRAELI, EARL OF BEACONSFIELD (bust by Sir E. J. Boehm)	1848
THE RIGHT HON. WILLIAM EWART GLADSTONE (after an engraving by W. Biscoe Gardner, from a photograph by Samuel A. Walker)	1849
THE "UNION JACK"	1850
This group of flags is designed to show the gradual building up of the now familiar emblem of Great Britain and Ireland. At the close of the twelfth century the English warriors in Holy Land were distinguished by the badge of a red cross, as the French crusaders were by a white one. By the end of the fourteenth century this red cross on a white ground, known as "S. George's cross," was the recognised badge of English nationality throughout Europe, and especially at sea. Under this flag (1) English ships sailed, traded, and fought from the days of Edward III. to those of Elizabeth. Scotland meanwhile had its own national flag, a white saltire on a blue ground (2); the saltire, or "S. Andrew's cross," being the emblem appropriate to Scotland's patron saint, while the colours were almost certainly adopted in the fourteenth or early fifteenth century from France, at that time Scotland's close ally. In April 1606 James I. ordered that "henceforth all our subjects of this isle and kingdom of Great Britain and the members thereof shall bear in their maintop the red cross commonly called S. George's cross, and the white cross commonly called S. Andrew's cross, joined together according to a form made by our heralds and sent by us to our Admiral, to be published to our said subjects." Thus was formed the first union flag (3). After the union of Ireland with Great Britain, there was added a red saltire on a white ground (4), commonly called "S. Patrick's cross." A cross, however, is not the proper emblem of S. Patrick; the device in this case is really the letter X, part of the sacred monogram of the Labarum, and while its form may thus have been handed down from the earliest days of Irish Christianity, its colours are those of England, introduced by the Anglo-Norman settlers of the Pale. At the beginning of the eighteenth century, however, this so-called "cross of S. Patrick" was recognised as the Irish flag, and as such it was, in 1801, incorporated in the flag of Great Britain and Ireland (5), now known as the "Union Jack." The word "Jack," used in this sense, is sometimes said to be derived from "Jacobus," the Latin form of James, and supposed to allude to the union of England and Scotland under James I. It seems, however, to have had another and a far earlier origin. In 1386 Richard II., when about to invade Scotland, ordered that "everi man of what estate, condicion or nacion thei be of, so that he be one of oure partie, bere a signe of the armes of S. George, large, both before and behynde, upon parell that yff he be slayne or wounded to deth, he that hath so doon to hym shall not be putte to deth for defaulte of the crosse he lacketh"—i.e., the soldiers of England were to make themselves known, like their forefathers in Holy Land, by the cross of S. George on their tunics or surcoats—an order which was renewed under Henry VI.; and as early as 1375 these wadded, quilted, or leathern tunics worn by the common soldiers were known as Jacks. In the sixteenth century the word had another application. In 1575 there is an account "for making 1,500 Jackes, plated before, for furniture of the Queene's maties shippes." The details of the account show that these were shield-like defences, made of leather stretched over frames, stuffed inside, and strengthened externally (as the men's jacks also were sometimes) with iron plates. A whole row of them, looking like shields, and all marked with the cross of S. George, is shown on each quarterdeck along the sides of the king's ship in the picture at Windsor representing Henry VIII.'s embarkation for France in 1520, and also in Anthony's picture of the Harry-Grâce-à-Dieu, 1512, reproduced in p. 612 of this book. The two kinds of "jacks"—those of the ships and those of the men—are in fact illustrated side by side in pp. 612 and 613. It is easy to see how the name would get transferred from soldier's tunic and ship's furniture to the cross of S. George, which was the distinguishing badge of both, and thence to the flag on which that cross was emblazoned more conspicuously still.

S. MATTHEW

From the Book of Kells, A.D. 650-690

A SHORT HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH PEOPLE

CHAPTER I

THE ENGLISH KINGDOMS, 607—1013

Section I.—Britain and the English

[Authorities.—For the constitution and settlement of the English, see Kemble's "Saxons in England" and especially the "Constitutional History of England" by Dr. Stubbs. Sir Francis Palgrave's History of the English Commonwealth is valuable, but to be used with care. A vigorous and accurate sketch of the early constitution may be found in Mr. Freeman's History of the Norman Conquest, vol. i. See also "The Making of England" and "The Conquest of England" by J. R. Green.]

FOR the fatherland of the English race we must look far away from England itself. In the fifth century after the birth of Christ, the one country which we know to have borne the name of Angeln or the Engleland lay in the district which we now call Sleswick, a district in the heart of the peninsula which parts the Baltic from the northern seas. Its pleasant pastures, its black-timbered homesteads, its prim little townships looking down on inlets of purple water, were then but a wild waste of heather and sand, girt along the coast with sunless woodland, broken here and there by meadows which crept down to the marshes and the sea. The dwellers in this district, however, seem to have been merely an outlying fragment of what was called the Engle or English

Old England

SEC. I BRITAIN
AND THE ENGLISH

folk, the bulk of whom lay probably along the middle Elbe and on the Weser. To the north of the English in their Sleswick home lay another kindred tribe, the Jutes, whose name is still preserved in their district of Jutland. To the south of them a number of German tribes had drawn together in their home-land between the Elbe and the Ems, and in a wide tract across the Ems to the Rhine, into the people of the Saxons. Engle, Saxon, and Jute all belonged to the same Low German branch of the Teutonic family; and at the moment when history discovers them, they were being drawn together by the ties of a common blood, common speech, common social and political institutions. Each of them was destined to share in the conquest of the land in which we live; and it is from the union of all of them when its conquest was complete that the English people has sprung.

The English People

Of the temper and life of the folk in this older England we know little. But, from the glimpses which we catch of them when conquest had brought them to the shores of Britain, their political and social organization must have been that of the German race to which they belonged. The basis of their society was the free man. He alone was known as "the man," or "the churl;" and two phrases set his freedom vividly before us. He was "the free-necked man," whose long hair floated over a neck that had never bent to a lord. He was "the weaponed man," who alone bore spear and sword, for he alone possessed the right which in such a state of society formed the main check upon lawless outrage, the right of private war. Among the English, as among all the races of mankind, justice had originally sprung from each man's personal action. There had been a time when every freeman was his own avenger. But even in the earliest forms of English society of which we catch traces this right of self-defence was being modified and restricted by a growing sense of public justice. The "blood-wite," or compensation in money for personal wrong, was the first

SHIELD, BEFORE A.D. 450.
Jutish or Danish.
Worsaae, "Industrial Arts of Denmark."

SEC. 1
—
BRITAIN
AND THE ENGLISH
—

MAILCOAT, BEFORE A.D. 450.
Jutish or Danish.
Worsaae, "Industrial Arts of Denmark."

SILVER HELMET, BEFORE A.D. 450.
Jutish or Danish.
Worsaae, "Industrial Arts of Denmark."

effort of the tribe as a whole to regulate private revenge. The freeman's life and the freeman's limb had each on this system its legal price. "Eye for eye," ran the rough customary code, and "limb for limb," or for each fair damages. We see a further step towards the recognition of a wrong as done not to the individual man, but to the people at large, in another custom of early date. The price of life or limb was paid, not by the wrong-doer to the man he wronged, but by the family or house of the wrong-doer to the family or house of the wronged. Order and law were thus made to rest in each little group of English people upon the blood-bond which knit

SEC. I BRITAIN
AND THE ENGLISH

its families together ; every outrage was held to have been done by all who were linked by blood to the doer of it, every crime to have been done against all who were linked by blood to the sufferer from it. From this sense of the value of the family bond, as a means of restraining the wrong-doer by forces which the tribe as a whole did not as yet possess, sprang the first rude forms of English justice. Each kinsman was his kinsman's keeper, bound to protect him from wrong, to hinder him from wrong-doing, and to suffer with and pay for him, if wrong were done. So fully was this principle recognized that, even if any man was charged before his fellow-tribesmen with crime, his kinsfolk still remained in fact his sole judges ; for it was by their solemn oath of his innocence or his guilt that he had to stand or fall.

The English Society

The blood-bond gave both its military and social form to Old English society. Kinsmen fought side by side in the hour of battle, and the feelings of honour and discipline which held the host together were drawn from the common duty of every man in each little group of warriors to his house. And as they fought side by side on the field, so they dwelled side by side on the soil. Harling abode by Harling, and Billing by Billing ; and each "wick" or "ham" or "stead" or "tun" took its name from the kinsmen who dwelt together in it. The home or "ham" of the Billings would be Billingham, and the "tun" or township of the Harlings would be Harlington. But in such settlements, the tie of blood was widened into the larger tie of land. Land with the German race seems at a very early time to have become the accompaniment of full freedom. The freeman was strictly the freeholder, and the exercise of his full rights as a free member of the community to which he belonged was inseparable from the possession of his

PART OF A HELMET, IRON OVERLAID WITH BRONZE, REPRESENTING A NORTHERN WARRIOR.

Montelius, "Civilization of Sweden."

“holding.” The landless man ceased for all practical purposes to be free, though he was no man’s slave. In the very earliest glimpse we get of the German race we see them a race of landholders and land-tillers. Tacitus, the first Roman who sought to know these destined conquerors of Rome, describes them as pasturing on the forest glades around their villages, and ploughing their village fields. A feature which at once struck him as parting them from the civilized world to which he himself belonged, was their hatred of cities, and their love even within their little settlements of a jealous independence.

“They live apart,” he says, “each by himself, as woodside, plain, or fresh spring attracts him.” And as each dweller within the settlement was jealous of his own isolation and independence among his fellow settlers, so each settlement was jealous of its independence among its fellow settlements. Of the character of their life in this early world, however, we know little save what may be gathered from the indications of a later time. Each little farmer commonwealth was girt in by its own border or “mark,” a belt of forest or waste or fen which parted it from its fellow villages, a ring of common ground which none of its settlers might take for his own, but which sometimes served as a death-ground where criminals met their doom,

SILVER CUP.
 Danish.
 Montelius, “Civilization of Sweden.”

EARTHENWARE EWER.
 Scandinavian.
 Montelius, “Civilization of Sweden.”

SEC. I BRITAIN
AND THE ENGLISH

and was held to be the special dwelling-place of the nixie and the will-o'-the-wisp. If a stranger came through this wood, or over this waste, custom bade him blow his horn as he came, for if he stole through secretly he was taken for a foe, and any man might lawfully slay him. Inside this boundary the "township," as the village was then called from the "tun" or rough fence and trench that served as its simple fortification, formed a ready-made fortress in war, while in peace its entrenchments were serviceable in the feuds of village with village, or house with house. Within the village we find from the first a marked social difference between two orders of its inhabitants. The bulk of its homesteads were those of its freemen or "ceorls;" but amongst these were the larger homes of "eorls," or men distinguished among their fellows by noble blood, who were held in an hereditary reverence, and from whom the leaders of the village were chosen in war time, or rulers in time of peace. But the choice was a purely voluntary one, and the man of noble blood enjoyed no legal privilege among his fellows. The holdings of the freemen clustered round a moot-hill or sacred tree where the community met from time to time to order its own industry and to frame its own laws. Here plough-land and meadow-land were shared in due lot among the villagers, and field and homestead passed from man to man. Here strife of farmer with farmer was settled according to the "customs" of the township as its "elder men" stated them, and the wrong-doer was judged and his fine assessed by the kinsfolk; and here men were chosen to follow headman or ealdorman to hundred court or war. It is with a reverence such as is stirred by the sight of the head-waters of some mighty river that one looks back to these tiny moots, where the men of the village met to order the village life and the village industry, as their descendants, the men of a later England, meet in Parliament at Westminster, to frame laws and do justice for the great empire which has sprung from this little body of farmer-commonwealths in Sleswick.

HORNS, FIFTH CENTURY, FOUND AT GALLEHUS, NORTH JUTLAND.
Worsaae, "Industrial Arts of Denmark."

SEC. I BRITAIN
AND THE ENGLISH

The religion of the English was the same as that of the whole German family. Christianity, which had by this time brought

The English Religion

HEAD OF THUNDER.
Stephens, "Thunor the Thunderer."

about the conversion of the Roman Empire, had not penetrated as yet among the forests of the North. Our own names for the days of the week still recall to us the gods whom our fathers worshipped. Wednesday is the day of Woden, the war-god, the guardian of ways and boundaries, the inventor of letters, the common god of the whole conquering people, whom every tribe held to be the first ancestor of its kings. Thursday is the day of Thunder, or, as the Northmen called him, Thor, the god of air and storm and rain; as Friday is Frea's-day, the god of peace and joy and fruitfulness, whose emblems, borne aloft by dancing maidens, brought increase to every field and stall they visited. Saturday may commemorate an obscure god Sætere; Tuesday the dark god, Tiw, to meet whom was death. Behind these floated dim shapes of an older mythology; Eostre, the goddess of the dawn, or of the spring, who lends her name to the Christian festival of the Resurrection; "Wyrd," the death-goddess, whose memory lingered long in the "weird" of northern superstition; or the Shield-Maidens, the "mighty women" who, an old rime tells us, "wrought on the battle-field their toil, and hurled the thrilling javelins." Nearer to the popular fancy lay deities of wood and fell, or the hero-gods of legend and song; "Nicor," the water-sprite, who gave us our water-

SEC. 1
 BRITAIN
 AND THE ENGLISH

nixies and "Old Nick"; "Weland," the forger of mighty shields and sharp-biting swords, whose memory lingers in the stories of "Weyland's Smithy" in Berkshire; while the name of Ailesbury may preserve the last trace of the legend of Weland's brother, the sun-archer Ægil. But it is only in broken fragments that this mass of early faith and early poetry still lives for us, in a name, in the grey stones of a cairn, or in snatches of our older song; and BRACTEATES REPRESENTING NORTHERN DIVINITIES.

Worsaae, "Industrial Arts of Denmark."

the faint traces of worship or of priesthood which we find in later history show how lightly it clung to the national life.

Britain

From Sleswick and the shores of the Northern Sea we must pass, before opening our story, to a land which, dear as it is now to Englishmen, had not as yet been trodden by English feet. The island of Britain had for nearly four hundred years been a province of the Empire. A descent of Julius Cæsar revealed it (B.C. 55) to the Roman world, but nearly a century elapsed before the Emperor Claudius attempted its definite conquest. The victories of Julius Agricola (A.D. 78—84) carried the Roman frontier to the Firths of Forth and of Clyde, and the work of Roman civilization followed hard upon the Roman sword. Population was grouped in cities such as York or Lincoln, cities governed by their own municipal officers, guarded by massive walls, and linked together by a network of roads, which extended from one end of the island to the other. Commerce sprang up in ports like that of London; agriculture flourished till Britain was able at need to supply the necessities of Gaul; its mineral resources were explored in the tin mines of Cornwall, the lead mines of Somerset and Northumberland, and the iron mines of the Forest of Dean. The wealth of the island grew fast during centuries of unbroken peace, but the evils which were slowly sapping the strength of the Roman Empire at large must have told heavily on the real wealth of the province of Britain. Here, as in Italy or Gaul, the population probably declined as the estates of the landed proprietors grew larger, and the cultivators sank into serfs whose cabins clustered round the luxurious villas of their lords. The mines, if worked by forced labour, must have been a source of endless oppression. Town and country were alike crushed by heavy taxation, while industry was fettered by laws that turned every trade into an hereditary caste. Above all, the purely despotic system of the Roman Government, by crushing all local independence, crushed all local vigour. Men forgot how to fight for their country when they forgot how to govern it.

Such causes of decay were common to every province of the Empire; but there were others that sprang from the peculiar circumstances of Britain itself. The island was weakened by a disunion within, which arose from the partial character of its civilization. It was only in the towns that the conquered Britons became entirely Romanized. Over large tracts of country the rural Britons seem to have remained apart, speaking their own tongue, owning some traditional allegiance to their native chiefs, and even retaining their native laws. The use of the Roman language may be taken as marking the progress of Roman civilization, and though Latin had wholly superseded the language of the conquered peoples in Spain or Gaul, its use seems to have been confined in Britain to the townsfolk and the wealthier landowners without the towns. The dangers that sprang from such a severance between the two elements of the population must have been stirred into active life by the danger which threatened Britain from the North. The Picts who had been sheltered from Roman conquest by the fastnesses of the Highlands were roused in their

SEC. I BRITAIN
 AND THE ENGLISH

turn to attack by the weakness of the province and the hope of plunder. Their invasions penetrated to the heart of the island. Raids so extensive could hardly have been effected without help from within, and the dim history of the time allows us to see not merely an increase of disunion between the Romanized and un-Romanized population of Britain, but even an alliance between the last and their free kinsfolk, the Picts. The struggles of Britain, however, lingered on till dangers nearer home forced the Empire to recall its legions and leave the province to itself. Ever since the birth of Christ the countries which lay round the Mediterranean Sea, and which then comprehended the whole of the civilized world, had rested in peace beneath the rule of Rome. During four hundred years its frontier had held at bay the barbarian world without—the Parthian of the Euphrates, the Numidian of the African desert, the German of the Danube or the Rhine. It was this mass of savage barbarism that at last broke in on the Empire as it sank into decay. In the western dominions of Rome the triumph of the invaders was complete. The Franks conquered and colonized Gaul. The West-Goths conquered and colonized Spain. The Vandals founded a kingdom in Africa. The Burgundians encamped in the border-land between Italy and the Rhone. The East-Goths ruled at last in Italy itself. And now that the fated hour was come, the Saxon and the Engle too closed upon their prey.

Britain
 and the English

It was to defend Italy against the Goths that Rome in 410 recalled her legions from Britain. The province, thus left unaided, seems to have fought bravely against its assailants, and once at least to have driven back the Picts to their mountains in a rising of despair. But the threat of fresh inroads found Britain torn with civil quarrels which made a united resistance impossible, while its Pictish enemies strengthened themselves by a league with marauders from Ireland (Scots as they were then called), whose pirate-boats were harrying the western coast of the island, and with a yet more formidable race of pirates who had long been pillaging along the British Channel. These were the English. We do not know whether it was the pressure of other tribes or the example of their German brethren who were now moving in a general attack on the Empire from their forest homes, or simply the barrenness of their coast, which drove the hunters, farmers, BOAT FOR FOURTEEN PAIRS OF OARS, FOUND AT NYDAM, JUTLAND.

Montelius "Civilization of Sweden."

SEC. 1
BRITAIN
AND THE ENGLISH

fishermen, of the English tribes to sea. But the daring spirit of their race already broke out in the secrecy and suddenness of their swoop, in the fierceness of their onset, in the careless glee with which they seized either sword or oar. "Foes are they," sang a Roman poet of the time, "fierce beyond other foes, and cunning as they are fierce; the sea is their school of war, and the storm their friend; they are sea-wolves that live on the pillage of the world." To meet the league of Pict, Scot, and Saxon by the forces of the province itself became impossible; and the one course left was to imitate the fatal policy by which the Empire had invited its own doom while striving to avert it, the policy of matching barbarian against barbarian. The rulers of Britain resolved to break the league by detaching from it the freebooters who were harrying her eastern coast, and to use their new allies against the Pict. By the usual promises of land and pay, a band of warriors from Jutland were drawn for this purpose in 449 to the shores of Britain, with their chiefs, Hengest and Horsa, at their head.

Section II.—The English Conquest. 449—577

[Authorities for the Conquest of Britain.—The only extant British account is that of the monk Gildas, diffuse and inflated, but valuable as the one authority for the state of the island at the time, and as giving, in the conclusion of his work, the native story of the conquest of Kent. I have examined his general character, and the objections to his authenticity, &c., in two papers in the Saturday Review for April 24 and May 8, 1869. The Conquest of Kent is the only one of which we have any record from the side of the conquered. The English conquerors have left brief jottings of the conquest of Kent, Sussex, and Wessex, in the curious annals which form the opening of the compilation now known as the "English Chronicle." They are undoubtedly historic, though with a slight mythical intermixture. We possess no materials for the history of the English in their invasion of Mid-Britain or Mercia, and a fragment of the annals of Northumbria embodied in the later compilation which bears the name of Nennius alone throws light upon their actions in the North. Dr. Guest's papers in the "Origines Celtae" are the best modern narratives of the conquest.] (The story has since been told by Mr. Green in "The Making of England.")

The English in Thanet

It is with the landing of Hengest and his war-band at Ebbsfleet on the shores of the Isle of Thanet that English history begins. No spot in Britain can be so sacred to Englishmen as that which first felt the tread of English feet. There is little indeed to catch the eye in Ebbsfleet itself, a mere lift of higher ground, with a few grey cottages dotted over it, cut off nowadays from the sea by a reclaimed meadow and a sea-wall. But taken as a whole, the scene has a wild beauty of its own. To the right the white curve of Ramsgate cliffs looks down on the crescent of Pegwell Bay; far away to the left, across grey marsh-levels, where smoke-wreaths mark the sites of Richborough and Sandwich, the coast-line bends dimly to the fresh rise of cliffs beyond Deal. Everything in the character of the ground confirms the national tradition which fixed here the first landing-place of our English fathers, for great

SEC. II
THE ENGLISH
CONQUEST

449
TO 577

EBBSFLEET.

as the physical changes of the country have been since the fifth century, they have told little on its main features. It is easy to discover in the misty level of the present Minster marsh what was once a broad inlet of sea parting Thanet from the mainland of Britain, through which the pirate-boats of the first Englishmen came sailing with a fair wind to the little gravel-spit of Ebbsfleet; and Richborough, a fortress whose broken ramparts still rise above the grey flats which have taken the place of this older sea-channel, was the common landing-place of travellers from Gaul. If the war-ships of the pirates therefore were cruising off the coast at the moment when the bargain with the Britons was concluded, their disembarkation at Ebbsfleet almost beneath the walls of

SEC. II
 THE ENGLISH
 CONQUEST 449
 TO 577

Richborough would be natural enough. But the after-current of events serves to show that the choice of this landing-place was the result of a settled design. Between the Briton and his hireling soldiers there could be little trust. Quarters in Thanet would satisfy the followers of Hengest, who still lay in sight of their fellow-pirates in the Channel, and who felt themselves secured against the treachery which had so often proved fatal to the barbarian by the broad inlet which parted their camp from the mainland. Nor was the choice less satisfactory to the provincial, trembling—and, as the event proved, justly trembling—lest in his zeal against the Pict he had introduced an even fiercer foe into Britain. His dangerous allies were cooped up in a corner of the land, and parted from it by a sea-channel which was guarded by the strongest fortresses of the coast.

RICHBOROUGH.

The English Attack

The need of such precautions was seen in the disputes which arose as soon as the work for which the mercenaries had been hired was done. The Picts were hardly scattered to the winds in a great battle when danger came from the Jutes themselves. Their numbers probably grew fast as the news of the settlement spread among the pirates in the Channel, and with the increase of their number must have grown the difficulty of supplying rations and pay. The dispute which rose over these questions was at last closed by Hengest's men with a threat of war. The threat, however, as we have seen, was no easy one to carry out. Right across their path in any attack upon Britain stretched the inlet of sea that parted Thanet from the mainland, a strait which was then traversable only at low water by a long and dangerous ford, and guarded at either mouth by the fortresses of Richborough and Reculver. The channel of the Medway, with the forest of the Weald bending round it from the south, furnished another line of defence in the rear, while strongholds on the sites of our Canterbury and Rochester guarded the road to London ; and all around lay the soldiers placed at the command of the Count of the Saxon Shore, to hold the coast against the barbarian. Great however as these difficulties were, they failed to check the sudden onset of the Jutes. The inlet seems to have been crossed, the coast-road to London seized, before any force could be collected to oppose the English advance ; and it was only when they passed the Swale and looked to their right over the potteries whose refuse still strews the mudbanks of Upchurch, that their march seems to have swerved abruptly to the south. The guarded walls of Rochester probably forced them to turn southwards along the ridge of low hills which forms the eastern boundary of the Medway valley. Their way led them through a district full of memories of a past which had even then faded from the minds of men ; for the hill-slopes which they traversed were the grave-ground of a vanished race, and scattered among the boulders that strewed the ground rose the cromlechs and huge barrows of the dead. One mighty relic survives in the monument now called Kit's Coty House, which had been linked in old days by an avenue of huge stones to a burial-ground near Addington. It was from a steep knoll on which the grey weather-beaten stones of this monument are reared that the view of their first battle-field would break on the English warriors ; and a lane which still leads down from it through peaceful homesteads would guide them across the ford which has left its name in the little village of Aylesford. The Chronicle of the conquering people tells nothing of the rush that may have carried the ford, or of the fight that went struggling up through the village. It only tells that Horsa fell in the moment of victory ; and the flint-heap of Horsted, which has long preserved his name, and was held in after-time

SEC. II
 THE ENGLISH
 CONQUEST 449
 TO 577

SEC. II
 THE ENGLISH
 CONQUEST 449
 TO 577 Extermination
 of the Britons

to mark his grave, is thus the earliest of those monuments of English valour of which Westminster is the last and noblest shrine.

The victory of Aylesford did more than give East Kent to the English; it struck the key-note of the whole English conquest of Britain. The massacre which followed the battle indicated at once the merciless nature of the struggle which had begun. While the wealthier Kentish landowners fled in panic over sea, the poorer Britons took refuge in hill and forest till hunger drove them from their lurking-places to be cut down or enslaved by their conquerors.

KIT'S COTY HOUSE.

It was in vain that some sought shelter within the walls of their churches; for the rage of the English seems to have burned fiercest against the clergy. The priests were slain at the altar, the churches fired, the peasants driven by the flames to fling themselves on a ring of pitiless steel. It is a picture such as this which distinguishes the conquest of Britain from that of the other provinces of Rome. The conquest of Gaul by the Frank, or of Italy by the Lombard, proved little more than a forcible settlement of the one or the other among tributary subjects who were destined in a long course of ages to absorb their conquerors. French is the tongue, not of the Frank, but of the Gaul whom he overcame ; and the fair hair of the Lombard is now all but unknown in Lombardy. But the English conquest for a hundred and fifty years was a sheer dispossession and driving back of the people whom the English conquered. In the world-wide struggle between Rome and the German invaders no land was so stubbornly fought for or so hardily won. The conquest of Britain was indeed only partly wrought out after two centuries of bitter warfare. But it was just through the long and merciless nature of the struggle that of all the German conquests this proved the most thorough and complete. So far as the English sword in these earlier days reached, Britain became England, a land, that is, not of Britons, but of Englishmen. It is possible that a few of the vanquished people may have lingered as slaves round the homesteads of their English conquerors, and a few of their household words (if these were not brought in at a later time) mingled oddly with the English tongue. But doubtful exceptions such as these leave the main facts untouched. When the steady progress of English conquest was stayed for a while by civil wars a century and a half after Aylesford, the Briton had disappeared from half of the land which had been his own, and the tongue, the religion, the laws of his English conqueror reigned without a rival from Essex to the Peak of Derbyshire and the mouth of the Severn, and from the British Channel to the Firth of Forth.

Aylesford, however, was but the first step in this career of conquest. How stubborn the contest was may be seen from the fact that it took sixty years to complete the conquest of Southern Britain alone. It was twenty years before Kent itself was won. After a second defeat at the passage of the Cray, the Britons "forsook Kent-land and fled with much fear to London ;" but the ground was soon won back again, and it was not until 465 that a series of petty conflicts made way for a decisive struggle at Wippedsfleet. Here however the overthrow was so terrible that all hope of saving the bulk of Kent seems to have been abandoned, and it was only on its southern shore that the Britons held their ground. Eight years later the long contest was over, and with the fall of Lymne, whose broken walls look from the slope to which they cling over the great flat of Romney Marsh, the work of the

SEC. II
THE ENGLISH
CONQUEST 449
TO 577

Conquest
of the Saxon Shore

457

473

SEC. 11
THE ENGLISH
CONQUEST 449
TO 577

first conqueror was done. But the greed of plunder drew fresh war-bands from the German coast. New invaders, drawn from among the Saxon tribes that lay between the Elbe and the Rhine, were seen in 477, only four years later, pushing slowly along the strip of land which lay westward of Kent between the Weald and the sea. Nowhere has the physical aspect of the country been more utterly changed. The vast sheet of scrub, woodland, and waste which then bore the name of the Andredsweald stretched for more than a hundred miles from the borders of Kent to the Hampshire Downs, extending northward almost to the Thames, and leaving only a thin strip of coast along its southern edge. This coast was guarded by a great fortress which occupied the spot now called Pevensey, the future landing-place of the Norman Conqueror. The fall of this fortress of Anderida in 491 established the kingdom of the South-Saxons; "Ælle and Cissa," ran the pitiless record of the conquerors, "beset Anderida, and slew all that were therein, nor was there afterwards one Briton left." Another tribe of Saxons was at the same time conquering on the other side of Kent, to the north of the estuary of the Thames, and had founded the settlement of the East-Saxons, as these warriors came to be called, in the valleys of the Colne and the Stour. To the northward of the Stour, the work of conquest was taken up by the third of the tribes whom we have seen dwelling in their German homeland, whose name was destined to absorb that of Saxon or Jute, and to stamp itself on the land they won. These were the Engle, or Englishmen. Their first descents seem to have fallen on the great district which was cut off from the rest of Britain by the Wash and the Fens and long reaches of forest, the later East Anglia, where the conquerors settled as the North-folk and the South-folk, names still preserved to us in the modern counties. With this settlement the first stage in the conquest was complete. By the close of the fifth century the whole coast of Britain, from the Wash to Southampton Water, was in the hands of the invaders. As yet, however, the enemy had touched little more than the coast; great masses of woodland or of fen still prisoned the Engle, the Saxon, and the Jute alike within narrow limits. But the sixth century can hardly have been long begun when each of the two peoples who had done the main work of conquest opened a fresh attack on the flanks of the tract they had won. On its northern flank the Engle appeared in the estuaries of the Forth and of the Humber. On its western flank, the Saxons appeared in the Southampton Water.

The true conquest of Southern Britain was reserved for a fresh band of Saxons, a tribe whose older name was that of the Gewissas, but who were to be more widely known as the West-Saxons. Landing westward of the strip of coast which had been won by the war-bands of Ælle, they struggled under Cerdic and Cynric up from Southampton Water in 495 to the great downs where Winchester offered so rich a prize. Five thousand Britons fell in a fight which opened the country to these invaders, and a fresh victory at Charford in 519 set the crown of the West-Saxons on the head of Cerdic. We know little of the incidents of these conquests; nor do we know why at this juncture they seem to have been suddenly interrupted. But it is certain that a victory of the Britons at Mount Badon in the year 520 checked the progress of

SEC. II
—
THE ENGLISH
CONQUEST 449
TO 577

Conquest of Southern Britain

508

SEC. II
 THE ENGLISH
 CONQUEST 449
 TO 577

the West-Saxons, and was followed by a long pause in their advance ; for thirty years the great belt of woodland which then curved round from Dorset to the valley of the Thames seems to have barred the way of the assailants. What finally broke their inaction we cannot tell. We only know that Cynric, whom Cerdic's death left king of the West-Saxons, again took up the work of invasion by a new advance in 552. The capture of the hill-fort of Old Sarum threw open the reaches of the Wiltshire Downs ; and pushing northward to a new battle at Barbury Hill, they completed the conquest of the Marlborough Downs. From the bare uplands the invaders turned eastward to the richer valleys of our Berkshire, and after a battle with the Kentish men at Wimbledon, the land south of the Thames which now forms our Surrey was added to their dominions. The road along the Thames was however barred to them, for the district round London seems to have been already won and colonized by the East-Saxons. But a march of their King Cuthwulf made them masters in 571 of the districts which now form Oxfordshire and Buckinghamshire ; and a few years later they swooped from the Wiltshire uplands on the rich prey that lay along the Severn. Gloucester, Cirencester, and Bath, cities which had leagued under their British kings to resist this onset, became the spoil of a Saxon victory at Deorham in 577, and the line of the great western river lay open to the arms of the conquerors. Under a new king, Ceawlin, the West-Saxons penetrated to the borders of Chester, and Uriconium, a town beside the Wrekin, recently again brought to light, went up in flames. A British poet sings piteously the death-song of Uriconium, "the white town in the valley," the town of white stone gleaming among the green woodland, the hall of its chieftain left "without fire, without light, without songs," the silence broken only by the eagle's scream, "the eagle who has swallowed fresh drink, heart's blood of Kyndylan the fair." The raid, however, was repulsed, and the blow proved fatal to the power of Wessex. Though the West-Saxons were destined in the end to win the overlordship over every English people, their time had not come yet, and the leadership of the English race was to fall, for nearly a century to come, to the tribe of invaders whose fortunes we have now to follow.

BRITAIN and the ENGLISH CONQUEST

English Miles
0 10 20 30 40 50

- British names Deifyr
- Roman names VECTIS
- English names Winte
- Modern names Bedford
- Forests shewn thus
- Marshes
- Heath
- Mountainous country is indicated by a ruled tint thus

SEC. II
 THE ENGLISH
 CONQUEST 449
 TO 577 Conquest of Mid-Britain
 and the North

Rivers were the natural inlets by which the northern pirates everywhere made their way into the heart of Europe. In Britain the fortress of London barred their way along the Thames from its mouth, and drove them, as we have seen, to an advance along the southern coast and over the downs of Wiltshire, before reaching its upper waters. But the rivers which united in the estuary of the Humber led like open highways into the heart of Britain, and it was by this inlet that the great mass of the invaders penetrated into the interior of the island. Like the invaders of East Anglia, they were of the English tribe from Sleswick. As the storm fell in the opening of the sixth century on the Wolds of Lincolnshire that stretch southward from the Humber, the conquerors who settled in the deserted country were known as the "Lindiswara," or "dwellers about Lindum." A part of the warriors who had entered the Humber, turned southward by the forest of Elmet which covered the district around Leeds, followed the course of the Trent. Those who occupied the wooded country between the Trent and the Humber took from their position the name of Southumbrians. A second division, advancing along the curve of the former river and creeping down the line of its tributary, the Soar, till they reached Leicester, became known as the Middle-English. The marshes of the Fen country were settled by tribes known as the Gyrwas. The head waters of the Trent were the seat of those invaders who penetrated furthest to the west, and camped round Lichfield and Repton. This country became the borderland between Englishmen and Britons, and the settlers bore the name of "Mercians," men, that is, of the March or border. We know hardly anything of this conquest of Mid-Britain, and little more of the conquest of the north. Under the Romans, political power had centred in the vast district between the Humber and the Forth. York had been the capital of Britain and the seat of the Roman prefect; and the bulk of the garrison maintained in the island lay cantoned along the Roman wall. Signs of wealth and prosperity appeared everywhere; cities rose beneath the shelter of the Roman camps; villas of British landowners studded the vale of the Ouse and the far-off uplands of the Tweed, where the shepherd trusted for security against Pictish marauders to the terror of the Roman name. This district was assailed at once from the north and from the south. A part of the invading force which entered the Humber marched over the Yorkshire wolds to found a kingdom, which was known as that of the Deiri, in the fens of Holderness and on the chalk downs eastward of York. But they were soon drawn onwards, and after a struggle of which we know nothing, York, like its neighbour cities, lay a desolate ruin, while the conquerors spread northward, slaying and burning along the valley of the Ouse. Meanwhile the pirates had appeared in the Forth, and won their way along the Tweed; Ida and the men of fifty keels which followed him reared the capital of the northernmost kingdom of the English, that of Bernicia, on the rock of Bamborough, and won their way slowly along the coast against a stubborn resistance which formed the theme of British songs. The strife between the kingdoms of Deira and Bernicia for supremacy in the North was closed by their being united under king Æthelric of Bernicia; and from this union was formed a new kingdom, the kingdom of Northumbria.

c. 550

SEC. II
THE ENGLISH
CONQUEST

449
TO 577

500-520

588

It was this century of conquest by the English race which really made Britain England. In our anxiety to know more of our fathers, we listen to the monotonous plaint of Gildas, the one writer whom Britain has left us, with a strange disappointment. Gildas had seen the invasion of the pirate hosts, and it is to him we owe our knowledge of the conquest of Kent. But we look in vain to his book for any account of the life or settlement of the English conquerors. Across the border of the new England that was growing up along the southern shores of Britain, Gildas gives us but a glimpse—doubtless he had but a glimpse himself—of forsaken walls, of shrines polluted by heathen impiety. His silence and his ignorance mark the character of the struggle. No British neck had as yet bowed before the English invader, no British pen was to record his conquest. A century after their landing the English are still known to their British foes only as “barbarians,” “wolves,” “dogs,” “whelps from the kennel of barbarism,” “hateful to God and man.” Their victories seemed victories of the powers of evil, chastisements of a divine justice for national sin. Their ravage, terrible as it had been, was held to be almost at an end: in another century—so ran old prophecies—their last hold on the land would be shaken off. But of submission to, or even of intercourse

Gildas
c. 516-570

SEC. II
 THE ENGLISH
 CONQUEST 449
 TO 577
 The English Settlement

with the strangers there is not a word. Gildas tells us nothing of their fortunes, or of their leaders.

In spite of his silence, however, we may still know something of the way in which the new English society grew up in the conquered country, for the driving back of the Briton was but the prelude to the settlement of his conqueror. What strikes us at once in the new England is, that it was the one purely German nation that rose upon the wreck of Rome. In other lands, in Spain, or Gaul, or Italy, though they were equally conquered by German peoples,

OLD ENGLISH COMBS.
 Akerman, "Pagan Saxondom."

religion, social life, administrative order, still remained Roman. In Britain alone Rome died into a vague tradition of the past. The whole organization of government and society disappeared with the people who used it. The villas, the mosaics, the coins which we dig up in our fields are no relics of our English fathers, but of a Roman world which our fathers' sword swept utterly away. Its law, its literature, its manners, its faith, went with it. The new England was a heathen country. The religion of Woden and Thunder triumphed over the religion of Christ. Alone among the German assailants of Rome the English rejected the faith of the Empire they helped to overthrow. Elsewhere the Christian priesthood served as mediators between the barbarian and the conquered, but in the conquered part of Britain Christianity wholly disappeared. River and homestead and boundary, the very days of the week, bore the names of the new gods who displaced Christ. But if England seemed for the moment a waste from which all the civilization of the world had fled away, it contained within itself the germs of a nobler life than that which had been destroyed. The base of the new English society was the freeman whom we have seen tilling, judging, or sacrificing for himself in his far-off fatherland by the Northern Sea. However roughly he dealt while the struggle went on with the material civilization of Britain, it was impossible that such a man could be a mere destroyer. War was no sooner over than the warrior settled down into a farmer, and the home of the peasant churl rose beside the heap of goblin-haunted stones that marked the site of the villa he had burnt. Little knots of kinsfolk drew together in "tun" and "ham" beside the Thames and the Trent as they had settled beside the Elbe or the Weser, not as kinsfolk only, but as dwellers in the same plot, knit together by their common holding within the same bounds. Each little village-commonwealth lived the same life in Britain as its farmers had lived at home. Each had its moot hill or sacred tree as a centre, its "mark" as a

OLD ENGLISH BUCKLES.
British Museum and Dover Museum.

OLD ENGLISH KEYS.
Akerman, "Pagan Saxondom."

SEC. II
THE ENGLISH
CONQUEST 449
TO 577

England
and the Conquest

border ; each judged by witness of the kinsfolk and made laws in the assembly of its freemen, and chose the leaders for its own governance, and the men who were to follow headman or ealdorman to hundred-court or war.

In more ways than one, indeed, the primitive organization of English society was affected by its transfer to the soil of Britain. Conquest begat the King. It is probable that the English had hitherto known nothing of kings in their own fatherland, where each tribe lived under the rule of its own customary Ealdorman. But in a war such as that which they waged against the Britons it was necessary to find a common leader whom the various tribes engaged in conquests such as those of Kent or Wessex might follow ; and such a leader soon rose into a higher position than that

PLATINGS OF AN OLD ENGLISH BUCKET.
Akerman, "Pagan Saxondom."

OLD ENGLISH FIBULÆ.

1. Akerman, "Pagan Saxondom." 2. Collection of the Society of Antiquaries.
3. British Museum.

of a temporary chief. The sons of Hengest became kings in Kent ; those of Ælle in Sussex ; the West-Saxons chose Cerdic for their king. Such a choice at once drew the various villages and tribes of each community closer together than of old, while the new ruler surrounded himself with a chosen war-band of companions, servants, or "thegns" as they were called, who were rewarded for their service by gifts from the public land. Their distinction rested, not on hereditary rank, but on service done to the King, and they at last became a nobility which superseded the "eorls" of the original English constitution. And as war begat the King and the military noble, so it all but begat the slave. There had always been a slave class, a class of the unfree, among the English as among all German peoples; but the numbers of this class, if unaffected by the conquest

SEC. II
 —
 THE ENGLISH
 CONQUEST
 —
 449
 TO 577
 —

OLD ENGLISH GLASS VESSELS.
Akerman, "Pagan Saxondom."

of Britain, were swelled by the wars which soon sprang up among the English conquerors. No rank saved the prisoner taken in battle from the doom of slavery, and slavery itself was often welcomed as saving the prisoner from death. We see this in the story of a noble warrior who had fallen wounded in a fight between two English tribes, and was carried as a bond-slave to the house of a thegn hard by. He declared himself a peasant, but his master penetrated the disguise. "You deserve death," he said, "since all my brothers and kinsfolk fell in the fight;" but for his oath's sake he spared his life and sold him to a Frisian at London, probably a merchant such as those who were carrying English captives at that time to the market-place of Rome. But war was not the only cause of the increase of this slave class. The numbers of the "unfree" were swelled by debt and crime. Famine drove men to "bend their heads in the

SEC. II
—
THE ENGLISH
CONQUEST

449
TO 577

evil days for meat ;" the debtor unable to discharge his debt flung on the ground the freeman's sword and spear, took up the labourer's mattock, and placed his head as a slave within a master's hands.

The criminal whose kinsfolk would not make up his fine became a crime-serf of the plaintiff or the king. Sometimes a father, pressed by need, sold children and wife into bondage. The slave became part of the live-stock of the estate, to be willed away at death with horse or ox whose pedigree was kept as carefully as his own. His children were bondsmen like himself ; even the freeman's children by a slave-mother inherited the mother's taint. "Mine is the calf that is born of my cow," ran the English proverb. The cabins of the unfree clustered round the home of the rich landowner as they had clustered round the villa of the Roman gentleman ; ploughman, shepherd, goatherd, swineherd, oxherd and cowherd, dairymaid, barnman, sower, hayward and woodward, were often slaves. It was not such a slavery as that we have known in modern times, for stripes and bonds were rare ; if the slave were slain, it was by an OLD ENGLISH SPOON.

Ashmolean Museum, Oxford.

OLD ENGLISH FORK.
Akerman, "Pagan Saxondom."

angry blow, not by the lash. But his lord could slay him if he would ; it was but a chattel the less. The slave had no place in the justice-court, no kinsman to claim vengeance for his wrong. If a stranger slew him, his lord claimed the damages ; if guilty of wrong-doing, "his skin paid for him" under the lash. If he fled he might be chased like a strayed beast, and flogged to death for his crime, or burned to death if the slave were a woman.

Section III.—The Northumbrian Kingdom, 588—685

SEC. III

THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
KINGDOM588
TO 685

[Authorities.—Bæda's "Historia Ecclesiastica Gentis Anglorum" is the one primary authority for this period. I have spoken fully of it and its writer in the text. The meagre regnal and episcopal annals of the West-Saxons have been brought by numerous insertions from Bæda to the shape in which they at present appear in the "English Chronicle." The Poem of Cædmon has been published by Mr. Thorpe, and copious summaries of it are given by Sharon Turner ("Hist. of Anglo-Saxons," vol. iii. cap. 3) and Mr. Morley ("English Writers," vol. i.). The life of Wilfrid by Eddi, and those of Cuthbert by Bæda and an earlier contemporary biographer, which are appended to Mr. Stevenson's edition of the "Historia Ecclesiastica," throw great light on the religious condition of the North. For Guthlac of Crowland, see the "Acta Sanctorum" for April xi. For Theodore, and the English Church which he organized, see Kemble ("Saxons in England," vol. ii. cap. 8—10), and above all the invaluable remarks of Dr. Stubbs in his "Constitutional History."]

The conquest of the bulk of Britain was now complete. Eastward of a line which may be roughly drawn along the moorlands of Northumberland and Yorkshire, through Derbyshire and skirting the Forest of Arden, to the mouth of the Severn, and thence by Mendip to the sea, the island had passed into English hands. From this time the character of the English conquest of Britain was wholly changed. The older wars of extermination came to an end, and as the invasion pushed westward in later times the Britons were no longer wholly driven from the soil, but mingled with their conquerors. A far more important change was that which was seen in the attitude of the English conquerors from this time towards each other. Freed to a great extent from the common pressure of the war against the Britons, their energies turned to combats with one another, to a long struggle for overlordship which was to end in bringing about a real national unity. The West-Saxons, beaten back from their advance along the Severn valley, and overthrown in a terrible defeat at Faddiley, were torn by internal dissensions, even while they were battling for life against the Britons. Strife between the two rival kingdoms of Bernicia and Deira in the north absorbed the power of the Engle in that quarter, till in 588 the strength of Deira suddenly broke down, and the Bernician king, Æthelric, gathered the two peoples into a realm which was to form the later kingdom of Northumbria. Amid the confusion of north and south

Æthel-
berht

584

SEC. III
—
THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
KINGDOM
588
TO 685
—

the primacy among the conquerors was seized by Kent, where the kingdom of the Jutes rose suddenly into greatness under a king called Æthelberht, who before 597 established his supremacy over the Saxons of Middlesex and Essex, as well as over the English.

of East Anglia and of Mercia as far north as the Humber and the Trent.

The overlordship of Æthelberht was marked by a renewal of that intercourse of Britain with the Continent which had been broken off by the conquests of the English. His marriage with Bertha, the daughter of the Frankish King Charibert of Paris, created a fresh tie between Kent and Gaul. But the union had far more important results than those of which Æthelberht may have dreamed. Bertha, like her Frankish kinsfolk, was a Christian. A Christian bishop accompanied her from Gaul to Canterbury, the royal city of the kingdom of Kent ; and a ruined Christian church, the church of St. Martin, was given them for their worship. The marriage of Bertha was an opportunity which was at once seized by the bishop who at this time occupied the Roman See, and who is justly known as Gregory the Great. A memorable story tells us how, when but a young Roman deacon, Gregory had noted the white bodies, the fair faces, the golden hair of some youths who stood bound in the market place of Rome. "From what country do these slaves come?" he asked the traders who brought them. "They are English, Angles!" the slave-dealers answered. The deacon's pity veiled itself in poetic humour. "Not Angles but Angels," he said, "with faces so angel-like! From what country come they?" "They come," said the merchants, "from Deira." "De ira!" was the untranslatable reply; "aye, plucked from God's ire, and called to Christ's mercy! And what is the name of their king?" "Ælla," they told him; and Gregory seized on the words as of good omen. "Alleluia shall be sung in Ælla's land!" he cried, and passed on, musing how the angel faces should be brought to sing it. Only three or four years had gone by, when the deacon had become Bishop of Rome, and Bertha's marriage gave him the opening he sought. After cautious negotiations with the rulers of Gaul, he sent a Roman abbot, Augustine, at the head of a band of monks, to preach the gospel to the English people. The missionaries landed in 597 on the very spot where Hengest had landed more than a century before in the Isle of Thanet; and the king received them sitting in the open air on the chalk-down above Minster, where the eye nowadays catches miles away over the marshes the dim tower of Canterbury. He listened to the long sermon as the interpreters

SEC. 111

THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
KINGDOM

588

TO 685 Landing of August-tine

c. 589

S. LUKE, FROM THE GOSPEL-BOOK OF S. AUGUSTINE.
 Now at Corpus Christi College, Cambridge.

whom Augustine had brought with him from Gaul translated it. "Your words are fair," Æthelberht replied at last with English good sense, "but they are new and of doubtful meaning;" for himself, he said, he refused to forsake the gods of his fathers, but he promised shelter and protection to the strangers. The band of monks entered Canterbury bearing before them a silver cross with a picture of Christ, and singing in concert the strains of the litany of their church. "Turn from this city, Lord," they sang, "Thine anger and wrath, and turn it from Thy holy house, for we have sinned." And then in strange contrast came the jubilant cry of the older Hebrew worship, the cry which Gregory had wrested in prophetic earnestness from the name of the Yorkshire king in the Roman market-place, "Alleluia!"

SEC. III
 THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
 KINGDOM
 588
 TO 685

It is strange that the spot which witnessed the landing of Hengest should be yet better known as the landing-place of Augustine. But the second landing at Ebbsfleet was in no small

Reunion of England
 and the Western World

SCEATTA, RUNIC TYPE.

SCEATTAS, ROMAN TYPE.

measure the reversal and undoing of the first. "Strangers from Rome" was the title with which the missionaries first fronted the English king. The march of the monks as they chanted their solemn litany was, in one sense, the return of the Roman legions who had retired at the trumpet-call of Alaric. It was to the tongue and the thought not of Gregory only but of such men as his own Jutish fathers had slaughtered and driven over sea that Æthelberht listened in the preaching of Augustine. Canterbury, the earliest royal city of the new England, became the centre of Latin influence. The Roman tongue became again one of the tongues of Britain, the language of its worship, its correspondence, its literature. But more than the tongue of Rome returned with

SEC. III

THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
KINGDOM588
TO 685

Augustine. Practically his landing renewed the union with the western world which the landing of Hengest had all but destroyed. The new England was admitted into the older commonwealth of nations. The civilization, arts, letters, which had fled before the sword of the English conquest, returned with the Christian faith. The fabric of the Roman law indeed never took root in England, but it is impossible not to recognize the result of the influence of the Roman missionaries in the fact that the codes of customary English law began to be put into writing soon after their arrival.

Fall of Kent

604

607

As yet these great results were still distant; a year passed before Æthelberht yielded, and though after his conversion thousands of the Kentish men crowded to baptism, it was years before he ventured to urge the under-kings of Essex and East Anglia to receive the creed of their overlord. This effort of Æthelberht however only heralded a revolution which broke the power of Kent for ever. The tribes of Mid-Britain revolted against his supremacy, and gathered under the overlordship of Rædwald of East Anglia. The revolution clearly marked the change which had passed over Britain. Instead of a chaos of isolated peoples, the conquerors were now in fact gathered into three great groups. The Engle kingdom of the north reached from the Humber to the Forth. The southern kingdom of the West-Saxons stretched from Watling Street to the Channel. And between these was roughly sketched out the great kingdom of Mid-Britain, which, however its limits might vary, retained a substantial identity from the time of Æthelberht till the final fall of the Mercian kings. For the next two hundred years the history of England lies in the struggle of Northumbrian, Mercian, and West-Saxon kings to establish their supremacy over the general mass of Englishmen, and unite them in a single England.

Æthelfrith
593-617

In this struggle the lead was at once taken by Northumbria, which was rising into a power that set all rivalry at defiance. Under Æthelfrith, who had followed Æthelric in 593, the work of conquest went on rapidly. In 603 the forces of the northern Britons were annihilated in a great battle at Dægsastan, and the rule of Northumbria was established from the Humber to the Forth. Along the west of Britain there stretched the unconquered kingdoms of Strathclyde and Cumbria, which extended from the river Clyde to the Dee, and the smaller British states which occupied what we now call Wales. Chester formed the link between these two bodies ; and it was Chester that Æthelfrith chose in 613 for his next point of attack. Some miles from the city two thousand monks were gathered in the monastery of Bangor, and after imploring in a three days' fast the help of Heaven for their country, a crowd of these ascetics followed the British army to the field. Æthelfrith watched the wild gestures and outstretched arms of the strange company as it stood apart, intent upon prayer, and took the monks for enchanters. "Bear they arms or no," said the king, "they war against us when they cry against us to their God," and in the surprise and rout which followed the monks were the first to fall.

The British kingdoms were now utterly parted from one another. By their victory at Deorham the West-Saxons had cut off the Britons of Devon and Cornwall from the general body of their race. By his victory at Chester Æthelfrith broke this body again into two several parts, by parting the Britons of Wales from those of Cumbria and Strathclyde. From this time the warfare of Briton and Englishman died down into a warfare of separate English kingdoms against separate British kingdoms, of Northumbria against Cumbria and Strathclyde, of Mercia against modern Wales, of Wessex against the tract of British country from Mendip to the Land's End. Nor was the victory of Chester of less importance to England itself. With it Æthelfrith was at once drawn to new dreams of ambition as he looked across his southern border, where Rædwald of East Anglia was drawing the peoples of Mid-Britain under his overlordship.

The inevitable struggle between East Anglia and Northumbria seemed for a time averted by the sudden death of Æthelfrith. Marching in 617 against Rædwald, who had sheltered Eadwine, an exile from the Northumbrian kingdom, he perished in a defeat at the river Idle. Eadwine mounted the Northumbrian throne on the fall of his enemy, and carried on the work of government with an energy as ceaseless as that of Æthelfrith himself. His victories over Pict and Briton were followed by the winning of lordship over the English of Mid-Britain ; Kent was bound to him in close political alliance ; and the English conquerors of the south, the

SEC. III

THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
KINGDOM

588

TO 685

613

Eadwine

617-633

SEC. III
 THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
 KINGDOM
 588
 TO 685 people of the West-Saxons, alone remained independent. But revolt and slaughter had fatally broken the power of the West-Saxons when the Northumbrians attacked them. A story preserved by Bæda tells something of the fierceness of the struggle which ended in the subjection of the south to the overlordship of Northumbria. Eadwine gave audience in an Easter court which he held in a king's town near the river Derwent to Eumer, an envoy of Wessex, who brought a message from its king. In the midst of the conference the envoy started to his feet, drew a dagger from his robe, and rushed madly on the Northumbrian sovereign. Lilla, one of the king's war-band, threw himself between Eadwine and his assassin ; but so furious was the stroke that even through Lilla's body the dagger still reached its aim. The king however recovered

626

SEC. 111
THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
KINGDOM
588
TO 685

OLD ENGLISH GLASS VESSELS.
Akerman, "Pagan Saxondom."

from his wound to march on the West-Saxons ; he slew and subdued all who had conspired against him, and returned victorious to his own country. The greatness of Northumbria now reached its height. Within his own dominions Eadwine displayed a genius for civil government which shows how completely the mere age of conquest had passed away. With him began the English proverb so often applied to after kings, "A woman with her babe might walk scatheless from sea to sea in Eadwine's day." Peaceful communication revived along the deserted highways ; the springs by the roadside were marked with stakes, and a cup of brass set beside each for the traveller's refreshment. Some faint traditions of the

SEC. III

THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
KINGDOM588
TO 685

Roman past may have flung their glory round this new "Empire of the English;" some of its majesty had at any rate come back with its long-lost peace. A royal standard of purple and gold floated before Eadwine as he rode through the villages; a feather-tuft attached to a spear, the Roman tufa, preceded him as he walked through the streets.

The Northumbrian king was in fact supreme over Britain as no king of English blood had been before. Northward his frontier reached the Forth, and was guarded by a city which bore his name, Edinburgh, Eadwine's burgh, the city of Eadwine. Westward, he was master of Chester, and the fleet he equipped there subdued the isles of Anglesey and Man. South of the Humber he was owned as overlord by the whole English race, save Kent; and even Kent was bound to him by his marriage with its king's sister.

Conversion of Northumbria

With the Kentish queen came Paulinus, one of Augustine's followers, whose tall stooping form, slender, aquiline nose, and black hair falling round a thin worn face, were long remembered in the north; and the Wise Men of Northumbria gathered to deliberate on the new faith to which Paulinus and his queen soon converted Eadwine. To finer minds its charm lay in the light it threw on the darkness which encompassed men's lives, the darkness of the future as of the past. "So seems the life of man, O king," burst forth an aged Ealdorman, "as a sparrow's flight through the hall when you are sitting at meat in winter-tide, with the warm fire lighted on the hearth, but the icy rain-storm without. The sparrow flies in at one door and tarries for a moment in the light and heat of the hearth-fire, and then flying forth from the other vanishes into the wintry darkness whence it came. So tarries for a moment the life of man in our sight, but what is before it, what after it, we know not. If this new teaching tells us aught certainly of these, let us follow it." Coarser argument told on the crowd. "None of your people, Eadwine, have worshipped the gods more busily than I," said Coifi the priest, "yet there are many more favoured and more fortunate. Were these gods good for anything they would help their worshippers." Then leaping on horseback, he hurled his spear into the sacred temple at Godmanham, and with the rest of the Witan embraced the religion of the king.

OLD ENGLISH BRONZE PATERA.
Akerman, "Pagan Saxondom."

SEC. III
 THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
 KINGDOM
 588
 TO 685

The Heathen Struggle

But the faith of Woden and Thunder was not to fall without a struggle. Even in Kent a reaction against the new creed began with the death of Æthelberht. Rædwald of East Anglia resolved to serve Christ and the older gods together; and a pagan and Christian altar fronted one another in the same royal temple. The young kings of the East-Saxons burst into the church where Mellitus, the Bishop of London, was administering the Eucharist to the people, crying, "Give us that white bread you gave to our father Saba," and on the bishop's refusal drove him from their realm. The tide of reaction was checked for a time by Eadwine's conversion, until Mercia sprang into a sudden greatness as the champion of the heathen gods. Under Eadwine Mercia had submitted to the lordship of Northumbria; but its king, Penda, saw in the rally of the old religion a chance of winning back its independence. Penda had not only united under his own rule the Mercians of the Upper Trent, the Middle-English of Leicester, the Southumbrians, and the Lindiswaras, but he had even been strong enough to tear from the West-Saxons their possessions along the Severn. So thoroughly indeed was the union of these provinces effected, that though some were detached for a time after Penda's death, the name of Mercia from this moment must be generally taken as covering the whole of them. Alone, however, he was as yet no match for Northumbria. But the old severance between the English people and the Britons was fast dying down, and Penda boldly broke through the barrier which parted the two races, and allied himself with the Welsh king, Cadwallon, in an attack on Eadwine. The armies met in 633 at Hatfield, and in the fight which followed Eadwine was defeated and slain. The victory was turned to profit by the ambition of Penda, while Northumbria was torn with the strife which followed Eadwine's fall. To complete his dominion over Mid-Britain, Penda marched against East Anglia. The East Engle had returned to heathendom from the oddly

633

SEC. III
THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
KINGDOM

588
TO 685 mingled religion of their first Christian king, Rædwald; but the new faith was brought back by the present King, Sigeberht. Before the threat of Penda's attack Sigeberht left his throne for a monastery, but his people dragged him again from his cell on the news of Penda's invasion in 634, in faith that his presence would bring them the favour of Heaven.

SEC. III

THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
KINGDOM
588
TO 685

The monk-king was set in the forefront of the battle, but he would bear no weapon save a wand, and his fall was followed by the rout of his army and the submission of his kingdom. Meanwhile Cadwallon remained harrying in the heart of Deira, and made himself master even of York. But the triumph of the Britons was as brief as it was strange. Oswald, a second son of Æthelfrith, placed himself at the head of his race, and

OLD ENGLISH GOLD CROSS.
British Museum.

a small Northumbrian force gathered in 635 under their new king near the Roman Wall. Oswald set up a cross of wood as his standard, holding it with his own hands till the hollow in which it was fixed was filled in by his soldiers; then throwing himself on his knees, he cried to his host to pray to the living God. Cadwallon, the last great hero of the British race, fell fighting on the "Heaven's Field," as after times called the field of battle, and for seven years the power of Oswald equalled that of Æthelfrith and Eadwine.

It was not the Church of Paulinus which nerved Oswald to this struggle for the Cross. Paulinus had fled from Northumbria at Eadwine's fall; and the Roman Church in Kent shrank into inactivity before the heathen reaction. Its place in the conversion of England was taken by missionaries from Ireland. To understand, however, the true meaning of the change, we must remember that before the landing of the English in Britain, the Christian Church comprised every 635

FRAGMENT OF A SUIT OF BRONZE RING-MAIL.
Irish.
Museum of Royal Irish Academy.

SEC. III
 —
 THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
 KINGDOM
 588
 TO 685
 —
 The Irish Church

country, save Germany, in Western Europe, as far as Ireland itself. The conquest of Britain by the pagan English thrust a NIELLO PENDANT HOOK.

 Irish.

BRONZE DISC.
 Irish.

Museum of Royal Irish Academy.

wedge of heathendom into the heart of this great communion and broke it into two unequal parts. On the one side lay Italy, Spain, and Gaul, whose Churches owned obedience to the See ORNAMENT OF GILDED BRONZE, FOUND IN GOTLAND.

 Shewing connexion between Scandinavian and Irish art.
Montelius, "Civilization of Sweden."

of Rome, on the other the Church of Ireland. But the condition of the two portions of Western Christendom was very different. While the vigour of Christianity in Italy and Gaul and Spain was exhausted in a bare struggle for life, Ireland, which remained unscourged by invaders, drew from its conversion an energy such as it has never known since. Christianity had been received there with a burst of popular enthusiasm, and letters and arts sprang up rapidly in its train. The science and Biblical knowledge which fled from the Continent took refuge in famous schools which made Durrow and Armagh the universities of the West. The new Christian life soon beat too strongly to brook confinement within the bounds of Ireland itself. Patrick, the first missionary of the island, had not been half a century dead when Irish Christianity flung itself with a fiery zeal into battle with the

SEC. III
 THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
 KINGDOM
 588
 TO 685

PLATE OF GILDED BRONZE, FOUND IN GOTLAND.
 Shewing connexion between Scandinavian and Irish art.
Montelius, "Civilization of Sweden."

mass of heathenism which was rolling in upon the Christian world. Irish missionaries laboured among the Picts of the Highlands and among the Frisians of the northern seas. An Irish missionary, Columban, founded monasteries in Burgundy and the Apennines. The canton of St. Gall still commemorates in its name another Irish missionary before whom the spirits of flood and fell fled wailing over the waters of the Lake of Constance. For a time it seemed as if the course of the world's history was to be changed, as if the older Celtic race that Roman and German had swept before them had turned to the moral conquest of their conquerors, as if Celtic and not Latin Christianity was to mould the destinies of the Churches of the West.

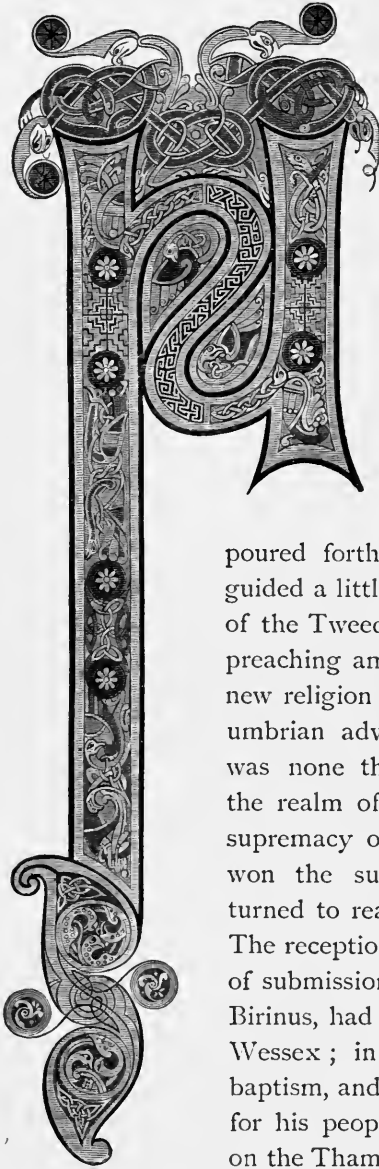

On a low island of barren gneiss-rock off the west coast of Scotland an Irish refugee, Columba, had raised the famous monastery of Iona. Oswald in youth found refuge within its walls, and on his accession to the throne of Northumbria he called for missionaries from among its monks. The first despatched in answer to his call

Oswald
 634-642

SEC. III

THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
KINGDOM588
TO 685 obtained little success. He declared on his return that among a people so stubborn and barbarous success was impossible. "Was it their stubbornness or your severity?" asked Aidan, a brother sitting by; "did you forget God's word to give them the milk first and then the meat?" All eyes turned on the speaker as fittest to undertake the abandoned mission, and Aidan sailing at their bidding fixed his bishop's stool or see in the island-peninsula of Lindisfarne. Thence, from a monastery which gave to the spot its after name of Holy Island, preachers

INITIAL N.
"Book of Kells," Irish
MS., seventh century.
M. Stokes, "Early Christian Art in Ireland."

poured forth over the heathen realms. Boisil guided a little troop of missionaries to the valley of the Tweed. Aidan himself wandered on foot preaching among the peasants of Bernicia. The new religion served as a prelude to the Northumbrian advance. If Oswald was a saint, he was none the less resolved to build up again the realm of Eadwine. Having extended his supremacy over the Britons of Strathclyde and won the submission of the Lindiswaras, he turned to reassert his supremacy over Wessex. The reception of the new faith became the mark of submission to his overlordship. A preacher, Birinus, had already penetrated from Gaul into Wessex; in Oswald's presence its king received baptism, and established with his assent a see for his people in the royal city of Dorchester on the Thames. Oswald ruled as wide a realm as his predecessor; but for after times the memory of his greatness was lost in the legends of his piety. A new conception of kingship began to blend itself with that of the warlike glory of Æthelrith or the wise administration of Eadwine. The moral power which was to

SEC. III
THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
KINGDOM
588
TO 685 reach its height in Ælfred first dawns in the story of Oswald. In his own court the king acted as interpreter to the Irish missionaries

SEC. 111
 THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
 KINGDOM
 588
 TO 685 in their efforts to convert his thegns. "By reason of his constant habit of praying or giving thanks to the Lord he was wont wherever he sat to hold his hands upturned on his knees." As he feasted with Bishop Aidan by his side, the thegn, or noble of his war-band, whom he had set to give alms to the poor at his gate, told him of a multitude that still waited fasting without. The king at once bade the untasted meat before him be carried to the poor and his silver dish be divided piecemeal among them. Aidan seized the royal hand and blessed it. "May this hand," he cried, "never grow old."

Penda
 626-655

Prisoned, however, as it was by the conversion of Wessex to the central districts of England, heathendom fought desperately for life. Penda was still its rallying-point; but if his long reign was one continuous battle with the new religion, it was in fact rather a struggle against the supremacy of Northumbria than against the supremacy of the Cross. East Anglia became at last the field of contest between the two powers. In 642 Oswald marched to deliver it from Penda; but in a battle called the battle of the Maserfeld he was overthrown and slain. His body was mutilated and his limbs set on stakes by the brutal conqueror; but legend told that when all else of Oswald had perished, the "white hand" that Aidan had blessed still remained white and uncorrupted. For a few years after his victory at the Maserfeld Penda stood supreme in Britain. Wessex owned his overlordship as it had owned that of Oswald, and its king threw off the Christian faith and married Penda's sister. Even Deira seems to have bowed to him, and Bernicia alone refused to yield. Year by year Penda carried his ravages over the north ; once he reached even the royal city, the impregnable rock-fortress of Bamborough. Despairing of success in an assault, he pulled down the cottages around, and, piling their wood against its walls, fired the mass in a fair wind that drove the flames on the town. "See, Lord, what ill Penda is doing," cried Aidan from his hermit cell in the islet of Farne, as he saw the smoke drifting over the city ; and a change of wind—so ran the legend of Northumbria's agony—drove back at the words the flames on those who kindled them. But in spite of Penda's victories, the faith which he had so often struck down revived everywhere around him. Burnt and harried as it was, Bernicia still clung to the Cross. The East-Saxons again became Christian.

IRISH OGHAM STONE.
 Museum of Royal Irish Academy.

SEC. III

THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
KINGDOM588
TO 685

Penda's own son, whom he had set over the Middle-English, received baptism and teachers from Lindisfarne. The missionaries of the new faith appeared fearlessly among the Mercians themselves, and Penda gave no hindrance. Heathen to the last, he stood by unheeding if any were willing 652

COIN OF PEADA, RULER OF THE MIDDLE ANGLES, 652-655.

to hear ; hating and scorning with a certain grand sincerity of nature "those whom he saw not doing the works of the faith they had received." But the track of Northumbrian missionaries along the eastern coast marked the growth of Northumbrian overlordship, and the old man roused himself for a last stroke at his foes. On the death of Oswald Oswiu had been called to fill his throne, and in 655 he met the pagan host near the river Winwæd. It was in vain that the Northumbrians had sought to avert Penda's attack by offers of ornaments and costly gifts. "Since the pagans will not take our gifts," Oswiu cried at last, "let us offer them to One that will ;" and he vowed that if successful he would dedicate his daughter to God and endow twelve monasteries in his realm. Victory at last declared for the faith of Christ. The river over which the Mercians fled was swollen with a great rain ; it swept away the fragments of the heathen host, Penda himself was slain, and the cause of the older gods was lost for ever.

655

The terrible struggle was followed by a season of peace. For four years after the battle of Winwæd Mercia was subject to Oswiu's

Oswiu
642-670

SEC. III

THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
KINGDOM

588

TO

685 overlordship. But in 659 a general rising of the people threw off the Northumbrian yoke. The heathendom of Mercia however was dead with Penda. "Being thus freed," Bæda tells us, "the Mercians with their king rejoiced to serve the true King, Christ." Its three provinces, the earlier Mercia, the Middle-English, and the Lindiswaras, were united in the bishopric of Ceadda, the St. Chad to whom the Mercian see of Lichfield still looks as its founder.

MONASTIC CELL, SKELLIG MICHAEL.
Anderson, "Scotland in Early Christian Times."

Ceadda was a monk of Lindisfarne, so simple and lowly in temper that he travelled on foot on his long mission journeys, till Archbishop Theodore in later days with his own hands lifted him on horseback. The poetry of Christian enthusiasm breaks out in his death-legend, as it tells us how voices of singers singing sweetly descended from Heaven to the little cell beside St. Mary's Church where the bishop lay dying. Then "the same song ascended from the roof again, and returned heavenward by the way that it came." It was the soul of his brother, the missionary Cedd, come with a choir of angels to solace the last hours of Ceadda. In Northumbria the work of his fellow missionaries has almost been lost in the glory of Cuthbert. No story better lights up for us the new religious life of the time than the story of this apostle of the Lowlands. It carries us at its outset into the northernmost part of Northumbria, the country of the Teviot and the Tweed. Born on the Southern edge of the Lammermoor, Cuthbert found shelter at eight years old in a widow's house in the little village of Wrangholm. Already in youth there was a poetic sensibility beneath the robust frame of the boy which caught even in the chance word of a game a call to higher things. Later on, a traveller coming in his white mantle over the hillside and stopping his horse to tend Cuthbert's

SEC. III
 THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
 KINGDOM
 588
 TO 685

ORATORY AT GALLARUS, CO. KERRY.
 Stokes, "Early Christian Art in Ireland."

injured knee seemed to him an angel. The boy's shepherd life carried him to the bleak upland, still famous as a sheep-walk, though the scant herbage scarce veils the whinstone rock, and there meteors plunging into the night became to him a company of angelic spirits, carrying the soul of Bishop Aidan heavenward.

SEC. III

THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
KINGDOM588
TO 685

Slowly Cuthbert's longings settled into a resolute will towards a religious life, and he made his way at last to a group of log-shanties in the midst of an untilled solitude where a few Irish monks from Lindisfarne had settled in the mission-station of Melrose. To-day the land is a land of poetry and romance. Cheviot and Lammermoor, Ettrick and Teviotdale, Yarrow and Annan-water, are musical with old ballads and border minstrelsy. Agriculture has chosen its valleys for her favourite seat, and drainage and steam-power have turned sedgy marshes into farm and meadow. But to see the Lowlands as they were in Cuthbert's day we must sweep meadow and farm away again, and replace them by vast solitudes, dotted here and there with clusters of wooden hovels, and crossed by boggy tracks over which travellers rode spear in hand and eye kept cautiously about them. The Northumbrian peasantry among whom he journeyed were for the most part Christians only in name. With Teutonic indifference they had yielded to their thegns in nominally accepting the new Christianity, as these had yielded to the king. But they retained their old superstitions side by side with the new worship; plague or mishap drove them back to a reliance on their heathen charms and amulets; and if trouble befell the Christian preachers who came settling among them they took it as proof of the wrath of the older gods. When some log-rafts which were floating down the Tyne for the construction of an abbey at its mouth drifted with the monks who were at work on them out to sea, the rustic bystanders shouted, "Let nobody pray for them; let nobody pity these men, who have taken away from us our old worship; and how their new-fangled customs are to be kept nobody knows." On foot, on horseback, Cuthbert wandered among listeners such as these, choosing above all the remoter mountain villages from whose roughness and poverty other teachers turned aside. Unlike his Irish comrades, he needed no interpreter as he passed from village to village; the frugal, long-headed Northumbrians listened

SEC. III

THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
KINGDOM588
TO 685

BELL OF CUMASCACH MAC AILLELLO, STEWARD OF ARMAGH, END OF NINTH CENTURY.
Stokes, "Early Christian Art in Ireland."

SEC. III

THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
KINGDOM588
TO 685 willingly to one who was himself a peasant of the Lowlands, and who had caught the rough Northumbrian burr along the banks of the Tweed. His patience, his humorous good sense, the sweetness of his look, told for him, and not less the stout vigorous frame which fitted the peasant-preacher for the hard life he had chosen. "Never did man die of hunger who served God faithfully," he would say, when nightfall found them supperless in the waste. "Look at the eagle overhead! God can feed us through him if He will"—and once at least he owed his meal to a fish that the scared bird let fall. A snow-storm drove his boat on the coast of Fife. "The snow closes the road along the shore," mourned his comrades; "the storm bars our way over sea." "There is still the way of Heaven that lies open," said Cuthbert.

Cædmon

While missionaries were thus labouring among its peasantry, Northumbria saw the rise of a number of monasteries, not bound indeed by the strict ties of the Benedictine rule, but gathered on the loose Celtic model of the family or the clan round some noble and wealthy person who sought devotional retirement. The most notable and wealthy of these houses was that of Streoneshalh, where Hild, a woman of royal race, reared her abbey on the summit of the dark cliffs of Whitby, looking out over the Northern Sea. Her counsel was sought even by nobles and kings; and the double monastery over which she ruled became a seminary of bishops and priests. The sainted John of Beverley was among her scholars. But the name which really throws glory over Whitby is the name of a lay-brother from whose lips flowed the first great English song. Though well advanced in years, Cædmon had learnt nothing of the art of verse, the alliterative jingle so common among his fellows, "wherefore being sometimes at feasts, when all agreed for glee's sake to sing in turn, he no sooner saw the harp come towards him than he rose from the board and turned homewards. Once when he had done thus, and gone from the feast to the stable where he had that night charge of the cattle, there appeared to him in his sleep One who said, greeting him by name, 'Sing, Cædmon, some song to Me.' 'I cannot sing,' he answered; 'for this cause left I the feast and came hither.' He who talked with him answered, 'However that be, you shall sing to Me.' 'What shall I sing?' rejoined Cædmon. 'The beginning of created things,' replied He. In the morning the cowherd stood before Hild and told his dream. Abbess and brethren alike concluded 'that heavenly grace had been conferred on him by the Lord.' They translated for Cædmon a passage in Holy Writ, 'bidding him, if he could, put the same into verse.' The next morning he gave it them composed in excellent verse, whereon the abbess, understanding the divine grace in the man, bade him quit the secular habit and take on him the monastic life." Piece by piece the sacred story was thus thrown into Cædmon's poem. "He sang of the creation of the world, of the origin of man, and of all the history of Israel; of their departure from Egypt and entering into the Promised Land; of the incarnation, passion, and resurrection of Christ, and of His ascension; of the terror of future judgment, the horror of hell-pangs, and the joys of heaven."

Before 680

To men of that day this sudden burst of song seemed a thing necessarily divine. "Others after him strove to compose religious poems, but none could vie with him, for he learned the art of poetry not from men, nor of men, but from God." It was not indeed that any change had been wrought by Cædmon in the outer form of English song. The collection of poems which is connected with his name has come down to us in a later West-Saxon version, and though modern criticism is still in doubt as to their authorship, they are certainly the work of various hands. The verse, whether of Cædmon or of other singers, is accented and alliterative, without conscious art or development or the delight that springs from reflection, a verse swift and direct, but leaving behind it a sense of strength rather than of beauty, obscured too by harsh metaphors and involved construction. But it is eminently the verse of warriors, the brief passionate expression of brief passionate emotions. Image after image, phrase after phrase, in these early poems, start out vivid, harsh, and emphatic. The very metre is rough with a sort of self-violence and repression; the verses fall like sword-strokes in the thick of battle. The love of natural description, the background of melancholy which gives its pathos to English verse, the poet only shared with earlier singers. But the faith of Christ brought in, as we have seen, new realms of fancy. The legends of the heavenly light, Bæda's story of "The Sparrow," show the side of English temperament to which

SEC. III

THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
KINGDOM588
TO 685English
Song

SEC. III
 THE NORTH-UMBERIAN KINGDOM
 588
 TO 685

Christianity appealed—its sense of the vague, vast mystery of the world and of man, its dreamy revolt against the narrow bounds of experience and life. It was this new poetic world which combined with the old in the so-called epic of Cædmon. In its various poems the vagueness and daring of the Teutonic imagination pass beyond the limits of the Hebrew story to a “swart hell without light and full of flame,” swept only at dawn by the icy east wind, on whose floor lie bound the apostate angels. The human energy of the German race, its sense of the might of individual manhood, transformed in English verse the Hebrew Tempter into a rebel Satan, disdainful of vassalage to God. “I may be a God as He,” Satan cries amidst his torments. “Evil it seems to me to cringe to Him for any good.” Even in this terrible outburst of the fallen spirit we catch the new pathetic note which the northern melancholy was to give to our poetry. “This is to me the chief of sorrow, that Adam, wrought of earth, should hold my strong seat—should dwell in joy while we endure this torment. Oh, that for one winter hour I had power with my hands, then with this host would I—but around me lie the iron bonds, and this chain galls me.” On the other hand the enthusiasm for the Christian God, faith in whom had been bought so dearly by years of desperate struggle, breaks out in long rolls of sonorous epithets of praise and adoration. The temper of the poets brings them near to the earlier fire and passion of the Hebrew, as the events of their time brought them near to the old Bible history with its fights and wanderings. “The wolves sing their dread evensong; the fowls of war, greedy of battle, dewy-feathered, scream around the host of Pharaoh,” as wolf howled and eagle screamed round the host of Penda. Everywhere we mark the new grandeur, depth, and fervour of tone which the German race was to give to the religion of the East.

Synod of Whitby

But even before Cædmon had begun to sing, the Christian Church of Northumbria was torn in two by a strife whose issue was decided in the same abbey of Whitby where Cædmon dwelt. The labours of Aidan, the victories of Oswald and Oswiu, seemed to have annexed England to the Irish Church. The monks of Lindisfarne, or of the new religious houses whose foundation followed that of Lindisfarne, looked for their ecclesiastical tradition, not to Rome but to Ireland; and quoted for their guidance the instructions, not of Gregory, but of Columba. Whatever claims of supremacy over the whole English Church might be pressed by the see of Canterbury, the real metropolitan of the Church as it existed in the north of England was the Abbot of Iona. But Oswiu's queen brought with her from Kent the loyalty of the Kentish Church to the Roman See, and a Roman party at once formed about her. Her efforts were seconded by those of two young thegns whose love of Rome mounted to a passionate fanaticism. The life of Wilfrid of York was a series of flights to Rome and returns to England, of wonderful successes in pleading the right of Rome to the obedience of the Church of Northumbria, and of as wonderful defeats. Benedict Biscop worked towards the same end in a quieter fashion, coming backwards and forwards across the sea with books and relics and cunning masons and painters to rear a great church and monastery at Wearmouth, whose brethren owned obedience to the Roman See. In 652 they first set out for a visit to the imperial city; and the elder, Benedict Biscop, soon returned to preach ceaselessly against the Irish usages. He was followed by Wilfrid, whose energy soon brought the quarrel to a head. The strife between the two parties rose so high at last that Oswiu was prevailed upon to summon in 664 a great council at Whitby, where the future ecclesiastical allegiance of England should be decided. The points actually contested were trivial enough. Colman, Aidan's successor at Holy Island, pleaded for the Irish fashion of the tonsure, and for the Irish time of keeping Easter; Wilfrid pleaded for the Roman. The one disputant appealed to the authority of Columba, the other to that of St. Peter. "You own," cried the king at last to Colman, "that Christ gave to Peter the keys of the kingdom of heaven—has He given such power to Columba?" The bishop could but answer "No." "Then will I rather obey the porter of Heaven," said Oswiu, "lest when I reach its gates he who has the keys in his keeping turn his

SEC. III
 THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
 KINGDOM
 588
 TO 685

OLD ENGLISH CLASPS.
Akerman, "Pagan Saxondom."

SEC. III
 THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
 KINGDOM
 588
 TO 685 back on me, and there be none to open." The importance of Oswiu's judgment was never doubted at Lindisfarne, where Colman, followed by the whole of the Irish-born brethren and thirty of their English fellows, forsook the see of Aidan and sailed away to Iona. Trivial in fact as were the actual points of difference which severed the Roman Church from the Irish, the question to which communion Northumbria should belong was

OLD ENGLISH NECKLACES.
British Museum.

of immense moment to the after fortunes of England. Had the Church of Aidan finally won, the later ecclesiastical history of England would probably have resembled that of Ireland. Devoid of that power of organization which was the strength of the Roman Church, the Celtic Church in its own Irish home took the clan system of the country as the basis of Church government. Tribal quarrels and ecclesiastical controversies became inextricably confounded; and the clergy, robbed of all really spiritual influence, contributed no element save that of disorder to the state. Hundreds of wandering bishops, a vast religious authority wielded by hereditary chieftains, the dissociation of piety from morality, the absence of those larger and more humanizing influences which contact with a wider world alone can give, this is the picture which the Irish Church of later times presents to us. It was from such a chaos as this that England was saved by the victory of Rome in the Synod of Whitby.

The Church of England, as we know it to-day, is the work, so far as its outer form is concerned, of a Greek monk, Theodore of Tarsus, whom Rome, after her victory at Whitby, despatched in 669 as Archbishop of Canterbury, to secure England to her sway. Theodore's work was determined in its main outlines by the previous history of the English people. The conquest of the Continent had been wrought either by races such as the Goths, who were already Christian, or by heathens like the Franks, who bowed to the Christian faith of the nations they conquered. To this oneness of religion between the German invaders of the Empire and their Roman subjects was owing the preservation of all that survived of the Roman world. The Church everywhere remained untouched. The Christian bishop became the defender of the conquered Italian or Gaul against his Gothic and Lombard conqueror, the mediator between the German and his subjects, the one bulwark against barbaric violence and oppression. To the barbarian on the other hand he was the representative of all that was venerable in the past, the living record of law, of letters, and of art. But in Britain priesthood and people had been exterminated together. When Theodore came to organize the Church of England, the very memory of the older Christian Church which existed in Roman Britain had passed away. The first Christian missionaries, strangers in a heathen land, attached themselves necessarily to the courts of the kings, who were their first converts, and whose conversion was generally followed by that of their people. The English bishops were thus at first royal chaplains, and their diocese was naturally nothing but the kingdom. The kingdom of Kent became the diocese of Canterbury, and the kingdom of Northumbria the diocese of York. In this way too realms which are all but forgotten are commemorated in the limits of existing sees. That of Rochester represented till of late an obscure kingdom of

SEC. III

THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
KINGDOM

588

TO 685

Theodore 669-690

SEC. III

THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
KINGDOM588
TO 685

West Kent, and the frontier of the original kingdom of Mercia might be recovered by following the map of the ancient bishopric of Lichfield. Theodore's first work was to order the dioceses ; his second was to add many new sees to the old ones, and to group all of them round the one centre of Canterbury. All ties between England and the Irish Church were roughly broken. Lindisfarne sank into obscurity with the flight of Colman and his monks. The new prelates, gathered in synod after synod, acknowledged the authority of their one primate. The organization of the episcopate was followed during the next hundred years by the development of the parish system. The loose system of the mission-station, the monastery from which priest and bishop went forth on journey after journey to preach and baptize, as Aidan went forth from Lindisfarne or Cuthbert from Melrose, naturally disappeared as the land became Christian. The missionaries became settled clergy. The holding of the English noble or landowner became the parish, and his chaplain the parish priest, as the king's chaplain had become the bishop, and the kingdom his diocese. A source of permanent endowment for the clergy was found at a later time in the revival of the Jewish system of tithes, and in the annual gift to Church purposes of a tenth of the produce of the soil ; while discipline within the Church itself was provided for by an elaborate code of sin and penance, in which the principle of compensation which lay at the root of Teutonic legislation crept into the relations between God and the soul.

Mercia
under Wulfhere

In his work of organization, in his increase of bishoprics, in his arrangement of dioceses, and the way in which he grouped them round the see of Canterbury, in his national synods and ecclesiastical canons, Theodore was unconsciously doing a political work. The old divisions of kingdoms and tribes about him, divisions which had sprung for the most part from mere accidents of the conquest, were fast breaking down. The smaller states were by this time practically absorbed by the three larger ones, and of these three Mercia and Wessex had for a time bowed to the overlordship of Northumbria. The tendency to national unity which was to characterize the new England had thus already declared itself ; but the policy of Theodore clothed with a sacred form and surrounded with divine sanctions a unity which as yet rested on no basis but the sword. The single throne of the one primate at Canterbury accustomed men's minds to the thought of a single throne for their one temporal overlord at York, or, as in later days, at Lichfield or at Winchester. The regular subordination of priest to bishop, of bishop to primate, in the administration of the Church, supplied a mould on which the civil organization of the state quietly shaped itself. Above all, the councils gathered by Theodore were the first of all national gatherings for general legislation. It was at a much later time that the Wise Men of Wessex, or Northumbria, or Mercia, learned to come together in the Witenagemot of all England. It was the ecclesiastical synods which by their example led the way to our national parliament, as it was the canons enacted in such synods which led the way to a national system of law. But if the movement towards national unity was furthered by the centralizing tendencies of the Church, it was as yet hindered by the upgrowth of a great rival power to contest the supremacy with Northumbria. Mercia, as we have seen, had recovered from the absolute subjection in which it was left after Penda's fall by shaking off the supremacy of Oswiu and by choosing Wulfhere for its king. Wulfhere was a vigorous and active ruler, and the peaceful reign of Oswiu left him free to build up again during the sixteen years of his rule the power which had been lost at Penda's death. Penda's realm in Central Britain was quickly restored, and Wulfhere's dominion extended even over the Severn and embraced the lower valley of the Wye. He had even more than his father's success. After a great victory in 661 over the West-Saxons, his ravages were carried into the heart of Wessex, and the valley of the Thames opened to his army. To the eastward, the East-Saxons and London came to own his supremacy ; while southward he pushed across the river over Surrey. In the same year, 661, Sussex, perhaps in dread of the West-Saxons, found protection in accepting Wulfhere's overlordship, and its king was rewarded by a gift of two outlying settlements of the Jutes, the Isle of Wight and the lands of the Meon-wara along the Southampton Water, which we must suppose had been reduced by Mercian arms. The Mercian supremacy which thus reached from the Humber to the Channel and stretched westward to the Wye was the main political fact in Britain when Theodore landed on its shores. In fact, with the death of Oswiu in 670 all

SEC. III

THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
KINGDOM588
TO 685

659-675

SEC. III

THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
KINGDOM

588

TO 685 Progress of Mercia

effort was finally abandoned by Northumbria to crush the rival states in Central or Southern Britain.

The industrial progress of the Mercian kingdom went hand in hand with its military advance. The forests of its western border, the marshes of its eastern coast, were being cleared and drained by monastic colonies, whose success shows the hold which Christianity had now gained over its people. Heathenism indeed still held its own in the western woodlands; we may perhaps see Woden-worshipping miners at Alcester in the dæmons of the legend of Bishop Ecgwine of Worcester, who drowned the preacher's voice with the din of their hammers. But in spite of their hammers Ecgwine's preaching left one lasting mark behind it. The bishop heard how a swineherd, coming out from the forest depths on a sunny glade, saw forms which were possibly those of the Three Fair Women of the old German mythology, seated round a mystic bush, and singing their unearthly song. In his fancy the fair women transformed themselves into a vision of the Mother of Christ; and the silent glade soon became the site of an abbey dedicated to her, and of a town which sprang up under its shelter—the Evesham which was to be hallowed in after time by the fall of Earl Simon of Leicester. Wilder even than the western woodland was the desolate fen-country on the eastern border of the kingdom, stretching from the "Holland," the sunk, hollow land of Lincolnshire, to the channel of the Ouse, a wilderness of shallow waters and reedy islets wrapped in its own dark mist-veil and tenanted only by flocks of screaming wild-fowl. Here through the liberality of King Wulfhere rose the abbey of Medeshamstead, our later Peterborough. On its northern border a hermit, Botulf, founded a little house which as ages went by became our Botulf's town or Boston. The Abbey of Ely was founded in the same wild fen-country by the Lady Æthelthryth, the wife of King Ecgfrith, who in the year 670 succeeded Oswiu on the throne of Northumbria. Here, too, Guthlac, a youth of the royal race of Mercia, sought a refuge from the world in the solitude of Crowland, and so great was the reverence he won, that only two years had passed since his death when the stately abbey of Crowland rose over his tomb. Earth was brought in boats to form a site; the buildings rested on oaken piles driven into the marsh a stone church replaced the hermit's cell, and the toil of the new brotherhood changed the pools around them into fertile meadow-land.

SEC. III

THE NORTHUMBRIAN KINGDOM

588

TO

685

Stanford's Geograph. Estab.

But while Mercia was building up its dominion in Mid-Britain, Northumbria was far from having sunk from its old The Fall of Northumbria

SEC. III
THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
KINGDOM
588
TO 685 renown either in government or war. Ecgfrith had succeeded his father Oswiu in 670, and made no effort to reverse his policy, or attempt to build up again a supremacy over the states of southern Britain. His ambition turned rather to conquests over the Briton than to victories over his fellow Englishmen. The war between Briton and Englishman, which had languished since the battle of Chester, had been revived some twenty years before by an advance of the West-Saxons to the south-west. Unable to save the possessions of Wessex in the Severn valley and on the Cotswolds from the grasp of Penda, the West-Saxon king, Cenwealh, seized the moment when Mercia was absorbed in the last struggle of Penda against Northumbria to seek for compensation in an attack on his

COIN OF ECGFRITH.

655

Welsh neighbours. A victory at Bradford on the Avon enabled him to overrun the country north of Mendip which had till then been held by the Britons; and a second campaign in 658, which ended in a victory on the skirts of the great forest that covered Somerset to the east, settled the West-Saxons as conquerors round the sources of the Parret. It may have been the example of the West-Saxons which spurred Ecgfrith to enlarge the bounds of his kingdom by a series of attacks upon his British neighbours in the west. His armies chased the Britons from southern Cumbria and made the districts of Carlisle, the Lake country, and our Lancashire English ground. His success in this quarter was quickly

OGHAM STONE AT NEWTON, ABERDEENSHIRE.
Anderson, "Scotland in Early Christian Times."

followed by fresh gain in the north, where he pushed his conquests over the Scots beyond Clydesdale, and subdued the Picts over the Firth of Forth, so that their territory on the northern bank of the Forth was from this time reckoned as Northumbrian ground. The monastery of Abercorn on the shore of the Firth of Forth, in which a few years later a Northumbrian bishop, Trumwine, fixed the seat of a new bishopric, was a sign of the subjection of the Picts to the Northumbrian overlordship. Even when recalled from the wars to his southern border by an attack of Wulfhere's in 675, the vigorous and warlike Ecgfrith proved a different foe from the West-Saxon or the Jute, and the defeat of the king of Mercia was so complete that he was glad to purchase peace by giving up to his conqueror the province of the Lindiswaras or Lincolnshire. A large part of the conquered country of the Lake district was bestowed upon the see of Lindisfarne, which was at this time filled by one whom we have seen before labouring as the Apostle of the Lowlands. After years of mission labour at Melrose, Cuthbert had quitted it for Holy Island, and preached among the moors of Northumberland as he had preached beside the banks of the Tweed. He remained there through the great secession which followed on the Synod of Whitby, and became prior of the dwindled company of brethren, now torn with endless disputes, against which his patience and good humour struggled in vain. Worn out at last he fled to a little island of basaltic rock, one of a group not far from Ida's fortress of Bamborough, strewn for the most part with kelp and seaweed, the home of the gull and the seal. In the midst of it rose his hut of rough stones and turf, dug deep into the rock and roofed with logs and straw.

The reverence for his sanctity dragged Cuthbert back in old age to fill the vacant see of Lindisfarne. He entered Carlisle, which the king had bestowed upon the bishopric, at a moment when all Northumbria was waiting for news of a fresh campaign of Ecgfrith's against the Britons in the north. The power of Northumbria was already however fatally shaken. In the south, Mercia had in 679 renewed the attempt which had been checked by Wulfhere's defeat. His successor, the Merçian king Æthelred, again seized the province of the Lindiswaras, and the war he thus began with Northumbria was only ended by a peace negotiated through Archbishop Theodore, which left him master of Middle England. Old troubles too revived on Ecgfrith's northern frontier,

SEC. III

THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
KINGDOM588
TO 685

670-675

684

SEC. III

THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
KINGDOM588
TO 685 where a rising of the Picts forced him once more to cross the Firth of Forth, and march in the year 685 into their land. A sense of coming ill weighed on Northumbria, and its dread was quickened

DAVID AND HIS CHOIR.
Anglo-Irish; Early Eighth Century.
MS. Cott. Vesp. A. i.

by a memory of the curses which had been pronounced by the bishops of Ireland on the king, when his navy, setting out a year before from the newly-conquered western coast, swept the Irish shores in a raid which seemed like sacrilege to those who loved the home of Aidan and Columba. As Cuthbert bent over a Roman fountain which still stood unharmed amongst the ruins of Carlisle, the anxious bystanders thought they caught words of ill-omen falling from the old man's lips. "Perhaps," he seemed to murmur, "at this very hour the peril of the fight is over and done." "Watch and pray," he said, when they questioned him on the morrow; "watch and pray." In a few days more a solitary fugitive escaped from the slaughter told that the Picts had turned desperately to bay as the English army entered Fife; and that Ecgfrith and the flower of his nobles lay, a ghastly ring of corpses, on the far-off moorland of Nectansmere.

To Cuthbert the tidings were tidings of death. His bishopric was soon laid aside, and two months after his return to his island-hermitage the old man lay dying, murmuring to the last words of concord and peace. A signal of his death had been agreed upon, and one of those who stood by ran with a candle in each hand to a place whence the light might be seen by a monk who was looking out from the watchtower of Lindisfarne. As the tiny gleam flashed over the dark reach of sea, and the watchman hurried with his news into the church, the brethren of Holy Island were singing, as it chanced, the words of the Psalmist: "Thou hast cast us out and scattered us abroad; Thou hast also been displeased; Thou hast shown thy people heavy things; Thou hast given us a drink of deadly wine." The chant was the dirge, not of Cuthbert only, but of his Church and his people. Over both hung the gloom of a seeming failure. Strangers who knew not Iona and Columba entered into the heritage of Aidan and Cuthbert. As the Roman communion folded England again beneath her wing, men forgot that a Church which passed utterly away had battled with Rome for the spiritual headship of Western Christendom, and that throughout the great struggle with the heathen reaction of Mid-Britain the new religion had its centre not at Canterbury, but at Lindisfarne. Nor were men long to remember that from the days of Æthelfrith to the days of Ecgfrith English politics had found their centre at York. But forgotten or no, Northumbria had done its work. By its missionaries and by its sword it had won England from heathendom to the Christian Church. It had given her a new poetic

SEC. III

THE NORTH-UMBRIAN
KINGDOM

588

TO 685

685

Death of Cuthbert

SEC. IV literature. Its monasteries were already the seat of whatever intellectual life the country possessed. Above all it had first gathered together into a loose political unity the various tribes of the English people, and by standing at their head for half a century had accustomed them to a national life, out of which England as we have it now, was to spring.

THE THREE KINGDOMS
685
TO 828

Section IV.—The Three Kingdoms, 685—828.

[Authorities.—A few incidents of Mercian history are preserved among the meagre annals of Wessex, which form, during this period, “The English Chronicle.” But for the most part we are thrown upon later writers, especially Henry of Huntingdon and William of Malmesbury, both authors of the twelfth century, but having access to older materials now lost. The letters of Boniface and those of Alcuin, which form the most valuable contemporary materials for this period, are given by Dr. Giles in his “Patres Ecclesiæ Anglicanæ.” They have also been carefully edited by Jaffé in his series of “Monumenta Germanica.”]

Ine of Wessex
688-726

The supremacy of Northumbria over the English people had fallen for ever with the death of Oswiu, and its power over the tribes of the north was as completely broken by the death of Ecgfrith and the defeat of Nectansmere. To the north, the flight of Bishop Trumwine from Abercorn announced the revolt of the Picts from her rule. In the south, Mercia proved a formidable rival under Æthelred, who had succeeded Wulfhere in 675. Already his kingdom reached from the Humber to the Channel; and Æthelred in the first years of his reign had finally reduced Kent beneath his overlordship. All hope of national union seemed indeed at an end, for the revival of the West-Saxon power at this moment completed the parting of the land into three states of nearly equal power out of which it seemed impossible that unity could come. Since their overthrow at Faddiley, a hundred years before, the West-Saxons had been weakened by anarchy and civil war, and had been at the mercy alike of the rival English states and of the Britons. We have seen however that in 652 a revival of power had enabled them to drive back the Britons to the Parret. A second interval of order in 682 strengthened King Centwine again to take up war with the Britons, and push his frontier as far as the Quantocks.

S. JOHN THE EVANGELIST

From the Lindisfarne Gospel-book MS. Cott. Nero D. IV

A.D. 720

A third rally of the West-Saxons in 685 under Ceadwalla enabled them to turn on their English enemies and conquer Sussex. Ine, the greatest of their early kings, whose reign covered the long period from 688 to 726, carried on during the whole of it the war for supremacy. Eastward, he forced Kent, Essex and London to own his rule. On the west he pushed his way southward round the marshes of the Parret to a more fertile territory, and guarded the frontier of his new conquests by a fortress on the banks of the Tone, which has grown into the present Taunton. The West-Saxons thus became masters of the whole district which now bears the name of Somerset, the land of the Somersætas, where the Tor rose like an island out of a waste of flood-drowned fen that stretched westward to the Channel. At the base of this hill Ine established on the site of an older British foundation his famous monastery of Glastonbury. The little hamlet in which it stood took its English name from one of the English families, the Glæstings, who chose the spot for their settlement ; but it had long been a religious shrine of the Britons, and the tradition that a second Patrick rested there drew thither the wandering scholars of Ireland. The first inhabitants of Ine's abbey found, as they alleged, "an ancient church, built by no art of man ;" and beside this relic of its older Welsh owners, Ine founded his own abbey-church of stone. The spiritual charge of his conquests he committed to his kinsman Ealdhelm, the most famous scholar of his day, who became the first bishop of the new see of Sherborne, which the king formed out of the districts west of Selwood and the Frome, to meet the needs of the new parts of his kingdom. Ine's code, the earliest collection of West-Saxon laws which remains to us, shows a wise solicitude to provide for the civil as well as the ecclesiastical needs of the mixed population over which he now ruled. His repulse of the Mercians, when they at last attacked Wessex, proved how well he could provide for its defence. Æthelred's reign of thirty years was one of almost unbroken peace, and his activity mainly showed itself in the planting and endowment of monasteries, which gradually changed the face of the realm. Ceolred however, who in 709 became king of Mercia, took up the strife with Wessex for the overlordship of the south, and in 715 he marched into the very heart of Wessex ; but he was repulsed in a bloody encounter at

SEC. IV
 THE THREE KINGDOMS
 685
 TO 828 694

710

715

SEC. IV
THE THREE KINGDOMS
685
TO 828

Wanborough. Able however as Ine was to hold Mercia at bay, he was unable to hush the civil strife that was the curse of Wessex, and a wild legend tells the story of the disgust which drove him from the world. He had feasted royally at one of his country houses, and on the morrow, as he rode from it, his queen bade him turn back thither. The king returned to find his house stripped of curtains and vessels, and foul with refuse and the dung of cattle,

CHURCH AT BRADFORD ON AVON, BUILT BY EALDHELM.
"Journal of Archaeological Association."

while in the royal bed where he had slept with Æthelburh rested a sow with her farrow of pigs. The scene had no need of the queen's comment: "See, my lord, how the fashion of this world passeth away!" In 726 Ine laid down his crown, and sought peace and death in a pilgrimage to Rome.

Æthelbald of Mercia
716-757

The anarchy that had driven Ine from the throne broke out on his departure in civil strife which left Wessex an easy prey to the successor of Ceolred. Among those who sought Guthlac's retirement at Crowland came Æthelbald, a son of Penda's brother, flying from Ceolred's hate. Driven off again and again by the king's pursuit, Æthelbald still returned to the little hut he had built beside the hermitage, and comforted himself in hours of despair with his companion's words. "Know how to wait," said Guthlac, "and the kingdom will come to thee ; not by violence or rapine, but by the hand of God." In 716 Ceolred fell frenzy-smitten at his board, and Mercia chose Æthelbald for its king. For the first ten years of his reign he shrank from a conflict with the victor of Wanborough ; but with Ine's withdrawal he took up again the fierce struggle with Wessex for the complete supremacy of the south. He penetrated into the very heart of the West-Saxon kingdom, and his siege and capture of the royal town of Somerton in 733 ended the war. For twenty years the overlordship of Mercia was recognized by all Britain south of the Humber. It was at the head of the forces, not of Mercia only, but of East Anglia and Kent, as well as of the West-Saxons, that Æthelbald marched against the Welsh ; and he styled himself "King not of the Mercians only, but of all the neighbouring peoples who are called by the common name of Southern English." But the aim of Æthelbald was destined to the same failure as that of his predecessors. For twenty years indeed he met the constant outbreaks of his new subjects with success ; and it was not till 754 that a general rising forced him to call his whole strength to the field. At the head of his own Mercians and of the subject hosts of Kent, Essex, and East Anglia, Æthelbald marched to the field of Burford, where the West-Saxons were again marshalled under the golden dragon of their race : but after hours of desperate fighting in the forefront of the battle, a sudden panic seized the Mercian king, and the supremacy of Mid-Britain passed away for ever as he fled first of his army from the field. Three years later he was surprised and slain in a night attack by his caldormen ; and in the anarchy that followed, Kent, Essex, and East Anglia threw off the yoke of Mercia.

While the two southern kingdoms were wasting their energies in this desperate struggle, Northumbria had set aside its efforts at conquest for the pursuits of peace. Under the reigns of Ecgfrith's successors, Aldfrith the Learned and the four kings who followed him, the kingdom became in the middle of the eighth century the literary centre of Western Europe. No schools were more famous

SEC. IV
 THE THREE KINGDOMS
 685
 TO 828

Bæda
 673-735

† Lucas uitalis 7 on 511 uod 503 ppoll

incipit euangelium

cept lucy secundum lucam...

f. ex. den

BEGINNING OF S. LUKE'S GOSPEL.

Lindisfarne Gospel-book. MS. Cott. Nero D. iv.

than those of Jarrow and York. The whole learning of the age seemed to be summed up in a Northumbrian scholar. Bæda—the Venerable Bede, as later times styled him—was born in 673, nine years after the Synod of Whitby, on ground which passed a year later to Benedict Biscop as the site of the great abbey which he reared by the mouth of the Wear. His youth was trained and his long tranquil life was wholly spent in an off-shoot of Benedict's house which was founded by his friend Ceolfrid. Bæda never stirred from Jarrow. "I have spent my whole life in the same monastery," he says, "and while attentive to the rule of my order and the service of the Church my constant pleasure lay in learning, or teaching, or writing." The words sketch for us a scholar's life, the more touching in its simplicity that it is the life of the first great English scholar. The quiet grandeur of a life consecrated to knowledge, the tranquil pleasure that lies in learning and teaching and writing, dawned for Englishmen in the story of Bæda. While still young, he became teacher; and six hundred monks, besides strangers that flocked thither for instruction, formed his school of Jarrow. It is hard to imagine how among the toils of the school-master and the duties of the monk Bæda could have found time for the composition of the numerous works that made his name famous in the west. But materials for study had accumulated in Northumbria through the journeys of Wilfrid and Benedict Biscop and the libraries which were forming at Wearmouth and York. The tradition of the older Irish teachers still lingered to direct the young scholar into that path of Scriptural interpretation to which he chiefly owed his fame. Greek, a rare accomplishment in the west, came to him from the school which the Greek Archbishop Theodore founded beneath the walls of Canterbury. His skill in the ecclesiastical chant was derived from a Roman cantor whom Pope Vitalian sent in the train of Benedict Biscop. Little by little the young scholar thus made himself master of the whole range of the science of his time; he became, as Burke rightly styled him, "the father of English learning." The tradition of the older classic culture was first revived for England in his quotations of Plato and Aristotle, of Seneca and Cicero, of Lucretius and Ovid. Virgil cast over him the same spell that he cast over Dante; verses from the Æneid break his narratives of martyrdoms, and the disciple

SEC. IV
 THE THREE KINGDOMS
 685
 TO 828

DAVID, AS PSALMIST.

MS. traditionally ascribed to Bede, in Durham Cathedral Library.

ventures on the track of the great master in a little eclogue descriptive of the approach of spring. His work was done with small aid from others. "I am my own secretary," he writes; "I make my own notes. I am my own librarian." But forty-five works remained after his death to attest his prodigious industry. In his own eyes and those of his contemporaries the most important among these were the commentaries and homilies upon various books of the Bible which he had drawn from the writings of the Fathers. But he was far from confining himself to theology. In treatises compiled as text-books for his scholars Bæda threw together all that the world had then accumulated in astronomy and meteorology, in physics and music, in philosophy, grammar, rhetoric, arithmetic, medicine. But the encyclopædic character of his researches left him in heart a simple Englishman. He loved his own English tongue; he was skilled in English song; his last work was a translation into English of the Gospel of St. John, and almost the last words that broke from his lips were some English rimes upon death.

SEC. IV
 THE THREE KINGDOMS
 685
 TO 828
 —

But the noblest proof of his love of England lies in the work which immortalizes his name. In his "Ecclesiastical History of the English Nation" Bæda became the first English historian. All that we really know of the century and a half that follows the landing of Augustine we know from him. Wherever his own personal observation extended the story is told with admirable detail and force. He is hardly less full or accurate in the portions which he owed to his Kentish friends, Albinus and Nothelm. What he owed to no informant was his own exquisite faculty of story-telling, and yet no story of his own telling is so touching as the story of his death. Two weeks before the Easter of 735 the old man was seized with an extreme weakness and loss of breath. He still preserved, however, his usual pleasantness and good humour, and in spite of prolonged sleeplessness continued his lectures to the pupils about him. Verses of his own English tongue broke from time to time from the master's lips—rude rimes that told how before the "need-fare," Death's stern "must go," none can enough bethink him what is to be his doom for good or ill. The tears of Bæda's scholars mingled with his song. "We never read without weeping," writes one of them. So the days rolled on to Ascensontide, and still

Death of Bæda

SEC. IV
 THE THREE KINGDOMS
 685
 TO 828

master and pupils toiled at their work, for Bæda longed to bring to an end his version of St. John's Gospel into the English tongue, and his extracts from Bishop Isidore. "I don't want my boys to read a lie," he answered those who would have had him rest, "or to work to no purpose after I am gone." A few days before Ascensiontide his sickness grew upon him, but he spent the whole day in teaching, only saying cheerfully to his scholars, "Learn with what speed you may; I know not how long I may last." The dawn broke on another sleepless night, and again the old man called his scholars round him and bade them write. "There is still a chapter wanting," said the scribe, as the morning drew on, "and it is hard for thee to question thyself any longer." "It is easily done," said Bæda; "take thy pen and write quickly." Amid tears and farewells the day wore away to eventide. "There is yet one sentence unwritten, dear master," said the boy. "Write it quickly," bade the dying man. "It is finished now," said the little scribe at last. "You speak truth," said the master; "all is finished now." Placed upon the pavement, his head supported in his scholars' arms, his face turned to the spot where he was wont to pray, Bæda chanted the solemn "Glory to God." As his voice reached the close of his song he passed quietly away.

Anarchy of Northumbria

First among English scholars, first among English theologians, first among English historians, it is in the monk of Jarrow that English literature strikes its roots. In the six hundred scholars who gathered round him for instruction he is the father of our national education. In his physical treatises he is the first figure to which our science looks back. Bæda was a statesman as well as a scholar, and the letter which in the last year of his life he addressed to Egberht of York shows how vigorously he proposed to battle against the growing anarchy of Northumbria. But his plans of reform came too late, though a king like Eadberht, with his brother 738 Egberht, the first Archbishop of York, might for a time revive the fading glories of his kingdom. Eadberht repelled an attack of Æthelbald on his southern border; while at the same time he carried on a successful war against the Picts. Ten years later he penetrated into Ayrshire, and finally made an alliance with the Picts, which enabled him in 756 to conquer Strathclyde and take its capital Alcluyd, or Dumbarton. But at the moment when his

DAVID, AS WARRIOR.

MS. traditionally ascribed to Be-da, in Durham Cathedral Library.

SEC. IV
 THE THREE KINGDOMS
 685
 TO 828

Offa of Mercia
 758-796

triumph seemed complete, his army was utterly destroyed as it withdrew homewards, and so crushing was the calamity that even Eadberht could only fling down his sceptre and withdraw with his brother the Archbishop to a monastery. From this time the history of Northumbria is only a wild story of lawlessness and bloodshed. King after king was swept away by treason and revolt, the country fell into the hands of its turbulent nobles, the very fields lay waste, and the land was scourged by famine and plague. Isolated from the rest of the country during fifty years of anarchy, the northern realm hardly seemed to form part of the English people.

The work in fact of national consolidation among the English seemed to be fatally arrested. The battle of Burford had finally settled the division of Britain into three equal powers. Wessex was now as firmly planted south of the Thames as Northumbria north of the Humber. But this crushing defeat was far from having broken the Mercian power; and under Offa, whose reign from 758 to 796 covers with that of Æthelbald nearly the whole of the eighth century, it rose to a height unknown since the days of Wulfhere. Years however had to pass before the new king could set about the recovery of Kent; and it was only after a war of three years that in 775 a victory at Otford gave it back to the Mercian realm. With Kent Offa doubtless recovered Sussex and Surrey, as well as Essex and London; and four years later a victory at Bensington completed the conquest of the district that now forms the shires of Oxford and Buckingham.

COIN OF OFFA.

For the nine years that followed however Mercia ventured on no further attempt to extend her power over her English neighbours. Like her rivals, she turned on the Welsh. Pushing after 779 over the Severn, whose upper course had served till now as the frontier between Briton and Englishman, Offa drove the King of Powys from his capital, which changed its old name of Pengwyrn for the significant English title of the Town in the Scrub or bush, Scrobsbyryg, or Shrewsbury. The border-line he drew after his inroad is marked by a huge earthwork, which runs from the mouth of Wye to that of Dee, and is still called Offa's Dyke. A settlement of Englishmen on the land between this dyke and the Severn served as a military frontier for the Mercian realm. Here,

SEC. IV
THE THREE KINGDOMS
685
TO 828 as in the later conquests of the Northumbrians and the West-Saxons, the older plan of driving off the conquered from the soil

SEC. IV
 THE THREE KINGDOMS
 685
 TO 828 was definitely abandoned. The Welsh who chose to remain dwelt undisturbed among their English conquerors ; and it was probably to regulate the mutual relations of the two races that Offa drew up the code of laws which bore his name. In Mercia as in Northumbria attacks on the Britons marked the close of all dreams of supremacy over the English themselves. Under Offa Mercia sank into virtual isolation. The anarchy into which Northumbria sank after Eadberht's death never tempted him to cross the Humber ; nor was he shaken from his inaction by as tempting an opportunity which presented itself across the Thames. It must have been in the years that followed the battle of Burford that the West-Saxons made themselves masters of the shrunken realm of Dyvnaint, which still retains its old name in the form of Devon, and pushed their frontier westward to the Tamar. But in 786 their progress was stayed by a fresh outbreak of anarchy. The strife between the rivals that disputed the throne was ended by the defeat of Ecgberht, the heir of Ceawlin's line, and his flight to Offa's court. The Mercian king however used his presence not so much for schemes of aggrandizement as to bring about a peaceful alliance ; and in 789 Ecgberht was driven from Mercia, while Offa wedded his daughter to the West-Saxon king Beorhtric. The true aim of Offa indeed was to unite firmly the whole of Mid-Britain, with Kent as its outlet towards Europe, under the Mercian crown, and to mark its ecclesiastical as well as its political independence by the formation in 787 of an archbishopric of Lichfield, as a check to the see of Canterbury in the south, and a rival to the see of York in the north.

England
 and the Franks

But while Offa was hampered in his projects by the dread of the West-Saxons at home, he was forced to watch jealously a power which had risen to dangerous greatness over sea, the power of the Franks. Till now, the interests of the English people had lain wholly within the bounds of the Britain they had won. But at this moment our national horizon suddenly widened, and the fortunes of England became linked to the general fortunes of Western Christendom. It was by the work of English missionaries that Britain was first drawn into political relations with the Frankish court. The Northumbrian Willibrord, and the more famous West-Saxon Boniface or Winfrith, followed in the track of earlier preachers, both Irish and English, who had been labouring among the heathens of Germany, and especially among those who had now become subject to the Franks. The Frank king Pippin's connexion with the English preachers led to constant intercourse with England; a Northumbrian scholar, Alcuin, was the centre of the literary revival

SEC. IV
THE THREE KINGDOMS
685
TO 828

S. MATTHEW.

Gospel-book of S. Boniface, at Fulda.

at his court. Pippin's son Charles, known in after days as Charles the Great, maintained the same interest in English affairs. His friendship with Alcuin drew him into close relations with Northern Britain. Ecgberht, the claimant of the West-Saxon throne, had found a refuge with him since Offa's league with Beorhtric in 787. With Offa too his relations seem to have been generally friendly.

SEC. IV
THE THREE KINGDOMS
685
TO 828

But the Mercian king shrank cautiously from any connexion which might imply a recognition of Frankish supremacy. He had indeed good grounds for caution. The costly gifts sent by Charles to the monasteries of England as of Ireland showed his will to obtain an influence in both countries; he maintained relations with Northumbria, with Kent, with the whole English Church. Above all, he

INCIPIIT LIBER EXODVS

ÆCSUNT Cap: 1:

NOMINA FILIORŪ ISRAHEL QUINGRES
SISUNT IN . 27
ÆGYPTŪ CUM IACOB SINGULI CUM DOMI BUS SUIS INTROIE RUNT

Ruben. Simeon leui luda. issachar zabulon ebeniamin danecnephthalim. gad eiafer

BEGINNING OF THE BOOK OF EXODUS.
Alcuin's Bible. MS. Add. 10546, British Museum.

800 harboured at his court exiles from every English realm, exiled kings from Northumbria, East-Anglian thegns, fugitives from Mercia itself; and Egberht probably marched in his train when the shouts of the people and priesthood of Rome hailed him as Roman Emperor. When the death of Beorhtric in 802 opened a way for the exile's return to Wessex, the relations of Charles with the English were still guided by the dream that Britain, lost to the Empire at the

MOSES GIVING THE LAW.
Alcuin's Bible. MS. Add. 10546, British Museum.

SEC. IV
 THE THREE KINGDOMS
 685
 TO 828

The Fall of Mercia

802

hour when the rest of the western provinces were lost, should return to the Empire now that Rome had risen again to more than its old greatness in the west ; and the revolutions which were distracting the English kingdoms told steadily in his favour.

The years since Ecgberht's flight had made little change in the state of Britain. Offa's completion of his kingdom by the seizure of East Anglia had been followed by his death in 796 ; and under his successor Cenwulf the Mercian archbishopric was suppressed, and there was no attempt to carry further the supremacy of the Mid-land kingdom. Cenwulf stood silently by when Ecgberht mounted the West-Saxon throne, and maintained peace with the new ruler of Wessex throughout his reign. The first enterprise of Ecgberht indeed was not directed against his English but his Welsh neighbours. In 815 he marched into the heart of Cornwall, and after eight years of fighting, the last fragment of British dominion in the west came to an end. As a nation Britain had passed away with the victories of Deorham and Chester ; of the separate British peoples who had still carried on the struggle with the three English kingdoms, the Britons of Cumbria and of Strathclyde had already bowed to Northumbrian rule ; the Britons of Wales had owned by tribute to Offa the supremacy of Mercia ; the last unconquered British state of West Wales as far as the Land's End now passed under the mastery of Wessex.

COIN OF ECGBERHT.

While Wessex was regaining the strength it had so long lost, its rival in Mid-Britain was sinking into helpless anarchy. Within Mercia was torn by a civil war which broke out on Cenwulf's death in 821 ; and the weakness which this left behind was seen when the old strife with Wessex was renewed by his successor Beornwulf, who in 825 penetrated into Wiltshire, and was defeated in a bloody battle at Ellandun. All England south of the Thames at once submitted to Ecgberht of Wessex, and East Anglia rose in a desperate revolt which proved fatal to its Mercian rulers. Two of these kings in succession fell fighting on East-Anglian soil ; and a third, Wiglaf, had hardly mounted the Mercian throne when his exhausted kingdom was called on again to encounter the West-Saxon. Egberht saw that the hour had come for a decisive onset. In 828 his army marched northward without a struggle; Wiglaf fled helplessly before it; and Mercia bowed to the West-Saxon overlordship. From Mercia Egberht marched on Northumbria; but half a century of anarchy had robbed that kingdom of all vigour, and pirates were already harrying its coast; its nobles met him at Dore in Derbyshire, and owned him as their overlord. The work that Oswiu and Æthelbald had failed to do was done, and the whole English race in Britain was for the first time knit together under a single ruler. Long and bitter as the struggle for independence was still to be in Mercia and in the north, yet from the moment that Northumbria bowed to its West-Saxon overlord, England was made in fact if not as yet in name.

SEC. V
 —
 WESSEX
 AND THE DANES 802
 TO 880
 —

Section V.—Wessex and the Danes, 802—880

[Authorities.—Our history here rests mainly on the English (or Anglo-Saxon) Chronicle. The earlier part of this is a compilation, and consists of (1) Annals of the conquest of South Britain, (2) Short notices of the kings and bishops of Wessex, expanded into larger form by copious insertions from Bæda, and after his death by briefer additions from some northern sources. (3) It is probable that these materials were thrown together, and perhaps translated from Latin into English, in Ælfred's time, as a preface to the far fuller annals which begin with the reign of Æthelwulf, and widen into a great contemporary history when they reach that of Ælfred himself. Of their character and import as a part of English literature, I have spoken in the text. The "Life of Ælfred" which bears the name of Asser is probably contemporary, or at any rate founded on contemporary authority. There is an admirable modern life of the king by Dr. Pauli. For the Danish wars, see "The Conquest of England" by J. R. Green.]

The effort after a national sovereignty had hardly been begun, when the Dane struck down the short-lived greatness of Wessex. While Britain was passing through her ages of conquest and settlement, the dwellers in the Scandinavian peninsula and the isles of the Baltic had lain hidden from Christendom, waging their battle for existence with a stern climate, a barren soil, and stormy seas. Forays and plunder-raids over sea eked out their scanty livelihood, and as the eighth century closed, these raids found a wider sphere

The North-men

SEC. V
 WESSEX
 AND THE DANES 802
 TO 880
 787 than the waters of the north. Ægberht had not yet brought all Britain under his sway when the Wikings or "creek-men," as the adventurers were called, were seen hovering off the English coast, and growing in numbers and hardihood as they crept southward to the Thames. The first sight of the northmen is as if the hand on the dial of history had gone back three hundred years.

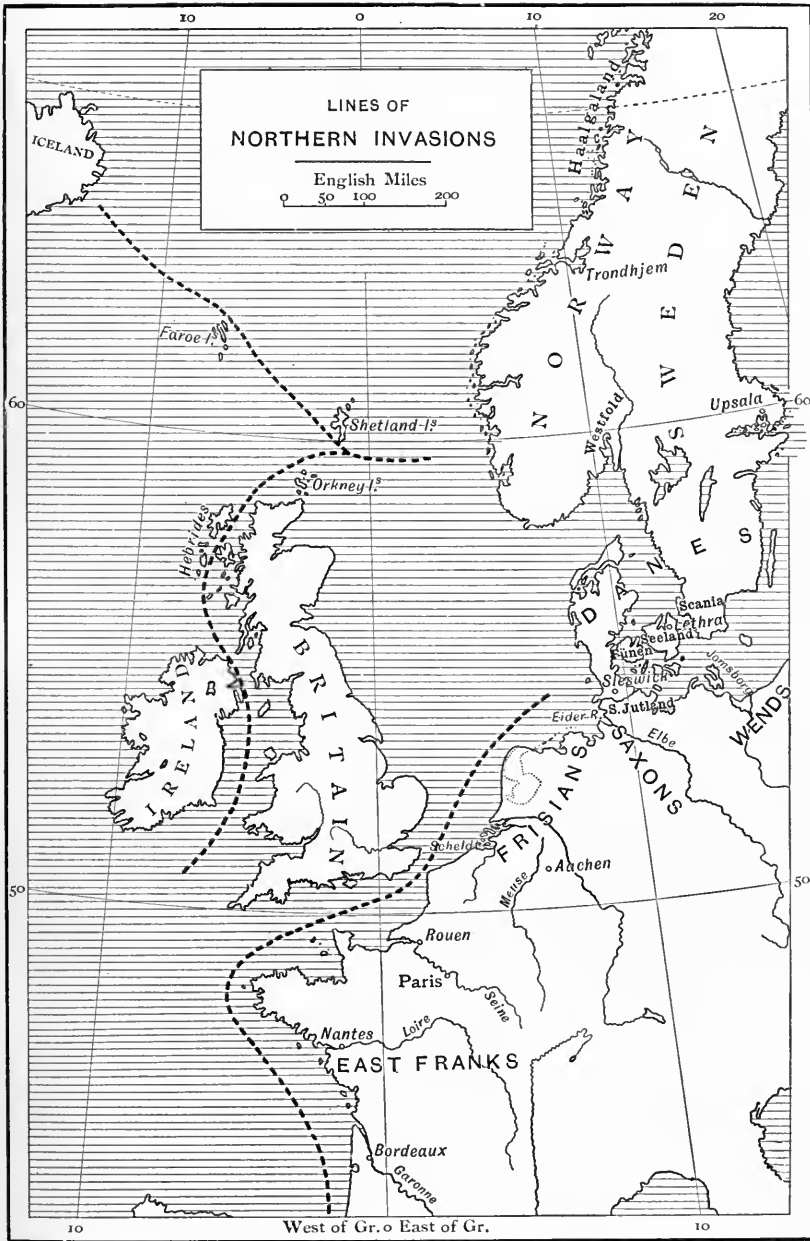

BRONZE PLATE, WITH FIGURES OF NORTHERN WARRIORS.

Montelius, "Civilization of Sweden."

The Norwegian fiords, the Frisian sandbanks, poured forth pirate fleets such as had swept the seas in the days of Hengest and Cerdic. There was the same wild panic as the black boats of the invaders struck inland along the river-reaches, or moored around the river islets, the same sights of horror, firing of homesteads, slaughter of men, women driven off to slavery or shame, children tossed on pikes or sold in the market-place, as when the English invaders attacked Britain. Christian priests were again slain at the altar by worshippers of Woden; letters, arts, religion, government disappeared before these northmen as before the northmen of old. But when the wild burst of the storm was over, land, people, government reappeared unchanged. England still remained England; the conquerors sank quietly into the mass of those around them; and Woden yielded without a struggle to Christ. The secret of this difference between the two invasions was that the battle was no longer between men of different races. It was no longer a fight between Briton and German, between Englishman and Welshman. The life of these northern folk was in the main the life of the earlier Englishmen. Their customs, their religion, their social order were the same; they were in fact kinsmen bringing back to an England that had forgotten its origins the barbaric

SEC. V
 WESSEX
 AND THE DANES 802
 TO 880

Walker & Routledge

England of its pirate forefathers. Nowhere over Europe was the fight so fierce, because nowhere else were the combatants men of

SEC. V
 WESSEX
 AND THE DANES 802
 TO 880
 —
 The Danish Conquests

one blood and one speech. But just for this reason the fusion of the northmen with their foes was nowhere so peaceful and so complete.

Britain had to meet a double attack from its new assailants. The northmen of Norway had struck westward to the Shetlands and Orkneys, and passed thence by the Hebrides to Ireland ; while their kinsmen who now dwelt in the old Engle-land steered along the coasts of Frisia and Gaul. Shut in between the two lines of their advance, Britain lay in the very centre of their field of operations ; and at the close of Ecgberht's reign, when the decisive struggle first began, their attacks were directed to the two extremities of the West-Saxon realm. After having harried

834-837

East Anglia and slain in Kent, they swept up the Thames to the plunder of London ; while the pirates in the Irish Channel roused all Cornwall to revolt.

It was in the alliance of the northmen with the Britons that the danger of these earlier inroads lay. Ecgberht indeed defeated the united forces of these two enemies in a victory at Hengest-dun, but an unequal struggle was carried on for years to come in the Wessex west of Selwood. King Æthelwulf, who followed Ecgberht in 839, fought strenuously in the defence of his realm ; in the defeat of Charmouth, as in the victory at Aclea, he led his troops in person against the sea-robbers ; and he drove back the Welsh of North Wales, who were encouraged by the invaders to rise in arms. Northmen and Welshmen were beaten again and again, and yet the peril grew greater year by year. The dangers to the Christian faith from these heathen assailants roused the clergy to his aid. Swithun, Bishop of Winchester, became Æthelwulf's minister ;

851

853

SOLDIER.
 Ninth Century.
Gospel-book of Mac Durnan, Lambeth Palace Library.

Ealhstan, Bishop of Sherborne, was among the soldiers of the Cross, and with the ealdormen led the fyrds of Somerset and Dorset to drive the invaders from the mouth of the Parret. At last hard fighting gained the realm a little respite; in 858 Æthelwulf died in peace, and for eight years the Northmen left the land in quiet. But these earlier forays had been mere preludes to the real burst of the storm. When it broke in its full force upon the island, it was no longer a series of plunder-raids, but the invasion of Britain by a host of conquerors who settled as they conquered. The work was now taken up by another people of Scandinavian blood, the Danes. At the accession of Æthelred, the third of Æthelwulf's sons, who had mounted the throne after the short reigns of his brothers, these new assailants fell on Britain. As they came to the front, the character of the attack wholly changed. The petty squadrons which had till now harassed the coast of Britain made way for larger hosts than had as yet fallen on any country in the west; while raid and foray were replaced by the regular campaign of armies who marched to conquer, and whose aim was to settle on the land they won. In 866 the Danes landed in East Anglia, and marched in the next spring across the Humber upon York. Civil strife as usual distracted the energies of Northumbria. Its subject-crown was disputed by two claimants, and when they united to meet this common danger both fell in the same defeat before the walls of their capital. Northumbria at once submitted to the Danes, and Mercia was only saved by a hasty march of King Æthelred to its aid. But the Peace of Nottingham, by which Æthelred rescued Mercia in 868, left the Danes free to turn to the rich spoil of the great abbeys of the Fen. Peterborough, Crowland, Ely, went up in flames, and their monks fled or were slain among the ruins. From thence they struck suddenly for East Anglia itself, whose king, Eadmund, brought prisoner before the Danish leaders, was bound to a tree and shot to death with arrows. His martyrdom by the heathen made him the St. Sebastian of English legend; in later days his

SEC. V
 WESSEX
 AND THE DANES 802
 TO 880

866

COIN OF EADMUND OF EAST ANGLIA.

870

SEC. V
 WESSEX
 AND THE DANES 802
 TO 880
 —

figure gleamed from the pictured windows of church after church along the eastern coast, and the stately abbey of St. Edmundsbury rose over his relics. With Eadmund ended the line of East-Anglian under-kings, for his kingdom was not only conquered, but ten years later it was divided among the soldiers of a Danish host, whose leader, Guthrum, assumed its crown. How great was the terror stirred by these successive victories was shown in the action of Mercia, which, though it was as yet still spared from actual conquest, crouched in terror before the Danes, acknowledged them in 870 as its overlords, and paid them tribute.

Danes
 and Wessex

In four years the work of Ecgberht had been undone, and England north of the Thames had been torn from the overlordship of Wessex. So rapid a conquest as the Danish conquests of Northumbria, Mercia, and East Anglia, had only been made possible by the temper of these kingdoms themselves. To them the conquest was simply their transfer from one overlord to another, and it would seem as if they preferred the lordship of the Dane to the overlordship of the West-Saxon. It was another sign of the enormous difficulty of welding these kingdoms together into a single people. The time had now come for Wessex to fight, not for supremacy, but for life. As yet it seemed paralyzed by terror. With the exception of his one march on Nottingham, King Æthelred had done nothing to save his under-kingdoms from the wreck. But the Danes no sooner pushed up Thames to Reading than the West-Saxons, attacked on their own soil, turned fiercely at bay. The enemy penetrated indeed into the heart of Wessex as far as the heights that overlook the Vale of White Horse. A desperate battle drove them back from Ashdown; but their camp in the tongue of land between the Kennet and Thames proved impregnable, and fresh forces pushed up the Thames to join their fellows. In the midst of the struggle Æthelred died, and left his youngest brother Ælfred to meet a fresh advance of the foe. They had already encamped at Wilton before the young king could meet them, and a series of defeats forced him to buy the withdrawal of the pirates and win a few years' breathing-space for his realm. It was easy for the quick eye of Ælfred to see that the Danes had withdrawn simply with the view of gaining firmer footing for a new attack; indeed, three years had hardly passed before Mercia was invaded, and its under-king driven over sea to make place for a tributary of the Danes. From Repton half their host marched northwards to the Tyne, dividing a land where there was little left to plunder, colonizing and tilling it, while Guthrum led the rest into East Anglia to prepare for their next year's attack on Wessex. The greatness of the contest had now drawn to Britain the whole strength of the northmen; and it was with a host swollen by reinforcements from every quarter that Guthrum at last set sail for the south. In 876 the Danish fleet appeared before Wareham, and when a treaty with Ælfred won their withdrawal, they threw themselves into Exeter and allied themselves with the Welsh. Through the winter Ælfred girded himself for this new peril. At break of spring his army closed round the town, while a hired fleet cruised off the coast to guard against rescue. The peril of their brethren in Exeter forced a part of the Danish host which had remained at Wareham to put to sea with the view of aiding them, but they were driven by a storm on the rocks of Swanage, and Exeter was at last starved into surrender, while the Danes again swore to leave Wessex.

871

They withdrew in fact to Gloucester, but Ælfred had hardly disbanded his troops when his enemies, roused by the arrival of fresh hordes eager for plunder, reappeared at Chippenham, and at the opening of 878 marched ravaging over the land. The surprise was complete, and for a month or two the general panic left no hope of resistance. Ælfred, with his small band of followers, could only throw himself into a fort raised hastily in the isle of Athelney, among the marshes of the Parret. It was a position from which he could watch closely the movements of his foes, and with the first burst of spring he called the thegns of Somerset to his standard, and still gathering his troops as he moved, marched through Wiltshire on the Danes. He found their host at Edington, defeated it in a great battle, and after a siege of fourteen days forced them to surrender. Their leader, Guthrum, was baptized as a Christian and bound by a solemn peace or "frith" at Wedmore in Somerset. In form the Peace of Wedmore seemed indeed a surrender of the bulk of Britain to its invaders. All Northumbria, all East Anglia, the half of Central England was left subject to the northmen. Throughout this Dane-law, as it was called, the con

SEC. V
 —
 WESSEX
 AND THE DANES 802
 TO 880
 —
 875

Peace of Wedmore

SEC. V
 WESSEX
 AND THE DANES 802
 TO 880
 —

querors settled down among the conquered population as lords of the soil, thickly in the north and east, more thinly in the central districts, but everywhere guarding jealously their old isolation, and gathering in separate "heres" or armies round towns which were only linked in loose confederacies. The peace had in fact saved little more than Wessex itself. But in saving Wessex it saved England. The spell of terror was broken. The tide of invasion was turned. Only one short struggle broke a peace of fifteen years.

Ælfred
 871-901

With the Peace of Wedmore in 878 began a work even more noble than this deliverance of Wessex from the Dane. "So long as I have lived," wrote Ælfred in later days, "I have striven to live worthily." He longed when death overtook him "to leave to the men that come after a remembrance of him in good works." The aim has been more than fulfilled. The memory of the life and doings of the noblest of English rulers has come down to us living and distinct through the mist of exaggeration and legend that gathered round it. Politically or intellectually, the sphere of Ælfred's action may seem too small to justify a comparison of him with the few whom the world claims as its greatest men. What really lifts him to their level is the moral grandeur of his life. He lived solely for the good of his people. He is the first instance in the history of Christendom of a ruler who put aside every personal aim or ambition to devote himself wholly to the welfare of those whom he ruled. In his mouth "to live worthily" meant a life of justice, temperance, self-sacrifice. The Peace of Wedmore at once marked the temper of the man. Warrior and conqueror as he was, with a disorganized England before him, he

ÆLFRED'S JEWEL.

Found at Athelney; now in the Ashmolean Museum, Oxford.

SEC. V
 WESSEX
 AND THE DANES 802
 TO 880 set aside at thirty the dream of conquest to leave behind him the memory not of victories but of "good works," of daily toils by

SEC. V
 WESSEX
 AND THE DANES 802
 TO 880 which he secured peace, good government, education for his people. His policy was one of peace. He abandoned all thought of the recovery of the West-Saxon overlordship. With England across the Watling Street, a Roman road which ran from Chester to London, in other words with Northumbria, East Anglia, and the half of Mercia, Ælfred had nothing to do. All that he retained was his own Wessex, with the upper part of the valley of the Thames, the whole valley of the Severn, and the rich plains of the Mersey and the Dec. Over these latter districts, to which the name of Mercia was now confined, while the rest of the Mercian kingdom became known as the Five Boroughs of the Danes, Ælfred set the ealdorman Æthelred, the husband of his daughter Æthelflæd, a ruler well fitted by his courage and activity to guard Wessex against inroads from the north. Against invasion from the sea, he provided by the better organization of military service, and by the creation of a fleet. The country was divided into military districts, each five hides sending an armed man at the king's summons and providing him with food and pay. The duty of every freeman to join the host remained binding as before; but the host or fyrd was divided into two halves, each of which took by turns its service in the field, while the other half guarded its own burhs and townships. To win the sea was a harder task than to win the land, and Ælfred had not to organize, but to create a fleet. He steadily developed however his new naval force, and in the reign of his son a fleet of a hundred English ships held the mastery of the Channel.

Ælfred's
 Rule

The defence of his realm thus provided for, he devoted himself to its good government. In Wessex itself, spent by years of deadly struggle, with law, order, the machinery of justice and government weakened by the pirate storm, material and moral civilization had alike to be revived. His work was of a simple and practical order. In politics as in war, or in his after dealings with letters, he took what was closest at hand and made the best of it. In the re-organization of public justice his main work was to enforce submission to the justice of hundred-moot and shire-moot alike on noble and ceorl, "who were constantly at obstinate variance with one another in the folk-moots, so that hardly any one of them would grant that to be true doom that had been judged for doom by the ealdorman and reeves." "All the law dooms of his land that were given in his absence he used to keenly question, of what sort they were, just or unjust; and if he found any wrongdoing in them he would call the judges themselves before him." "Day and night," says his biographer, he was busied in the correction of local injustice: "for in that whole kingdom the poor had no helpers, or few, save the king himself." Of a new legislation the king had no thought. "Those things which I met with," he tells us, "either of the days of Ine, my kinsman, or of Offa, king of the Mercians, or of Æthelberht, who first among the English race received baptism, those which seemed to me rightest, those I have gathered, and rejected the others." But unpretending as the work might seem, its importance was great. With it began the conception of a national law. The notion of separate systems of tribal customs for the separate peoples passed away; and the codes of Wessex, Mercia, and Kent, blended in the doom-book of a common England.

The new strength which had been won for Ælfred's kingdom in six years of peace was shown when the next pirate onset fell on the land. A host from Gaul pushed up the Thames and thence to Rochester, while the Danes of Guthrum's kingdom set aside the Peace of Wedmore and gave help to their brethren. The war however was short, and ended in victory so complete on Ælfred's side that in 886 a new peace was made which pushed the West-Saxon frontier forward into the realm of Guthrum, and tore from the Danish hold London and half of the old East-Saxon kingdom. From this moment the Danes were thrown on an attitude of defence, and the change made itself at once felt among the English. The foundation of a new national monarchy was laid. "All the Angelcyn turned to Ælfred," says the chronicle, "save those that were under bondage to Danish men." Hardly had this second breathing-space been won than the king turned again to his work of restoration. The spirit of adventure that made him to the last a mighty hunter, the reckless daring of his early manhood, took graver form in an activity that found time amidst the cares of state for the daily

SEC. V
 —
 WESSEX
 AND THE DANES 802
 TO 880
 —

COIN OF ÆLFRED.

Ælfred's Character

SEC. V
 WESSEX
 AND THE DANES 802
 TO 880 duties of religion, for converse with strangers, for study and translation, for learning poems by heart, for planning buildings and instructing craftsmen in gold-work, for teaching even falconers and dog-keepers their business. But his mind was far from being prisoned within his own island. He listened with keen attention to tales of far-off lands, to the Norwegian Other's account of his journey round the North Cape to explore the White Sea, and Wulfstan's cruise along the coast of Esthonia; envoys bore his presents to the churches of India and Jerusalem, and an annual mission carried Peter's-pence to Rome. Restless as he was, his

TOMBSTONE OF SUIBINE MAC MAELĒHUMAI, IRISH SCRIBE COMMEMORATED
 IN THE ENGLISH CHRONICLE, A.D. 891.

Petrie and Stokes, "Christian Inscriptions in Ireland."

activity was the activity of a mind strictly practical. Ælfred was pre-eminently a man of business, careful of detail, laborious, and methodical. He carried in his bosom a little hand-book, in which he jotted down things as they struck him, now a bit of family genealogy, now a prayer, now a story such as that of Bishop Ealdhelm singing sacred songs on the bridge. Each hour of the king's day had its peculiar task; there was the same order in the division of his revenue and in the arrangement of his court. But active and busy as he was, his temper remained simple and kindly. We have few stories of his life that are more than mere legends, but even legend itself never ventured to depart from the outlines of a character which men knew so well. During his months of waiting at Athelney, while the country was overrun by the Danes, he was said to have entered a peasant's hut, and to have been bidden by the housewife, who did not recognize him, to turn the cakes which were baking on the hearth. The young king did as he was bidden, but in the sad thoughts which came over him he forgot his task, and bore in amused silence the scolding of the good wife, who found her cakes spoilt on her return. This tale, if nothing more than a tale, could never have been told of a man without humour. Tradition told of his genial good-nature, of his chattiness over the adventures of his life, and above all of his love for song. In his busiest days Ælfred found time to learn the old songs of his race by heart, and bade them be taught in the palace-school. As he translated the tales of the heathen mythology he lingered fondly over and expanded them, and in moments of gloom he found comfort in the music of the Psalms.

Neither the wars nor the legislation of Ælfred were destined to leave such lasting traces upon England as the impulse he gave to its literature. His end indeed even in this was practical rather than literary. What he aimed at was simply the education of his people. Letters and civilization had almost vanished in Great Britain. In Wessex itself learning had disappeared. "When I began to reign," said Ælfred, "I cannot remember one priest south of Thames who could render his service-book into English." The ruin the Danes had wrought had been no mere material ruin. In Northumbria the Danish sword had left but few survivors of the school of Ecgberht or Bæda. To remedy this ignorance Ælfred desired that at least every free-born youth who possessed the means should "abide at his book till he can well understand English writing." Hé himself superintended a school which he had established for the young nobles of his court. At home he found none to help him in his educational efforts but a few prelates and priests who remained in the fragment of Mercia which had been saved from the invaders, and a Welsh bishop, Asser. "Formerly," the king writes bitterly, "men came hither from foreign lands to seek for instruction, and now when we desire it we can only obtain it from abroad." He sought it among the West-Franks and the East-Franks. A scholar named Grimbald came from St. Omer to preside over the abbey he

SEC. V
 WESSEX
 AND THE DANES 802
 TO 880
 —

Ælfred
 and Literature

SEC. V
 WESSEX
 AND THE DANES 802
 TO 880 founded at Winchester; and John the Old-Saxon was fetched, it may be from the Westphalian abbey of Corbey, to rule a monastery

S. MATTHEW.
 Ninth Century.

Gospel-book of Mac Durnan, Lambeth Palace Library.

that Ælfred's gratitude for his deliverance from the Danes raised in the marshes of Athelney.

The work, however, which most told on English culture was done not by these scholars, but by the king himself. Ælfred resolved to throw open to his people in their own tongue the knowledge which had till then been limited to the clergy. He took his books as he found them; they were the popular manuals of his age; the compilation of Orosius, then the one accessible book of universal history, the history of his own people by Bæda, the Consolation of Boethius, the Pastoral of Pope Gregory. He translated these works into English, but he was far more than a translator, he was an editor for the people. Here he omitted, there he expanded. He enriched Orosius by a sketch of the new geographical discoveries in the north. He gave a West-Saxon form to his selections from Bæda. In one place he stops to explain his theory of government, his wish for a thicker population, his conception of national welfare as consisting in a due balance of the priest, the soldier, and the churl. The mention of Nero spurs him to an outbreak on the abuses of power. The cold Providence of Boethius gives way to an enthusiastic acknowledgment of the goodness of God. As Ælfred writes, his large-hearted nature flings off its royal mantle, and he talks as a man to men. "Do not blame me," he prays with a charming simplicity, "if any know Latin better than I, for every man must say what he says and do what he does according to his ability." But simple as was his aim, Ælfred created English literature. Before him, England possessed noble poems in the work of Cædmon and his fellow-singers, and a train of ballads and battle-songs. Prose she had none. The mighty roll of the books that fill her libraries begins with the translations of Ælfred, and above all with the chronicle of his reign. It seems likely that the king's rendering of Bæda's history gave the first impulse towards the compilation of what is known as the English or Anglo-Saxon Chronicle, which was certainly thrown into its present form during his reign. The meagre lists of the kings of Wessex and of the bishops of Winchester, which had been preserved from older times, were roughly expanded into a national history by insertions from Bæda; but it is when it reaches the reign of Ælfred that the Chronicle suddenly widens into the vigorous narrative, full of life and originality, that marks the gift of a new power to the English tongue. Varying as it does from age to age in historic value, it remains the first vernacular history of any Teutonic people, the earliest and most venerable

SEC. V
 WESSEX
 AND THE DANES 802
 TO 880 Ælfred's
 Translations

SEC. VI
THE WEST-SAXON REALM
893
TO 1013

monument of Teutonic prose. The writer of English history may be pardoned if he lingers too fondly over the figure of the king in whose court, at whose impulse, it may be in whose very words, English history begins.

Section VI.—The West-Saxon Realm, 893—1013

[Authorities.—Mainly the English Chronicle, which varies much during this period. Through the reign of Eadward it is copious, and a Mercian chronicle is embedded in it; its entries then become scanty, and are broken with grand English songs till the reign of Æthelred, when its fulness returns. “Florence of Worcester” is probably a translation of a copy of the Chronicle now lost. The “Laws” form the basis of our constitutional knowledge of the time, and fall into two classes. Those of Eadward, Æthelstan, Eadmund, and Eadgar are, like the earlier laws of Æthelberht and Ine, “mainly of the nature of amendments of custom.” Those of Ælfred, Æthelred, Cnut, with those that bear the name of Eadward the Confessor, “aspire to the character of codes.” All are printed in Mr. Thorpe’s “Ancient Laws and Institutes of the Anglo-Saxons;” but the extracts given by Dr. Stubbs (“Select Charters,” pp. 59—74) contain all that directly bears on our constitution. Mr. Kemble’s “Codex Diplomaticus Ævi Saxonici” contains a vast mass of charters, &c., belonging to this period. The lives of Dunstan are collected by Dr. Stubbs in one of the Rolls volumes. For this period see also Mr. Green’s “Conquest of England.”]

Mercia
and the Danes

Ælfred’s work of peace was however to be once more interrupted by a new invasion which in 893 broke under the Danish leader Hasting upon England. After a year’s fruitless struggle to force the strong position in which Ælfred covered Wessex, the Danish forces left their fastnesses in the Andredsweald and crossed the Thames, while a rising of the Danelaw in their aid revealed the secret of this movement. Followed by the Londoners, the king’s son Eadward and the Mercian Ealdorman Æthelred stormed the Danish camp in Essex, followed the host as it rode along Thames to rouse new revolts in Wales, caught it on the Severn, and defeating it with a great slaughter, drove it back to its old quarters in Essex. Ælfred himself held Exeter against attack from a pirate fleet and their West-Welsh allies; and when Hasting once more repeated his dash upon the west and occupied Chester, Æthelred drove him from his hold and forced him to fall back to his camp on the Lea. Here Ælfred came to his lieutenant’s aid, and the capture of the Danish ships by the two forts with which the king barred the river virtually ended the war. The Danes streamed back from Wales, whither they had retreated, to their old quarters in Frankland, and the new English fleet drove the freebooters from the Channel.

The last years of Ælfred's life seem to have been busied in providing a new defence for his realm by the formation of alliances with states whom a common interest drew together against the pirates. But four years had hardly passed since the victory over Hasting when his death left the kingdom to his son Eadward. Eadward, though a vigorous and active ruler, clung to his father's policy of rest.

COIN OF EADWARD THE ELDER.

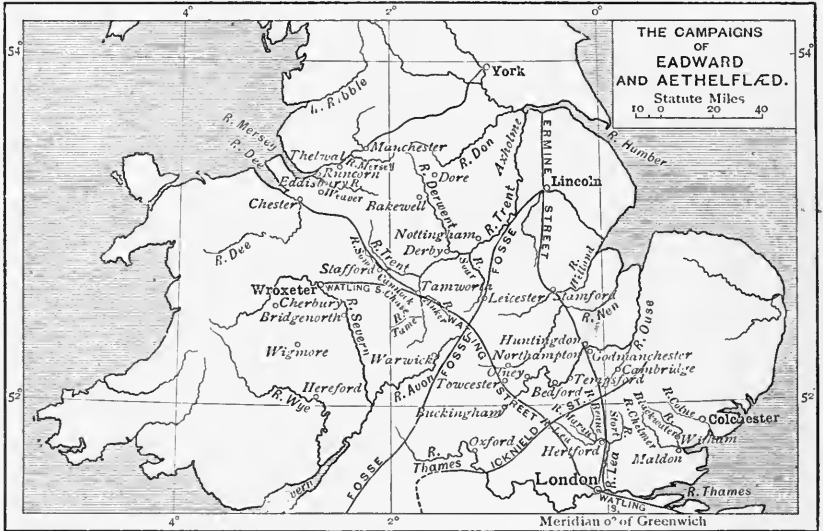

It was not till 910 that a rising of the Danes on his northern frontier, and an attack of a pirate fleet on the southern coast, forced him to re-open the war. With his sister Æthelflæd, who was in 912 left sole ruler of Mercia by the death of the Ealdorman Æthelred, he undertook the systematic reduction of the Danelaw. While he bridled East Anglia by the seizure of southern Essex, and the erection of the forts of Hertford and Witham, the fame of Mercia was safe in the hands of its "Lady." Æthelflæd girded her strength for the conquest of the "Five Boroughs," the rude Danish confederacy which had taken the place of the eastern half of the older Mercian kingdom. Derby represented the original Mercia on the upper Trent, Lincoln the Lindiswaras, Leicester the Middle-English, Stamford the province of the Gyrwas—the marshmen of the Fens—Nottingham probably that of the Southumbrians. Each of the "Five Boroughs" seems to have been ruled by its earl with his separate "host"; within each twelve "lawmen" administered Danish law, while a common justice-court existed for the whole confederacy. In her attack upon this powerful league, Æthelflæd abandoned the older strategy of battle and raid for that of siege and fortress-building. Advancing along the line of Trent, she fortified Tamworth and Stafford on its head-waters, then turning southward secured the valley of the Avon by a fort at Warwick.

SEC. VI
THE WEST-SAXON REALM
893
TO 1013
897 Ælfred's Death
901

Æthelflæd, the lady of Mercia
913-918

SEC. VI
THE WEST-SAXON REALM
893
TO 1013

With the lines of the great rivers alike secure, and the approaches to Wales on either side of Arden in her hands, she in 917 closed on Walker & Boutall sc.

Derby. The raids of the Danes of Middle-England failed to draw the Lady of Mercia from her prey ; and Derby was hardly her own when, turning southward, she forced the surrender of Leicester.

Wessex and the Dane-law

Æthelflæd died in the midst of her triumphs, and Eadward at once annexed Mercia to Wessex. The brilliancy of her exploits had already been matched by his own successes as he closed in on the district of the Five Boroughs from the south. South of the Middle-English and the Fens lay a tract watered by the Ouse and the Nen—originally the district of a tribe known as the South-English, and now, like the Five Boroughs of the North, grouped round the towns of Bedford, Huntingdon, and North-

Eadward the Elder 901-925

ARCHER.
Tenth Century.
MS. Cott. Galba A. viii.

ampton. The reduction of these was followed by that of East Anglia; the Danes of the Fens submitted with Stamford, the Southumbrians with Nottingham. Lincoln, the last of the Five

SEC. VI
THE WEST-SAXON REALM
893
TO 1013
922

FIGURE OF CHRIST WITH HEATHEN SYMBOLS.

From Barrow of Gorm and Thyra, Jutland.
Worsaae, "Industrial Arts of Denmark."

SILVER CUP.

Boroughs as yet unconquered, no doubt submitted at the same time. From Mid-Britain the king advanced cautiously to an attack on Northumbria. He had already seized Manchester, and was preparing to complete his conquests, when the whole of the North suddenly laid itself at his feet. Not merely Northumbria but the Scots and the Britons of Strathclyde "chose him to father and lord." The submission had probably been brought about, like that of the North-Welsh to Ælfred, by the pressure of mutual feuds, and it was as valueless as theirs. Within a year after Eadward's death the north was again on fire. Æthelstan,

924

COIN OF ÆTHELSTAN.

Æthelstan
925-940

SEC. VI
 THE WEST-
 SAXON REALM 893
 TO 1013

Ælfred's golden-haired grandson whom the king had girded as a child with a sword set in a golden scabbard and a gem-studded belt, incorporated Northumbria with his dominions ; then turning westward broke a league which had been formed between the

S. JOHN THE EVANGELIST.
 Gospel-book given by Otto I. to Æthelstan.
MS. Cott. Tib. A. ii.

North-Welsh and the Scots, forced them to pay annual tribute, to march in his armies, and to attend his councils. The West-Welsh of Cornwall were reduced to a like vassalage, and the Britons driven from Exeter, which they had shared till then with its English inhabitants. A league of the Scot King Constantine with the Irish Ostmen was punished by an army which wasted his kingdom, while a fleet ravaged its coasts. But the revolt only heralded the formidable confederacy in which Scotland, Cumberland, and the British and Danish chiefs of the west and east rose at the appearance of the fleet of Olaf in the Humber. The king's victory at Brunanburh, sung in noblest war-song, seemed the wreck of Danish hopes, but the work of conquest was still to be done. On Æthelstan's death, and the accession of his young brother Eadmund, the Danelaw rose again in revolt; the men of the Five Boroughs joined their kinsmen in Northumbria, and a peace which was negotiated by the two archbishops, Odo and Wulfstan, practically restored the old balance of Ælfred's day, and re-established Watling Street as the boundary between Wessex and the Danes. Eadmund however possessed the political and military ability of his house. The Danelaw was once more reduced to submission; he seized on an alliance with the Scots as a balance to the Danes, and secured the aid of their king by investing him with the fief of Cumberland. But his triumphs were suddenly cut short by his death. As the king feasted at Pucklechurch a robber, Leofa, whom he had banished, seated himself at the royal board, and drew his sword on the cupbearer who bade him retire. Eadmund, springing to his thegn's aid, seized the robber by his hair and flung him to the ground, but Leofa had stabbed the king ere rescue could arrive.

SEC. VI
THE WEST-
SAXON REALM 893
TO 1013
—

Brunan-burh
937

Eadmund
940-946

The completion of the West-Saxon realm was in fact reserved for the hands, not of a king or warrior, but of a priest. With the death of Eadmund, a new figure comes to the front in English affairs. Dunstan stands first in the line of ecclesiastical statesmen who counted among them Lanfranc and Wolsey, and ended in Laud. He is still more remarkable in himself, in his own vivid personality after nine centuries of revolution and change. He was born in the little hamlet of Glastonbury, beside Ine's church; his father, Heorstan, was a man of wealth, and kinsman of three bishops of the time and of many thegns of the court. It must have been in his father's hall that the fair diminutive boy, with his scant but beautiful hair, caught his love for "the vain songs of ancient

Dunstan

SEC. VI
 THE WEST-
 SAXON REALM 893
 TO 1013

c. 940

heathendom, the trifling legends, the funeral chants," which afterwards roused against him the charge of sorcery. Thence, too, he may have derived his passionate love of music, and his custom of carrying his harp in hand on journey or visit. The wandering scholars of Ireland left their books in the monastery of Glastonbury, as they left them along the Rhine and the Danube; and Dunstan plunged into the study of sacred and profane letters till his brain broke down in delirium. His knowledge became famous in the neighbourhood and reached the court of Æthelstan, but his appearance there was the signal for a burst of ill-will among the courtiers, though many of them were kinsmen of his own, and he was forced to withdraw. Even when Eadmund recalled him to the court, his rivals drove him from the king's train, threw him from his horse as he passed through the marshes, and with the wild passion of their age, trampled him underfoot in the mire. The outrage ended in fever, and in the bitterness of his disappointment and shame Dunstan rose from his sick-bed a monk. But in England at this time the monastic profession seems to have been little more than a vow of celibacy, and his devotion took no ascetic turn. His nature was sunny, versatile, artistic, full of strong affections, and capable of inspiring others with affections as strong. Quick-witted, of tenacious memory, a ready and fluent speaker, gay and genial in address, an artist, a musician, he was at the same time an indefatigable worker, busy at books, at building, at handicraft. Throughout his life he won the love of women; he now became the spiritual guide of a woman of high rank, who lived only for charity and the entertainment of pilgrims. "He ever clave to her, and loved her in wondrous fashion." His sphere of activity widened as the wealth of his devotee was placed unreservedly at his command; we see him followed by a train of pupils, busy with literature, writing, harping, painting, designing. One morning a lady summons him to her house to design a robe which she is embroidering. As he bends with her maidens over their toil, his harp hung upon the wall sounds without mortal touch tones which the startled ears around frame into a joyous antiphon. The tie which bound him to this scholar-life was broken by the death of his patroness; and towards the close of Eadmund's reign Dunstan was again called to the court. But the old jealousies revived, and counting the game lost

Pictura et scriptura huius pagine sub uifa: est de propria manu scti dunstani.

S. DUNSTAN AT THE FEET OF CHRIST.
From a drawing by Dunstan's own hand, in the Bodleian Library.

SEC. VI
 THE WEST-SAXON REALM
 893
 TO 1013

he prepared again to withdraw. The king had spent the day in the chase; the red deer which he was pursuing dashed over Cheddar cliffs, and his horse only checked itself on the brink of the ravine, while Eadmund in the bitterness of death was repenting of his injustice to Dunstan. He was at once summoned on the king's return. "Saddle your horse," said Eadmund, "and ride with me!" The royal train swept over the marshes to Dunstan's home; and greeting him with the kiss of peace, the king seated him in the priestly chair as Abbot of Glastonbury.

Dunstan's administration

Eadred
 946-955

From that moment Dunstan may have exercised influence on public affairs; but it was not till the accession of Eadred, Eadmund's brother, that his influence became supreme as leading counsellor of the crown. We may trace his hand in the solemn proclamation of the king's crowning. Eadred's election was the first national election where Briton, Dane, and Englishman were alike represented; his coronation was the first national coronation, the first union of the primate of the north and the primate of the south in setting the crown on the head of one who was to rule from the Forth to the Channel. A revolt of the north two years later was subdued; at the outbreak of a fresh rising the Archbishop of York, Wulfstan, was thrown into prison; and with the submission of the Danelaw in 954 the long work of Ælfred's house was done. Dogged as his fight had been, the Dane at last owned himself beaten. From the moment of Eadred's final triumph all resistance came to an end. The north was finally brought into the general organization of the English realm, and the Northumbrian under-kingdom sank into an earldom under Oswulf. The new might of the royal power was expressed in the lofty titles assumed by Eadred; he was not only "King of the Anglo-Saxons," but "Cæsar of the whole of Britain."

Dunstan
 the Primate

Eadwig
 956-959

The death of Eadred however was a signal for the outbreak of political strife. The boy-king Eadwig was swayed by a woman of high lineage, Æthelgifu; and the quarrel between her and the older counsellors of Eadred broke into open strife at the coronation feast. On the young king's insolent withdrawal to her chamber Dunstan, at the bidding of the Witan, drew him roughly back to the hall. But before the year was over the wrath of the boy-king drove the abbot over sea, and his whole system went with him. The triumph of Æthelgifu was crowned in 957 by the marriage of her daughter to the king. The marriage was uncanonical, and at the opening of 958 Archbishop Odo parted the king from his wife by solemn sentence; while the Mercians and Northumbrians rose in revolt, proclaimed Eadwig's brother Eadgar their king, and recalled Dunstan, who received successively the sees of Worcester and of London. The death of Eadwig restored the unity of the realm. Wessex submitted to the king who had been already accepted by

SEC. VI
THE WEST-
SAXON REALM 893
TO 1013
—

COIN OF EADGAR.

the north, and Dunstan, now raised to the see of Canterbury, wielded for sixteen years as the minister of Eadgar the secular and ecclesiastical powers of the realm. Never had England seemed so strong or so peaceful.

Eadgar
959-975

Without, a fleet cruising round the coast swept the sea of pirates; the Danes of Ireland had changed from foes to friends; eight vassal kings rowed Eadgar (so ran the legend) in his boat on the Dec. The settlement of the north indicated the large and statesmanlike course which Dunstan was to pursue in the general administration of the realm. He seems to have adopted from the beginning a national rather than a West-Saxon policy. The later charge against his rule, that he gave too much power to the Dane and too much love to strangers, is the best proof of the unprovincial temper of his administration. He employed Danes in the royal service and promoted them to high posts in Church and State. In the code which he promulgated he expressly reserved to the north its old Danish rights, "with as good laws as they best might choose." His stern hand restored justice and order, while his care for commerce was shown in the laws which regulated the coinage and the enactments of common weights and measures for the realm. Thanet was ravaged when the wreckers of its coast plundered a trading ship from York. Commerce sprang into a wider life. "Men of the Empire," traders of Lower Lorraine and the Rhineland, "men of Rouen," were seen in the streets of London, and it was by the foreign trade which sprang up in Dunstan's time that London rose to the commercial greatness it has held ever since.

SEC. VI
 THE WEST-
 SAXON REALM 893
 TO 1013
 —

But the aims of the primate-minister reached beyond this outer revival of prosperity and good government. The Danish wars had dealt rudely with Ælfred's hopes; his educational movement had ceased with his death, the clergy had sunk back into worldliness and ignorance, not a single book or translation had been added to those which the king had left. Dunstan resumed the task, if not in the larger spirit of Ælfred, at least in the spirit of a great administrator. The reform of monasticism which had begun in the abbey of Cluny was stirring the zeal of English churchmen, and Eadgar showed himself zealous in the cause of introducing it into England.

NOAH'S ARK.
MS. Bodl. Junius II, C. A.D. 1000.

With his support Æthelwold, Bishop of Winchester, carried the new Benedictinism into his diocese, and a few years later Oswald, Bishop of Worcester, brought monks into his own cathedral city. Tradition ascribed to Eadgar the formation of forty monasteries, and it was to his time that English monasticism looked back in later days as the beginning of its continuous life. But after all his efforts, monasteries were in fact only firmly planted in Wessex and East Anglia, and the system took no hold in Northumbria or in the bulk of Mercia. Dunstan himself took little part in it, though his influence was strongly felt in the literary revival which accompanied the revival of religious activity. He himself while abbot was famous as a teacher. His great assistant Æthelwold raised Abingdon into a school second only to Glastonbury. His other great helper, Oswald, laid the first foundations of the historic EADGAR OFFERING UP HIS CHARTER FOR THE NEW MINSTER, WINCHESTER, A.D. 966.

MS. Cott. Vesp. A. viii.

SEC. VI
 THE WEST-SAXON REALM 893
 TO 1013 Decline of Slavery

school of Worcester. Abbo, the most notable scholar in Gaul, came from Fleury at the primate's invitation.

After times looked back fondly to "Eadgar's Law," as it was called, in other words to the English Constitution as it shaped itself in the hands of Eadgar's minister. A number of influences had greatly modified the older order which had followed on the English conquest. Slavery was gradually disappearing before the efforts of the Church. Theodore had denied Christian burial to the kidnapper, and prohibited the sale of children by their parents, after the age of seven. Ecgberht of York punished any sale of child or kinsfolk with excommunication. The murder of a slave by lord or mistress, though no crime in the eye of the State, became a sin for which penance was due to the Church. The slave was exempted from toil on Sundays and holydays; here and there he became attached to the soil and could only be sold with it; sometimes he acquired a plot of ground, and was suffered to purchase his own release. Æthelstan gave the slave-class a new rank in the realm by extending to it the same principles of mutual responsibility for crime which were the basis of order among the free. The Church was far from contenting herself with this gradual elevation; Wilfrid led the way in the work of emancipation by freeing two hundred and fifty serfs whom he found attached to his estate at Selsey. Manumission became frequent in wills, as the clergy taught that such a gift was a boon to the soul of the dead. At the Synod of Chelsea the bishops bound themselves to free at their decease all serfs on their estates who had been reduced to serfdom by want or crime. Usually the slave was set free before the altar or in the church-porch, and the Gospel-book bore written on its margins the record of his emancipation. Sometimes his lord placed him at the spot where four roads met, and bade him go whither he would. In the more solemn form of the law his master took him by the hand in full shire-meeting, showed him open road and door, and gave him the lance and sword of the freeman. The slave-trade from English ports was prohibited by law, but the prohibition long remained ineffective. A hundred years later than Dunstan the wealth of English nobles was said sometimes to spring from breeding slaves for the market. It was not till the reign of the first Norman king that the preaching of Wulfstan and the influence of Lanfranc suppressed the trade in its last stronghold, the port of Bristol.

But the decrease of slavery went on side by side with an increasing degradation of the bulk of the people. Political and social changes had long been modifying the whole structure of society; and the very foundations of the old order were broken up in the degradation of the freeman, and the upgrowth of the lord with his dependent villeins. The political changes which were annihilating the older English liberty were in great measure due to a change in

SEC. VI
 THE WEST-
 SAXON REALM 893
 TO 1013
 The later
 English
 Kingdom

KING AND COURT.

MS. Bodl. Junius II, c. A.D. 1000.

the character of English kingship. As the lesser English kingdoms had drawn together, the wider dominion of the king had removed him further and further from his people, and clothed him with a mysterious dignity. Every reign raised him higher in the social scale. The bishop, once ranked his equal in value of life, sank to the level of the caldorman. The caldorman himself, once the hereditary ruler of a smaller state, became a mere delegate of the king, with an authority curtailed in every shire by that of the royal reeves—officers despatched to levy the royal revenues and administer the royal justice. Religion deepened the sense of awe. The king, if he was no longer sacred as the son of Woden, was yet more

SEC. VI
 THE WEST-
 SAXON REALM 893
 TO 1013
 —

sacred as "the Lord's Anointed"; and treason against him became the worst of crimes. The older nobility of blood died out before the new nobility of the court. From the oldest times of Germanic history each chief or king had his war-band, his comrades, warriors bound personally to him by their free choice, sworn to fight for him to the death, and avenge his cause as their own. When Cynewulf of Wessex was foully slain at Merton his comrades "ran at once to the spot, each as he was ready and as fast as he could," and despising all offers of life, fell fighting over the corpse of their lord. The fidelity of the war-band was rewarded with grants from the royal domain; the king became their lord or hlaford, "the dispenser of gifts;" the comrade became his "servant" or thegn. Personal service at his court was held not to degrade but to ennoble. "Cup-thegn," and "horse-thegn," and "horderc," or treasurer, became great officers of state. The thegn advanced with the advance of the king. He absorbed every post of honour; he became ealdorman, reeve, bishop, judge; while his wealth increased as the common folkland passed into the hands of the king, and was carved out by him into estates for his dependents.

Decline
 of the English
 Freeman

The principle of personal allegiance embodied in the new nobility tended to widen into a theory of general dependence. From Ælfred's day it was assumed that no man could exist without a lord. The ravages and the long insecurity of the Danish wars aided to drive the free farmer to seek protection from the thegn. His freehold was surrendered to be received back as a fief, laden with service to its lord. Gradually the "lordless man" became a sort of outlaw in the realm. The free churl sank into the villein, and changed from the freeholder who knew no superior but God and the law, to the tenant bound to do service to his lord, to follow him to the field, to look to his court for justice, and render days of service in his demesne. While he lost his older freedom he gradually lost, too, his share in the government of the state. The life of the earlier English state was gathered up in its folk-moot. There, through its representatives chosen in every hundred-moot, the folk had exercised its own sovereignty in matters of justice as of peace and war; while beside the folk-moot, and acting with it, had stood the Witenagemot, the group of "wise men" gathered to give rede to the king and through him to propose a course of action to the folk. The preliminary discussion rested with the nobler sort, the final decision with all. The clash of arms, the "Yea" or "Nay" of the crowd, were its vote. But when by the union of the lesser realms the folk sank into a portion of a wider state, the folk-moot sank with it; political supremacy passed to the court of the far-off lord, and the influence of the people on government came to an end. Nobles indeed could still gather round the king; and while the folk-moot passes out of political notice, the Witenagemot is heard of more and more as a royal council. It shared in the higher justice, the imposition of taxes, the making of laws, the conclusion of treaties, the control of war, the disposal of public lands, the appointment of great officers of state. There were times when it even claimed to elect or depose the king. But with these powers the bulk of the nobles had really less and less to do. The larger the kingdom the greater grew the distance from their homes; and their share in the general deliberations of the realm dwindled to nothing. Practically the national council shrank into a gathering of the great officers of Church and State with the royal thegns, and the old English democracy passed into an oligarchy of the closest kind. The only relic of the popular character of English government lay at last in the ring of citizens who at London or Winchester gathered round the wise men and shouted their "Ay" or "Nay" at the election of a king.

It is in the degradation of the class in which its true strength lay that we must look for the cause of the ruin which already hung over the West-Saxon realm. Eadgar was but thirty-two when he died in 975; and the children he left were mere boys. His death opened the way for bitter political strife among the nobles of his court, whose quarrel took the form of a dispute over the succession. Civil war was, in fact, only averted by the energy of the primate; seizing his cross, he settled the question of Eadgar's successor by the coronation of his son Eadward, and confronted his enemies successfully in two assemblies of the Wise Men. In that of Calne the floor of the room gave way, and according to monkish tradition Dunstan and his friends alone remained unhurt. But not even the fame of a miracle sufficed to turn the tide. The assassination of Eadward was followed by the triumph of Dunstan's opponents, who broke out in "great joy" at the coronation of Eadward's brother

SEC. VI
 THE WEST-
 SAXON REALM 893
 TO 1013
 —

Fall of the West-
 Saxon Kingdom

*Eadward
 the Martyr*
 975-978

SEC. VI
 THE WEST-
 SAXON REALM 893
 TO 1013
 —
 Æthelred
 the Unready
 979-1016

Æthelred, a child of ten years old. The government of the realm passed into the hands of the great nobles who upheld Æthelred, and Dunstan withdrew powerless to Canterbury, where he died nine years later.

During the eleven years from 979 to 990, when the young king reached manhood, there is scarcely any internal history to record. New danger however threatened from abroad. The North was girding itself for a fresh onset on England. The Scandinavian peoples had drawn together into their kingdoms of Denmark, Sweden, and Norway; and it was no longer in isolated bands but in national hosts that they were about to seek conquests in the South. The seas were again thronged with northern freebooters, and pirate fleets, as of old, appeared on the English coast. In 991 came the first burst of the storm, when a body of Norwegian Vikings landed, and

SILVER PENDANT.
 Figure of woman carrying drinking horn.
 Montelius, "Civilization of Sweden."

THE RAMSUNDSBERG, WEST SÖDERMANLAND, CARVED WITH SCENES FROM SIGURD FAFNIR'S SAGA.
 Montelius, "Civilization of Sweden."

utterly defeated the host of East Anglia on the field of Maldon. In the next year Æthelred was forced to buy a truce from the invaders and to suffer them to settle in the land; while he strengthened himself by a treaty of alliance with Normandy, which was now growing into a great power over sea. A fresh

SEC. VI
 THE WEST-
 SAXON REALM 893
 TO 1013

OAK SHIP FROM TUNE, SOUTH NORWAY.
Montelius, "Civilization of Sweden."

attempt to expel the invaders only proved the signal for the gathering of pirate-hosts such as England had never seen before, under Swein and Olaf, claimants to the Danish and Norwegian

SHIP FROM GOKSTAD.
Montelius, "Civilization of Sweden."

thrones. Their withdrawal in 995 was followed by fresh attacks in 997; danger threatened from Normans and from Ost-men, with wiks from Man, and northmen from Cumberland; while the

SEC. VI
THE WEST-
SAXON REALM 893
TO 1013

utter weakness of the realm was shown by Æthelred's taking into his service Danish mercenaries, who seem to have been quartered through Wessex as a defence against their brethren. Threatened with a new attack by Swein, who was now king, not only of Denmark, but by the defeat and death of Olaf, of Norway itself, Æthelred bound Normandy to his side by a marriage with its

NOAH'S ARK, REPRESENTED AS A DANISH SHIP.
MS. Bodl. Junius II, c. A.D. 1000.

Massacre of Danes 1002 duke's sister Emma. But a sudden panic betrayed him into an act of basest treachery which ruined his plans of defence at home. Urged by secret orders from the king, the West-Saxons rose on St. Brice's day and pitilessly massacred the Danes scattered among them. Gunhild, the sister of their king Swein, a Christian convert, and one of the hostages for the peace, saw husband and child butchered before her eyes ere she fell threatening vengeance on her murderers. Swein swore at the news to wrest England from Æthelred. For four years he marched through the length and breadth of southern and eastern England, "lighting his war-beacons as he went" in blazing homestead and town. Then for a heavy bribe he withdrew, to prepare for a later and more terrible onset. But there was no rest for the realm. The fiercest of the Norwegian jarls took his place, and from Wessex the war extended over East Anglia and Mercia. Canterbury was taken and sacked, Ælfheah the Archbishop dragged to Greenwich, and there in default of ransom brutally slain. The Danes set him in the midst of their husting, pelting him with stones and ox-horns, till one more pitiful than the rest clave his skull with an axe.

1003-1007

SEC. VI
 THE WEST-SAXON REALM 893
 TO 1013
 —

But a yet more terrible attack was preparing under Swein in the North, and in 1013 his fleet entered the Humber, and called on the Danelaw to rise in his aid. Northumbria, East Anglia, the Five Boroughs, all England north of Watling Street, submitted to him at Gainsborough. Æthelred shrank into a King of Wessex, and of a Wessex helpless before the foe. Resistance was impossible. The war was terrible but short. Everywhere the country was pitilessly harried, churches plundered, men slaughtered. But with the one exception of London, there was no attempt at defence. Oxford and Winchester flung open their gates. The thegns of Wessex submitted to the northmen at Bath. Even London was forced at last to give way, and Æthelred fled over sea to a refuge in Normandy. With the flight of the king ended the long struggle of Wessex for supremacy over Britain. The task which had baffled the energies of Eadwine and Offa, and had proved too hard for the valour of Eadward and the statesmanship of Dunstan, the task of uniting England finally into a single nation, was now to pass to other hands.

CHAPTER II

ENGLAND UNDER FOREIGN KINGS

1013—1204

Section I.—The Danish Kings

[Authorities.—We are still aided by the collections of royal laws and charters. The English Chronicle is here of great importance; its various copies differ much in tone, &c., from one another, and may to some extent be regarded as distinct works. Florence of Worcester is probably the translator of a valuable copy of the Chronicle which has disappeared. For the reign of Cnut see Green's "Conquest of England." The authority of the contemporary biographer of Eadward (in Luard's "Lives of Eadward the Confessor," published by the Master of the Rolls) is "primary," says Mr. Freeman, "for all matters strictly personal to the King and the whole family of Godwine. He is, however, very distinctly not an historian, but a biographer, sometimes a laureate." All modern accounts of this reign have been superseded by the elaborate history of Mr. Freeman ("Norman Conquest," vol. ii.). For the Danish kings and the House of Godwine, see the "Conquest of England," by Mr. Green.]

The Foreign Rule

BRITAIN had become England in the five hundred years that followed the landing of Hengest, and its conquest had ended in the settlement of its conquerors, in their conversion to Christianity, in the birth of a national literature, of an imperfect civilization, of a rough political order. But through the whole of this earlier age every attempt to fuse the various tribes of conquerors into a single nation had failed. The effort of Northumbria to extend her rule over all England had been foiled by the resistance of Mercia; that of Mercia by the resistance of Wessex. Wessex herself, even under the guidance of great kings and statesmen, had no sooner reduced the country to a seeming unity than local independence rose again at the call of the Danes. The tide of supremacy rolled in fact backwards and forwards; now the South won lordship over the North, now the North won lordship over the South. But whatever titles kings might assume, or however imposing their rule might appear, Northumbrian remained apart from West-Saxon, Dane from Englishman. A common national sympathy held the country roughly together, but a real national union had yet to come.

Through the two hundred years that lie between the flight of Æthelred from England to Normandy and that of John from Normandy to England our story is a story of foreign rule. Kings from Denmark were succeeded by kings from Normandy, and these by kings from Anjou. Under Dane, Norman, or Angevin, Englishmen were a subject race, conquered and ruled by foreign masters; and yet it was in these years of subjection that England first became really England. Provincial differences were crushed into national unity by the pressure of the stranger. The same pressure redressed the wrong which had been done to the fabric of national society by the degradation of the free landowner at the close of the preceding age into a feudal dependent on his lord. The English lords themselves sank into a middle class as they were pushed from their place by the foreign baronage who settled on English soil; and this change was accompanied by a gradual elevation of the class of servile and semi-servile cultivators which gradually lifted them into almost complete freedom. The middle-class which was thus created was reinforced by the upgrowth of a corresponding class in our towns. Commerce and trade were promoted by the justice and policy of the foreign kings; and with their advance rose the political importance of the trader. The boroughs of

SEC. I
THE DANISH KINGS 1013
TO 1042

FIGURE OF CHRIST.
Eleventh Century.
MS. Cott. Claud. B. iv.

SEC. 1
 THE DANISH
 KINGS 1013
 TO 1042

England, which at the opening of this period were for the most part mere villages, were rich enough at its close to buy liberty from the Crown. Rights of self-government, of free speech, of common deliberation, which had passed from the people at large into the hands of its nobles, revived in the charters and councils of the towns. A moral revival followed hard on this political development. The occupation of every see and abbacy by strangers who could only speak to their flocks in an unknown tongue had severed the higher clergy from the lower priesthood and the people; but religion became a living thing as it passed to the people themselves, and hermit and friar carried spiritual life home to the heart of the nation at large. At the same time the close connexion with the Continent which foreign conquest brought about secured for England a new communion with the artistic and intellectual life of the world without her. The old mental stagnation was broken up, and art and literature covered England with great buildings and busy schools. Time for this varied progress was gained by the long peace which England owed to the firm government of her

BOOK-SHRINE OR CUMDACH OF MOLAISE, A.D. 1001—1025.
 Stokes, "Early Christian Art in Ireland."

SEC. I
 THE DANISH
 KINGS 1013
 TO 1042

WOODEN CHURCH, GREENSTEAD, ESSEX, A.D. 1013 (AS IT WAS IN 1748).

"Vetusta Monumenta."

kings, while their political ability gave her administrative order, and their judicial reforms built up the fabric of her law. In a word, it is to the stern discipline of these two hundred years that we owe not merely English wealth and English freedom, but England itself.

The first of our foreign masters was the Dane. The countries of Scandinavia which had so long been the mere starting-points of the pirate-bands who had ravaged England and Ireland had now-

Our Danish
 Kings

SEC. I
 THE DANISH
 KINGS 1013
 TO 1042 settled down into comparative order. It was the aim of Swein to unite them in a great Scandinavian Empire, of which England should be the head; and this project, interrupted for a time by his death, was resumed with yet greater vigour by his son Cnut, Fear of the Dane was still great in the land, and Cnut had no sooner appeared off the English coast than Wessex, Mercia, and

COIN OF CNUT.

Northumberland joined in owning him for their lord, and in discarding again the rule of Æthelred, who had returned on the death of Swein. When Æthelred's death in 1016 raised his son Eadmund Ironside to the throne, the loyalty of London enabled him to struggle bravely for a few months against the Danes; but a decisive victory at Assandun and the death of his rival left Cnut master of the realm. Conqueror as he was, the Dane was no foreigner in the sense that the Norman was a foreigner after him. His language differed little from the English tongue. He brought in no new system of tenure or government. Cnut ruled, in fact, not as a foreign conqueror but as a native king. The goodwill and tranquillity of England were necessary for the success of his larger schemes in the north, where the arms of his English subjects aided him in later years in uniting Denmark and Norway beneath his sway. Dismissing therefore his Danish "host," and retaining only a trained body of household troops or hus-carls to serve in sudden emergencies, Cnut boldly relied for support within his realm on the justice and good government he secured it. His aim during twenty years seems to have been to obliterate from men's minds the foreign character of his rule, and the bloodshed in which it had begun. The change in himself was as startling as the change in his policy. When he first appears in England, it is as the mere northman, passionate, revengeful, uniting the guile of the savage with his thirst for blood. His first acts of government were a series of murders. Eadric of Mercia, whose aid had given him the crown, was felled by an axe-blow at the King's signal; a murder removed Eadwig, the brother of Eadmund Ironside, while the children of Eadmund were hunted even into Hungary by his ruthless hate. But from a savage such as this Cnut rose suddenly into a wise and temperate king. Stranger as he was, he fell back on "Eadgar's law," on the old constitution of the realm, and owned no difference between conqueror and conquered, between Dane and Englishman. By the creation of four earldoms, those of Mercia, Northumberland, Wessex, and East Anglia, he recognized provincial independence, but he drew closer than of old the ties which bound the rulers of these great dependencies to the Crown. He even identified himself with the patriotism which had withstood the stranger. The Church had been the centre of national resistance to the Dane, but Cnut sought above all its friendship. He paid homage to the cause for which Ælfheah had died, by his translation of the Archbishop's body to Canterbury. He atoned for his father's ravages by costly gifts to the religious houses. He protected English pilgrims against the robber-lords of the Alps. His love for monks broke out in the song which he composed as he listened to their chant at Ely: "Merrily sang the monks in Ely when Cnut King rowed by" across the vast fen-waters that surrounded their abbey. "Row, boatmen, near the land, and hear we these monks sing."

Cnut

1016-1035

7ealle þa bocland þe ic on ænt hæbbe;

CNUT AND EMMA MAKING A DONATION TO NEW MINSTER.
MS. Stowe 944.

SEC. I

THE DANISH
KINGS 1013
TO 1042

Cnut's letter from Rome to his English subjects marks the grandeur of his character and the noble conception he had formed of kingship. "I have vowed to God to lead a right life in all things," wrote the King, "to rule justly and piously my realms and subjects, and to administer just judgement to all. If heretofore I have done aught beyond what was just, through headiness or negligence of youth, I am ready with God's help to amend it utterly." No royal officer, either for fear of the King or for favour of any, is to consent to injustice, none is to do wrong to rich or poor "as they would value my friendship and their own well-being." He especially denounces unfair exactions: "I have no need that money be heaped together for me by unjust demands." "I have sent this letter before me," Cnut ends, "that all the people of my realm may rejoice in my well-doing; for as you yourselves know, never have I spared nor will I spare to spend myself and my toil in what is needful and good for my people."

England
at peace

Cnut's greatest gift to his people was that of peace. With him began the long internal tranquillity which was from this time to be

CARTS.

Eleventh Century.

MS. Cott. Claud. B. iv.

the special note of our national history. During two hundred years, with the one terrible interval of the Norman Conquest, and the disturbance under Stephen, England alone among the kingdoms of Europe enjoyed unbroken repose. The wars of her Kings lay far from her shores, in France or Normandy, or, as with Cnut, in the more distant lands of the North. The stern justice of their government secured order within. The absence of internal discontent under Cnut, perhaps too the exhaustion of the kingdom after the terrible Danish inroads, is proved by its quiet during his periods of absence. Everything witnesses to the growing wealth and prosperity

SEC. I
THE DANISH
KINGS 1013
TO 1042

AGRICULTURE.
Eleventh Century.
MS. Cott. Claud. B. iv.

of the country. A great part of English soil was indeed still utterly uncultivated. Wide reaches of land were covered with wood, thicket, and scrub; or consisted of heaths and moor. In both the

AGRICULTURE.
Eleventh Century.
MS. Harl. 603.

east and the west there were vast tracts of marsh land; fens nearly one hundred miles long severed East Anglia from the midland

SEC. I
 —
 THE DANISH
 KINGS 1013
 TO 1042
 —

counties; sites like that of Glastonbury or Athelney were almost inaccessible. The beaver still haunted marshy hollows such as those which lay about Beverley, the London craftsmen chased the wild boar and the wild ox in the woods of Hampstead, while wolves prowled round the homesteads of the North. But peace and the industry it encouraged were telling on this waste; stag and wolf were retreat-

PLOUGHING.
 Eleventh Century.
MS. Harl. 603.

ing before the face of man, the farmer's axe was ringing in the forest, and villages were springing up in the clearings. The growth of commerce was seen in the rich trading-ports of the eastern coast. The main trade lay probably in skins and ropes and ship masts; and above all in the iron and steel that the Scandinavian lands so long supplied to Britain. But Dane and Norwegian were traders over a yet wider field than the northern seas; their barks entered the Mediterranean, while the overland route through Russia brought the wares of Constantinople and the East. "What do you bring to us?" the merchant is asked in an old English dialogue. "I bring skins, silks, costly gems, and gold," he answers, "besides various garments, pigment, wine, oil, and ivory, with brass, and copper, and tin, silver and gold, and such like." Men from the Rhineland and from Normandy, too, moored their vessels along the Thames, on whose rude wharves were piled a strange medley of goods: pepper and spices from the far East, crates of gloves and gray cloths, it may be from the Lombard looms, sacks of wool, iron-work from Liége, butts of French wine and vinegar, and with them the rural products of the country itself—cheese, butter, lard and eggs, with live swine and fowls.

MAKING WATTLED ENCLOSURE.
 Eleventh Century.
MS. Harl. 603.

Cnut's one aim was to win the love of his people, and all tradition shows how wonderful was his success. But the greatness of his rule

SEC. I
THE DANISH
KINGS 1013
TO 1042
—

Fall
of the Danish
Rule

SAILING VESSELS.

BOATS.
Eleventh Century.
MS. Harl. 603.

hung solely on the greatness of his temper, and at his death the empire he had built up at once fell to pieces. Denmark and England, parted for a few years by the accession of his son Harald to the throne of the last, were re-united under a second son, Harthacnut; but the love which Cnut's justice had won turned to hatred before the lawlessness of his successors. The long peace sickened men of this fresh outburst of bloodshed and violence. "Never was a bloodier deed done in the land since the Danes came," ran the popular song, when Harald's men seized Ælfred, a

Harald
1035-1039

Harthacnut
1040-1042

SEC. II
 THE ENGLISH RESTORA-TION 1042
 TO 1066 brother of Eadmund Ironside, who had returned to England from Normandy. Every tenth man was killed, the rest sold for slaves, and Ælfred himself blinded and left to die at Ely. Harthacnut, more savage even than his predecessor, dug up his brother's body and flung it into a marsh ; while a rising at Worcester against his hus-carls was punished by the burning of the town and the pillage of the shire. His death was no less brutal than his life ; "he died as he stood at his drink in the house of Osgod Clapa at Lambeth." England wearied of kings like these : but their crimes helped her to free herself from the impossible dream of Cnut. The North, still more barbarous than herself, could give her no new element of progress or civilization. It was the consciousness of this and the hatred of such rulers as Harald and Harthacnut which co-operated with the old feeling of reverence for the past in calling back the line of Ælfred to the throne.

Section II.—The English Restoration, 1042—1066

Godwine

It is in such transitional moments of a nation's history that it needs the cool prudence, the sensitive selfishness, the quick perception of what is possible, which distinguished the adroit politician whom the death of Cnut left supreme in England. Godwine is memorable in our history as the first English statesman who was neither king nor priest. Of obscure origin, his ability had raised him high in the royal favour ; he was allied to Cnut by marriage, entrusted by him with the earldom of Wessex, and at last made viceroy or justiciar in the government of the realm. In the wars of Scandinavia he had shown courage and skill at the head of a body of English troops who supported Cnut, but his true field of action lay at home. Shrewd, eloquent, an active administrator, Godwine united vigilance, industry, and caution with a singular dexterity in the management of men. During the troubled years that followed the death of Cnut he had done his best to continue his master's policy in securing the internal union of England under a Danish sovereign and in preserving her connexion with the North. But at the death of Harthacnut Cnut's policy had become impossible, and abandoning the Danish cause Godwine drifted with the tide of popular feeling which called Eadward, the son of Æthelred, to the throne.

SEC. II
THE ENGLISH RESTORA-TION
1042
TO 1066 Eadward

the Confessor
1042-1066

Eadward had lived from his youth in exile at the court of Normandy. A halo of tenderness spread in after-time round this last King of the old English stock; legends told of his pious simplicity, his blitheness and gentleness of mood, the holiness that gained him his name of "Confessor" and enshrined him as a saint

KING AND MINISTER DOING JUSTICE AT A GATE.

Eleventh Century.

MS. Cott. Claud. B. iv.

in his abbey-church at Westminster. Gleemen sang in manlier tones of the long peace and glories of his reign, how warriors and wise counsellors stood round his throne, and Welsh and Scot and Briton obeyed him. His was the one figure that stood out bright against the darkness when England lay trodden under foot by Norman conquerors; and so dear became his memory that liberty and independence itself seemed incarnate in his name. Instead of freedom, the subjects of William or Henry called for the "good laws of Eadward the Confessor." But it was as a mere shadow of the past that the exile really returned to the throne of Ælfred;

SEC. II
 —
 THE ENGLISH RESTORA-TION
 —
 1042
 TO 1066
 —

there was something shadow-like in the thin form, the delicate complexion, the transparent womanly hands that contrasted with the blue eyes and golden hair of his race; and it is almost as a shadow that he glides over the political stage. The work of government was done by sterner hands. The King's weakness left Godwine master of the realm, and he ruled firmly and wisely. Abandoning with reluctance all interference in Scandinavian politics, he guarded England with a fleet which cruised along the coast. Within, though the earldoms still remained jealously independent, there were signs that a real political unity was being slowly brought about. It was rather within than without that Godwine's work had to be done, and that it was well done was proved by the peace of the land.

Fall of Godwine

Throughout Eadward's earlier reign England lay in the hands of its three earls, Siward of Northumbria, Leofric of Mercia, and Godwine of Wessex, and it seemed as if the old tendency to provincial separation was to triumph with the death of Cnut. What hindered this severance was the ambition of Godwine. His whole mind seemed set on the aggrandizement of his family. He had given his daughter to the King as wife. His own earldom embraced all England south of Thames. His son Harold was Earl of East Anglia; his son Swein secured an earldom in the west; and his nephew Beorn was established in central England. But the first blow to Godwine's power came from the lawlessness of Swein. He seduced the abbess of Leominster, sent her home again with a yet more outrageous demand of her hand in marriage, and on the King's refusal to grant it fled from the realm. Godwine's influence secured his pardon, but on his very return to seek it Swein murdered his cousin Beorn, who had opposed the reconciliation. He again fled to Flanders, and a storm of national indignation followed him over sea. The meeting of the Wise Men branded him as "nithing," the "utterly worthless," yet in a year his father wrested a new pardon from the King and restored him to his earldom. The scandalous inlawing of such a criminal left Godwine alone in a struggle which soon arose with Eadward himself. The King was a stranger in his realm, and his sympathies lay naturally with the home and friends of his youth and exile. He spoke the Norman tongue. He used in Norman fashion a seal for his charters. He set Norman favourites in the highest posts of Church and State. Strangers such as these, though hostile to the minister, were powerless against Godwine's influence and ability, and when at a later time they ventured to stand alone against him they fell without a blow. But the general ill-will at Swein's inlawing enabled them to stir Eadward to attack the Earl. A trivial quarrel brought the opportunity. On his return from a visit to the court Eustace Count of Boulogne, the husband of the King's sister, demanded quarters for his train in Dover. Strife arose, and many both of the burghers and foreigners were slain. All Godwine's better nature withstood Eadward when the King angrily bade him exact vengeance from the town for the affront to his kinsman; and he claimed a fair trial for the townsmen. Eadward looked on his refusal as an outrage, and the quarrel widened into open strife. Godwine at once gathered his forces and marched upon Gloucester, demanding the expulsion of the foreign favourites; but even in a just quarrel the country was cold in his support. The Earls of Mercia and Northumberland united their forces to those of Eadward; and in a gathering of the Wise Men at London Swein's outlawry was renewed, while Godwine, declining with his usual prudence a useless struggle, withdrew oversea, to Flanders.

SEC. II
—
THE ENGLISH RESTORA-TION
1042
TO 1066
—

Exile of Godwine
1051

But the wrath of the nation was appeased by his fall. Great as were Godwine's faults, he was the one man who now stood between England and the rule of the strangers who flocked to the Court; and a year had hardly passed when at the appearance of his fleet in the Thames Eadward was once more forced to yield. The foreign prelates and bishops fled oversea, outlawed by the same meeting of the Wise Men which restored Godwine to his home. He returned only to die, and the direction of affairs passed quietly to his son.

1052

Harold came to power unfettered by the obstacles which had beset his father, and for twelve years he was the actual governor of the realm. The courage, the ability, the genius for administration, the ambition and subtlety of Godwine were found again in his son. In the internal government of England he followed out his father's policy while avoiding its excesses. Peace was preserved, justice administered, and the realm increased in wealth and prosperity. Its gold work and embroidery became famous in the markets of

Earl Harold 1053-1065

SEC. II
 THE ENGLISH RESTORA-TION
 1042
 TO 1066

Flanders and France. Disturbances from without were crushed sternly and rapidly ; Harold's military talents displayed themselves in a campaign against Wales, and in the boldness and rapidity with BEDS.

 Eleventh Century.
MS. Cott. Claud. B. iv.

which, arming his troops with weapons adapted for mountain conflict, he penetrated to the heart of its fastnesses and reduced the country to complete submission. But it was a prosperity poor in

CHARIOT.
 Eleventh Century.
MS. Cott. Claud. B. iv.

the nobler elements of national activity, and dead to the more vivid influences of spiritual life. Literature, which on the Continent was kindling into a new activity, died down in England into a few psalters and homilies. The few minsters raised by king or earls contrasted strangely with the religious enthusiasm which was covering Normandy and the Rhineland with stately buildings. The Church sank into lethargy. Stigand, the Archbishop of Canterbury, was the adherent of an antipope, and the highest dignity of the English Church was kept in a state of suspension. No important ecclesiastical synod, no Church reform, broke the slumbers of its clergy. Abroad Europe was waking to a new revival of literature, of art, of religion, but England was all but severed from the Continent. Like Godwine, Harold's energy seemed to devote itself wholly to self-aggrandizement. With the gift of the Northumbrian earldom on Siward's death to Harold's brother Tostig, all England, save a small part of the older Mercia, lay in the hands of the house of Godwine. As the childless Eadward drew to the grave his minister drew closer and closer to the throne. One obstacle after another was swept from his path. A revolt of the Northumbrians drove Tostig, his most dangerous opponent, to Flanders, and the Earl was able to win over the Mercian house of Leofric to his cause by owning Morkere, the brother of the Mercian Earl Eadwine, as Tostig's successor. His aim was in fact attained without a struggle, and the nobles and bishops who were gathered round the death-bed of the Confessor passed quietly at once from it to the election and coronation of Harold.

SEC. 11
 THE ENGLISH RESTORA-TION
 1042
 TO 1066

Death of Eadward
 Jan. 1066

Section III.—Normandy and the Normans, 912—1066

[Authorities.—Dudo of S. Quentin, a verbose and confused writer, has preserved the earliest Norman traditions. His work is abridged and continued by William of Jumièges, a contemporary of the Conqueror, whose work forms the base of the "Roman de Rou," composed by Wace in the time of Henry the Second. The religious movement is best told by Ordericus Vitalis, a Norman writer of the twelfth century, gossiping and confused, but full of valuable information. For Lanfranc see "Lanfranci Opera, ed. Giles," and the life in Hook's "Archbishops of Canterbury." For Anselm see the admirable biography by Dean Church. The general history of Normandy is told diffusely but picturesquely by Sir F. Palgrave, "Normandy and England," more accurately and succinctly by Mr. Freeman, "History of Norman Conquest," vols. i. and ii.]

The quiet of Harold's accession was at once broken by news of danger from a land which, strange as it seemed then, was

Normandy

SEC. III
 ———
 NORMANDY
 AND THE NORMANS 912
 TO 1066
 ———

soon to become almost a part of England itself. A walk through Normandy teaches one more of the age of our history which we are about to traverse than all the books in the world. The story of the Conquest stands written in the stately vault of the minster at Caen which still covers the tomb of the Conqueror. The name of each hamlet by the roadside has its memories for English ears ; a fragment of castle wall marks the home of the Bruce, a tiny little village preserves the name of the Percy. The very look of the country and its people seem familiar to us ; the peasant in his cap and blouse recalls the build and features of the small English farmer ; the fields about Caen, with their dense hedgerows, their elms, their apple-orchards, are the very picture of an English country-side. On the windy heights around rise the square grey keeps which Normandy handed on to the cliffs of Richmond or the banks of Thames, while huge cathedrals lift themselves over the red-tiled roofs of little market towns, the models of the stately fabrics which superseded the lowlier churches of Ælfred or Dunstan.

ABBAY CHURCH OF S. STEPHEN AT CAEN.

SEC. III
 —
 NORMANDY
 AND THE NORMANS 912
 TO 1066
 —
 The Norman Settlement

Peace of Clair-sur-Epte
 912

Hrolf the Ganger, or Walker, a Norwegian and a pirate leader like Guthrum or Hasting, had wrested the land on either side the mouth of Seine from the French king, Charles the Simple, at the moment when Ælfred's children were beginning their conquest of the English Danelaw. The treaty in which France purchased peace by this cession of the coast was a close imitation of the peace of Wedmore. Hrolf, like Guthrum, was baptized, received the king's daughter in marriage, and became his vassal for the territory which now took the name of "the Northman's land" or Normandy. But vassalage and the new faith sat alike lightly on the pirate. No such ties of blood and speech tended to unite the northman with the French among whom he settled along the Seine as united him to the Englishmen among whom he settled along the Humber. William Longsword, the son of Hrolf, though wavering towards France and Christianity, remained a northman in heart; he called in a Danish colony to occupy his conquest of the Cotentin, the peninsula which runs out from St. Michael's Mount to the cliffs of Cherbourg, and reared his boy among the northmen of Bayeux, where the Danish tongue and fashions most stubbornly held their own. A heathen reaction followed his death, and the bulk of the Normans, with the child Duke Richard, fell away for the time from Christianity, while new pirate-fleets came swarming up the Seine. To the close of the century the whole people are still "Pirates" to the French around them, their land the "Pirates' land," their Duke the "Pirates' Duke."

Civilization of Normandy
 945-996

Yet in the end the same forces which merged the Dane in the Englishman told even more powerfully on the Dane in France. No race has ever shown a greater power of absorbing all the nobler characteristics of the peoples with whom they came in contact, or of infusing their own energy into them. During the long reign of Duke Richard the Fearless, the son of William Longsword, heathen Norman pirates became French Christians, and feudal at heart. The old Norse language lived only at Bayeux, and in a few local names. As the old northern freedom died silently away,

SEC. 111

NORMANDY
AND THE NORMANS912
TO 1066*HerlouinBecLanfranc at Bec*
1045-1066*Anselm*

the descendants of the pirates became feudal nobles, and the "Pirates' land" sank into the most loyal of the fiefs of France. The change of manners was accompanied by a change of faith, a change which bound the land where heathendom had fought stubbornly for life to the cause of Christianity and the Church. The Dukes were the first to be touched by the new faith, but as the religious movement spread to the people it was welcomed with an almost passionate fanaticism. Every road was crowded with pilgrims. Monasteries rose in every forest glade. Herlouin, a knight of Brionne, sought shelter from the world in a little valley edged in with woods of ash and elm, through which a beck or rivulet (to which his house owed its after-name) runs down to the Risle. He was one day busy building an oven with his own hands when a stranger greeted him with "God save you!" "Are you a Lombard?" asked the knight-abbot, struck with the foreign look of the man. "I am," he replied: and praying to be made a monk, the stranger fell down at the mouth of the oven and kissed Herlouin's feet. The Lombard was Lanfranc of Pavia, a scholar especially skilled in the traditions of the Roman law, who had wandered across the Alps to found a school at Avranches; and was now drawn to a religious life by the fame of Herlouin's sanctity. The religious impulse was a real one, but Lanfranc was destined to be known rather as a great administrator and statesman than as a saint. His teaching raised Bec in a few years into the most famous school of Christendom: it was in fact the first wave of the intellectual movement which was spreading from Italy to the ruder countries of the West. The whole mental activity of the time seemed concentrated in the group of scholars who gathered round him; the fabric of the canon law and of mediæval scholasticism, with the philosophical scepticism which first awoke under its influence, all trace their origin to Bec.

The most famous of these scholars was Anselm of Aosta, an Italian like Lanfranc himself, and who was soon to succeed him as Prior and teacher at Bec. Friends as they were, no two men could be more strangely unlike. Anselm had grown to manhood in the quiet solitude of his mountain-valley, a tender-hearted poet-dreamer, with a soul pure as the Alpine snows above him, and an intelligence keen and clear as the mountain air. The whole temper of the man was painted in a dream of his youth. It seemed to him as though heaven lay, a stately palace, amid the gleaming hill-peaks, while the women reaping in the corn-fields of the valley became harvest-maidens of its heavenly King. They reaped idly, and Anselm, grieved at their sloth, hastily climbed the mountain-side to accuse them to their lord. As he reached the palace the King's voice called him to his feet, and he poured forth his tale; then at the royal bidding bread of an unearthly whiteness was set before him, and he ate and was refreshed. The dream passed with the morning; but the sense of heaven's nearness to earth, the fervid loyalty to the service of his Lord, the tender restfulness and peace in the Divine presence which it reflected became the life of Anselm. Wandering like other Italian scholars to Normandy, he became a monk under Lanfranc, and on his teacher's removal to higher duties succeeded him in the direction of the Abbey of Bec. No teacher has ever thrown a greater spirit of love into his toil. "Force your scholars to improve!" he burst out to another teacher who relied on blows and compulsion. "Did you ever see a craftsman fashion a fair image out of a golden plate by blows alone? Does he not now gently press it and strike it with his tools, now with wise art yet more gently raise and shape it? What do your scholars turn into under this ceaseless beating?" "They turn only brutal," was the reply. "You have bad luck," was the keen answer, "in a training that only turns men into beasts." The worst natures softened before this tenderness and patience. Even the Conqueror, so harsh and terrible to others, became another man, gracious and easy of speech, with Anselm.

But amidst his absorbing cares as a teacher, the Prior of Bec found time for philosophical speculations, to which we owe the great scientific inquiries which built up the theology of the middle ages. His famous works were the first attempts of any Christian thinker to elicit the idea of God from the very nature of the human reason. His passion for abstruse thought robbed him of food and sleep. Sometimes he could hardly pray. Often the night was a long watch till he could seize his conception and write it on the wax tablets which lay beside him. But not even a fever of intense thought such as this could draw Anselm's heart from its passionate tenderness and love. Sick monks in the infirmary could relish no

SEC. III
 —
 NORMANDY
 AND THE NORMANS 912
 TO 1066
 —

1060

SEC. IV
 —
 THE CONQUEROR
 1042
 TO 1066
 —

drink save the juice which his hand had squeezed for them from the grape-bunch. In the later days of his archbishoprick a hare chased by the hounds took refuge under his horse, and his voice grew loud as he forbade a huntsman to stir in the chase while the creature darted off again to the woods. Even the greed of lands for the Church to which so many religious men yielded found its characteristic rebuke, as the battling lawyers saw Anselm quietly close his eyes in court and go peacefully to sleep.

Section IV.—The Conqueror, 1042—1066

[Authorities.—Primarily the “Gesta Willelmi” of his chaplain, William of Poitiers, a violent partizan of the Duke. William of Jumièges is here a contemporary, and of great value. Orderic and Wace, with the other riming chronicle of Benoît de Sainte-More, come in the second place. For the invasion and Senlac we have, in addition, the contemporary “Carmen de Bello Hastingsensi,” by Guy, Bishop of Amiens, and the invaluable pictures of the Bayeux Tapestry. The English accounts are most meagre. The invasion and battle of Senlac are the subject of Mr. Freeman’s third volume (“History of Norman Conquest”).]

The Conquests of the Normans

IT was not this new fervour of faith only which drove Norman pilgrims in flocks to the shrines of Italy and the Holy Land. The old northern spirit of adventure turned the pilgrims into Crusaders, and the flower of Norman knighthood, impatient of the stern rule of their Dukes, followed Roger de Toesny against the Moslem of Spain, or enlisted under the banner of the Greeks in their war with the Arabs who had conquered Sicily. The Normans became conquerors under Robert Guiscard, a knight who had left his home in the Cotentin with a single follower, but whose valour and wisdom soon placed him at the head of his fellow-soldiers in Italy. Attacking the Greeks, whom they had hitherto served, the Norman knights wrested Apulia from them in an overthrow at Cannæ, 1054-1080 Guiscard himself led them to the conquest of Calabria and the great trading cities of the coast, while thirty years of warfare gave Sicily to the followers of his brother Roger. The two conquests were united under a line of princes to whose munificence art owes the splendour of Palermo and Monreale, and literature the first 1060-1090 outburst of Italian song. Normandy, still seething with vigorous life, was stirred to greed and enterprise by this plunder of the South, and the rumour of Guiscard's exploits roused into more ardent life the daring ambition of its Duke.

William the Great, as men of his own day styled him, William the Conqueror, as by one event he stamped himself on our history, was now Duke of Normandy. The full grandeur of his indomitable will, his large and patient statesmanship, the loftiness of aim which lifts him out of the petty incidents of his age, were as yet only

SEC. IV
—
THE CONQUEROR
1042
TO 1066
—

William of Normandy

CASTLE OF ARQUES.

Built by a rebel baron in William's boyhood.

partly disclosed. But there never was a moment from his boyhood when he was not among the greatest of men. His life was one long mastering of difficulty after difficulty. The shame of his birth remained in his name of "the Bastard." His father, Duke Robert, had seen Arlotta, the daughter of a tanner of the town, washing her linen in the little brook by Falaise, and loving her had made her the mother of his boy. Robert's departure on a pilgrimage from which he never returned left William a child-ruler among the most turbulent baronage in Christendom, and treason and anarchy sur-

1027

1035

SEC. IV
 THE CONQUEROR
 1042
 TO 1066

1047

rounded him as he grew to manhood. Disorder broke at last into open revolt. Surprised in his hunting-seat at Valognes by the rising of the Bessin and Cotentin districts, in which the pirate temper and lawlessness lingered longest, William had only time to dash through the fords of Vire with the rebels on his track. A fierce combat of horse on the slopes of Val-ès-dunes, to the south-eastward of Caen, left him master of the duchy, and the old Scandinavian Normandy yielded for ever to the new civilization which streamed in with French alliances and the French tongue. William was himself a type of the transition. In the young duke's character the old world mingled strangely with the new, the pirate jostled roughly with the statesman. William was the most terrible, as he was the last outcome of the northern race. The very spirit of the "sea-wolves" who had so long "lived on the pillage of the world" seemed embodied in his gigantic form, his enormous strength, his savage countenance, his desperate bravery, the fury of his wrath, the ruthlessness of his revenge. "No knight under heaven," his enemies confessed, "was William's peer." Boy as he was, horse and man went down before his lance at Val-ès-dunes. All the fierce gaiety of his nature broke out in the chivalrous adventures of his youth, in his rout of fifteen Angevins with but five soldiers at his back, in his defiant ride over the ground which Geoffry Martel claimed from him, a ride with hawk on fist as though war and the chase were one. No man could bend his bow. His mace crashed its way through a ring of English warriors to the foot of the Standard. He rose to his greatest heights in moments when other men despaired. His voice rang out like a trumpet to rally his soldiers as they fled before the English charge at Senlac. In his winter march on Chester he strode afoot at the head of his fainting troops, and helped with his own hands to clear a road through the snowdrifts. With the northman's daring broke out the northman's pitilessness. When the townsmen of Alençon hung raw hides along their walls in scorn of the baseness of his birth, with cries of "Work for the Tanner!" William tore out his prisoners' eyes, cut off their hands and feet, and flung them into the town. At the close of his greatest victory he refused Harold's body a grave. Hundreds of Hampshire men were driven from their homes to make him a hunting-ground, and his harrying of Northumbria left the north of England a desolate waste. There is a grim, ruthless ring about his very jests. In his old age Philip of France mocked at the Conqueror's unwieldy bulk and at the sickness which confined him to his bed at Rouen. "King William has as long a lying-in," laughed his enemy, "as a woman behind her curtains!" "When I get up," swore William, "I will go to mass in Philip's land, and bring a rich offering for my churching. I will offer a thousand candles for my fee. Flaming brands shall they be, and steel shall glitter over the fire they make." At harvest-tide town and hamlet flaring into ashes along the French border fulfilled the Conqueror's vow. There is the same savage temper in the loneliness of his life. He recked little of men's love or hate. His grim look, his pride, his silence, his wild outbursts of passion, spread terror through his court. "So stark and fierce was he," says the English Chronicler, "that none dared resist his will." His graciousness to Anselm only brought out into stronger relief the general harshness of his tone. His very wrath was solitary. "To no man spake he, and no man dared speak to him," when the news reached him of Harold's accession to the throne. It was only when he passed from the palace to the loneliness of the woods that the King's temper unbent. "He loved the wild deer as though he had been their father. Whosoever should slay hart or hind man should blind him." Death itself took its colour from the savage solitude of his life. Priests and nobles fled as the last breath left him, and the Conqueror's body lay naked and lonely on the floor.

It was the genius of William which lifted him out of this mere northman into a great general and a great statesman. The growth of the Norman power was jealously watched by Geoffry Martel, the Count of Anjou, and his influence succeeded in converting France from friend to foe. The danger changed William at once from the chivalrous knight-errant of Val-ès-dunes into a wary strategist. As the French army crossed the border he hung cautiously on its flanks, till a division which had encamped in the little town of Mortemer had been surprised and cut to pieces by his soldiers. A second division was still held at bay by the duke himself, when Ralph de Toesny, climbing up into a tree, shouted to them the news of their comrades' fall. "Up, up, Frenchmen! you sleep too long: go bury your friends that lie slain at Mortemer."

SEC. IV
 THE CONQUEROR
 1042
 TO 1066

William
 and France

1054

SEC. IV
 THE CONQUEROR
 1042
 TO 1066

A second and more formidable invasion four years later was met with the same cautious strategy. William hung on the Frenchmen's flank, looking coolly on while town and abbey were plundered, the Bessin ravaged, Caen sacked, and the invaders prepared to cross the Dive at Varaville and carry fire and sword into the rich land of Lisieux. But only half the army was over the river when the Duke fell suddenly upon its rear. The fight raged till the rising of the tide cut the French forces, as William had foreseen, hopelessly in two. Huddled together on a narrow causeway, swept by the Norman arrows, knights, footmen, and baggage train were involved in the same ruin. Not a man escaped, and the French king, who had been forced to look on helplessly from the opposite bank, fled home to die. The death of Geoffry Martel left William without a rival among the princes of France. Maine, the border land between Norman and Angevin, and which had for the last ten years been held by Anjou, submitted without a struggle to his rule. Brittany, which had joined the league of his foes, was reduced to submission by a single march.

1060

William and Normandy

All this activity abroad was far from distracting the Duke's attention from Normandy itself. It was hard to secure peace and order in a land filled with turbulent robber-lords. "The Normans must be trodden down and kept under foot," said one of their poets, "for he only who bridles them may use them at his need." William "could never love a robber." His stern protection of trader and peasant roused the baronage through his first ten years to incessant revolt. His very kinsfolk headed the discontent, and summoned the French king to their aid. But the victories of Mortemer and Varaville left the rebels at his mercy. Some rotted in his dungeons, some were driven into exile, and joined the conquerors of Apulia and Sicily. The land settled down into peace and order, and William turned to the reform of the Church. Malger, the Archbishop of Rouen, a mere hunting and feasting prelate, was summarily deposed, and his place filled by Maurilius, a French ecclesiastic of piety and learning. Frequent councils under the Duke's guidance amended the morals of the clergy. The school of Bec, as we have seen, had become a centre of education; and William, with the keen insight into men which formed so marked a feature in his genius, selected its prior as his chief adviser. In a strife with the Papacy which the Duke had provoked by his marriage with Matilda of Flanders, Lanfranc took the side of Rome, and his opposition had been punished by

SEC. IV
 THE CONQUEROR
 1042
 TO 1066

ABBEY CHURCH OF JUMIÈGES.
 Nave and tower built 1040—1058.

a sentence of banishment. The Prior set out on a lame horse the only one his house could afford, and was overtaken by the Duke, impatient that he should quit Normandy. "Give me a better horse and I shall go the quicker," replied the imperturbable

SEC. IV
 THE CONQUEROR
 1042
 TO 1066

Lombard, and the Duke's wrath passed into laughter and goodwill. From that hour Lanfranc became his minister and counsellor, whether for affairs in the duchy itself or for the more daring schemes of ambition which were opened up to him by the position of England.

England
 and the Normans

For half a century the two countries had been drawing nearer together. At the close of the reign of Richard the Fearless the Danish descents upon the English coast had found support in Normandy, and their fleet had wintered in her ports. It was to revenge these attacks that Æthelred had despatched a fleet across the Channel to ravage the Cotentin, but the fleet was repulsed, and the strife appeased by Æthelred's marriage with Emma, a sister of Richard the Good. Æthelred with his children found shelter in Normandy from the Danish kings, and, if Norman accounts are to be trusted, contrary winds alone prevented a Norman fleet from undertaking their restoration. The peaceful recall of Eadward to the throne seemed to open England to Norman ambition, and Godwine was no sooner banished than Duke William appeared at the English court, and received, as he afterwards asserted, a promise of succession to its throne from the King. Such a promise, unconfirmed by the national assembly of the Wise Men, was utterly valueless, and for the moment Godwine's recall put an end to William's hopes. They are said to have been revived by a storm which threw Harold, while cruising in the Channel, on the French coast, and William forced him to swear on the relics of saints to support the Duke's claim as the price of his own return to England: but the news of the King's death was at once followed by that of Harold's accession, and after a burst of furious passion the Duke prepared to enforce his claim by arms. William did not claim the Crown. He claimed simply the right which he afterwards used when his sword had won it, of presenting himself for election by the nation, and he believed himself entitled so to present himself by the direct commendation of the Confessor. The actual election of Harold which stood in his way, hurried as it was, he did not recognize as valid. But with this constitutional claim was inextricably mingled his resentment at the private wrong which Harold had done him, and a resolve to exact vengeance on the man whom he regarded as untrue to his oath.

HAROLD TAKING LEAVE OF EADWARD.

SETTING OUT ON HIS JOURNEY.

HAROLD SAILING FROM BOSHAM TO PONTHEIU.

HAROLD RECEIVING THE CROWN

BAYEUX TAPESTRY.

SEC. IV
 THE CONQUEROR
 1042
 TO 1066
 The eve
 of the struggle

The difficulties in the way of his enterprise were indeed enormous. He could reckon on no support within England itself. At home he had to extort the consent of his own reluctant baronage ; to gather a motley host from every quarter of France, and to keep it together for months ; to create a fleet, to cut down the very trees, to build, to launch, to man the vessels ; and to find time amidst all this for the common business of government, for negotiations with Denmark and the Empire, with France, Brittany, and Anjou, with Flanders and with Rome. His rival's difficulties were hardly less than his own. Harold was threatened with invasion not only by William but by his brother Tostig, who had taken refuge in Norway and secured the aid of its king, Harald Hardrada. The fleet and army he had gathered lay watching for months along the coast. His one standing force was his body of hus-carls, but their numbers only enabled them to act as the nucleus of an army. On the other hand the Land-fyrd, or general levy of fighting-men, was a body easy to raise for any single encounter, but hard to keep together. To assemble such a force was to bring labour to a standstill. The men gathered under the King's standard were the farmers and ploughmen of their fields. The ships were the fishing-vessels of the coast. In September the task of holding them together became impossible, but their dispersion had hardly taken place when the two clouds which had so long been gathering burst at once upon the realm. A change of wind released the landlocked armament of William ; but before changing, the wind which prisoned the Duke had flung the host of Harald Hardrada on the coast of Yorkshire. The King hastened with his household troops to the north, and repulsed the invaders in a decisive overthrow at Stamford Bridge, in the neighbourhood of York ; but ere he could hurry back to London the Norman host had crossed the sea, and William, who had anchored on the 28th off Pevensey, was ravaging the coast to bring his rival to an engagement. His merciless ravages succeeded, as they were intended, in drawing Harold from London to the south ; but the King wisely refused to attack with the forces he had hastily summoned to his banner. If he was forced to give battle, he resolved to give it on ground he had himself chosen, and advancing near enough to the coast to check William's ravages, he entrenched himself on a hill

1066

Sept. 28
 1066

WILLIAM SAILING TO ENGLAND.

BISHOP ODO OF BAYEUX SAYING GRACE AT BANQUET AFTER LANDING.

WILLIAM HOLDING COUNCIL WITH HIS BROTHERS, ODO AND ROBERT.

FORTIFICATION OF WILLIAM'S CAMP AT HASTINGS

MESSENGER BRINGS TIDINGS TO WILLIAM OF HAROLD'S MOVEMENTS.

BAYEUX TAPESTRY.

SEC. IV
 THE CONQUEROR
 1042
 TO 1066 known afterwards as that of Senlac, a low spur of the Sussex Downs near Hastings. His position covered London, and drove William to concentrate his forces. With a host subsisting by pillage, to concentrate is to starve ; and no alternative was left to William but a decisive victory or ruin.

The Battle of Senlac
 Oct. 14

Along the higher ground that leads from Hastings the Duke led his men in the dim dawn of an October morning to the mound of Telham. It was from this point that the Normans saw the host of the English gathered thickly behind a rough trench and a stockade on the height of Senlac. Marshy ground covered their right ; on the left, the most exposed part of the position, the hus-carls or body-guard of Harold, men in full armour and wielding huge axes, were grouped round the Golden Dragon of Wessex and the Standard of the King. The rest of the ground was covered by thick masses of half-armed rustics who had flocked at Harold's summons to the fight with the stranger. It was against the centre of this formidable position that William arrayed his Norman knight-hood, while the mercenary forces he had gathered in France and Brittany were ordered to attack its flanks. A general charge of the Norman foot opened the battle ; in front rode the minstrel Taillefer, tossing his sword in the air and catching it again while he chaunted the song of Roland. He was the first of the host who struck a blow, and he was the first to fall. The charge broke vainly on the stout stockade behind which the English warriors plied axe and javelin with fierce cries of "Out, out," and the repulse of the Norman footmen was followed by a repulse of the Norman horse. Again and again the Duke rallied and led them to the fatal stockade. All the fury of fight that glowed in his Norseman's blood, all the headlong valour that had spurred him over the slopes of Val-ès-dunes, mingled that day with the coolness of head, the dogged perseverance, the inexhaustible faculty of resource which had shone at Mortemer and Varaville. His Breton troops, entangled in the marshy ground on his left, broke in disorder, and as panic spread through the army a cry arose that the Duke was slain. "I live," shouted William, as he tore off his helmet, "and by God's help will conquer yet." Mad-dened by repulse, the Duke spurred right at the Standard ; unhorsed, his terrible mace struck down Gyrth, the King's brother ; again dismounted, a blow from his hand hurled to the ground an unmannerly rider who would not lend him his steed. Amidst the roar and tumult of the battle he turned the flight he had arrested into the means of victory. Broken as the stockade was by his desperate onset, the shield-wall of the warriors behind it still held the Normans at bay till William by a feint of flight drew a part of the English force from their post of vantage. Turning on his disorderly pursuers, the Duke cut them to pieces, broke through the abandoned line, and made himself master of the central ground. Meanwhile the French and Bretons made good their ascent on either flank. At three the hill seemed won, at six the fight still raged around the Standard, where Harold's hus-carls stood stubbornly at bay on a spot marked afterwards by the high altar of Battle Abbey. An order from the Duke at last brought his archers to the front, and their arrow-flight told heavily on the dense masses crowded around the King. As the sun went down a shaft pierced Harold's right eye; he fell between the royal ensigns, and the battle closed with a desperate melley over his corpse. While night covered the flight of the English, the Conqueror pitched his tent on the very spot where his rival had fallen, and "sat down to eat and drink among the dead."

SEC. IV
 THE CONQUEROR
 1042
 TO 1066

Securing Romney and Dover, the Duke marched by Canterbury upon London. Faction and intrigue were doing his work for him as he advanced. Harold's brothers had fallen with the King on the field of Senlac, and there was none of the house of Godwine to contest the crown; while of the old royal line there remained but a single boy, Eadgar the Ætheling, son of the eldest of Eadmund Ironside's children, who had fled before Cnut's persecution as far as Hungary for shelter. Boy as he was, he was chosen king; but the choice gave little strength to the national cause. The widow of the Confessor surrendered Winchester to the Duke. The bishops gathered at London inclined to submission. The citizens themselves faltered as William, passing by their walls, gave Southwark to the flames. The throne of the boy-king really rested for support on the Earls of Mercia and Northumbria, Eadwine and Morkere; and William, crossing the Thames at Wallingford and marching into Hertfordshire, threatened to cut them off from their earldoms. The masterly movement brought about an instant sub-becomes King

William

SEC. IV
 THE CONQUEROR
 1042
 TO 1066

Christmas 1066

mission. Eadwine and Morkere retreated hastily home from London, and the city gave way at once. Eadgar himself was at the head of the deputation who came to offer the crown to the Norman Duke. "They bowed to him," says the English annalist pathetically, "for need." They bowed to the Norman as they had bowed to the Dane, and William accepted the crown in the spirit of Cnut. London indeed was secured by the erection of a fortress which afterwards grew into the Tower, but William desired to reign not as a conqueror but as a lawful king. He received the crown at Westminster from the hands of Archbishop Ealdred, amidst shouts of "Yea, Yea," from his new English subjects. Fines from the greater landowners atoned for a resistance which was now counted as rebellion; but with this exception every measure of the new sovereign indicated his desire of ruling as a successor of Eadward or Ælfred. As yet indeed the greater part of England remained quietly aloof from him, and he can hardly be said to have been recognized as king by Northumberland or the greater part of Mercia. But to the east of a line which stretched from Norwich to Dorsetshire his rule was unquestioned, and over this portion he ruled as an English king. His soldiers were kept in strict order. No change was made in law or custom. The privileges of London were recognized by a royal writ which still remains, the most venerable of its muniments, among the city's archives. Peace and order were restored. William even attempted, though in vain, to learn the English tongue that he might personally administer justice to the suitors in his court. The kingdom seemed so tranquil that only a few months had passed after the battle of Senlac when William, leaving England in charge of his brother, Odo Bishop of Bayeux, and his minister, William Fitz-Osbern, returned for a while to Normandy.

Section V.—The Norman Conquest, 1068—1071

SEC. V
—
THE NORMAN
CONQUEST 1068
TO 1071
—

[Authorities.—The Norman writers as before, Orderic being particularly valuable and detailed. The Chronicle and Florence of Worcester are the primary English authorities (for the so-called “Ingulf of Croyland” is a forgery of the 14th century). Domesday Book is of course indispensable for the Norman settlement; the introduction to it by Sir Henry Ellis gives a brief account of its chief results. Among secondary authorities Simeon of Durham is useful for northern matters, and William of Malmesbury valuable from his remarkable combination of Norman and English feeling. The Norman Constitution is described at length by Lingard, but best studied in the Constitutional History and Select Charters of Dr. Stubbs. The “Anglia Judaica” of Toovey gives some account of the Jewish colonies. For the history as a whole, see Mr. Freeman’s “Norman Conquest,” vol. iv.]

It is not to his victory at Senlac, but to the struggle which followed his return from Normandy, that William owes his title of the “Conqueror.” During his absence Bishop Odo’s tyranny had forced the Kentishmen to seek aid from Count Eustace of Boulogne; while the Welsh princes supported a similar rising against Norman oppression in the west. But as yet the bulk of the land held fairly to the new king. Dover was saved from Eustace; and the discontented fled over sea to seek refuge in lands as far off as Constantinople, where Englishmen from this time formed great part of the body-guard or Varangians of the Eastern Emperors. William returned to take his place again as an English King. It was with an English force

The National Revolt

GREAT SEAL OF WILLIAM THE CONQUEROR.

SEC. V
 —
 THE NORMAN
 CONQUEST 1068
 TO 1071
 —

that he subdued a rising in the south-west led by Exeter, and it was at the head of an English army that he completed his work by marching to the North. His march brought Eadwine and Morkere again to submission; a fresh rising ended in the occupation of York, and England as far as the Tees lay quietly at William's feet.

It was in fact only the national revolt of 1068 that transformed the King into a Conqueror. The signal for this revolt came from without. Swein, the king of Denmark, had for two years been preparing to dispute England with the Norman, and on the appearance of his fleet in the Humber, all northern, all western and south-western England rose as one man. Eadgar the Ætheling with a band of exiles who had taken refuge in Scotland took the head of the Northumbrian revolt; in the south-west the men of ARCHER.

 Eleventh Century.
MS. Cott. Claud. B. iv.

Devon, Somerset, and Dorset gathered to the sieges of Exeter and Montacute; while a new Norman castle at Shrewsbury alone bridled a rising in the west. So ably had the revolt been planned that even William was taken by surprise. The news of the loss of York and of the slaughter of three thousand Normans who formed its garrison reached him as he was hunting in the Forest of Dean; and in a wild outburst of wrath the king swore "by the splendour of God" to avenge himself on the North. But wrath went hand in hand with the coolest statesmanship.

William saw clearly that the centre of resistance lay in the Danish fleet, and pushing rapidly to the Humber with a handful of horsemen, he purchased by a heavy bribe its inactivity and withdrawal. Then leaving York to the last, William turned rapidly westward with the troops which gathered round him, and swept the Welsh border as far as Shrewsbury, while William Fitz-Osbern broke the rising round Exeter. His success set the King free to fulfil his oath of vengeance on the North. After a long delay before the flooded waters of the Aire he entered York, and ravaged the whole country as far as the Tees with fire and sword. Town and village were harried and burnt, their inhabitants slain or driven over the Scotch border. The coast was especially wasted that no hold might remain for any future invasion of the Danes. Harvest, cattle, the very implements of husbandry were so mercilessly destroyed that the famine which followed is said to have swept off more than a hundred thousand victims, and half a century later the land still lay bare of culture and deserted of men for sixty miles northward of York. The work of vengeance was no sooner over than William led his army back from the Tees to York, and thence to Chester and the West. Never had he shown the grandeur of his character so memorably as in this terrible march. The winter was severe, the roads choked with snow drifts or broken by torrents; provisions failed, and the army, drenched with rain and forced to consume its horses for food, broke out into open mutiny at the order to advance across the bleak moorlands that part Yorkshire from the West. The mercenaries from Anjou and Brittany demanded their release from service, and William granted their prayer with scorn. On foot, at the head of the troops which remained faithful, the King forced his way by paths inaccessible to horses, often aiding his men with his own hands to clear the road. The last hopes of the English ceased on his arrival at Chester; the King remained undisputed master of the conquered country, and busied himself in the erection of numerous castles which were henceforth to hold it in subjection. Two years passed quietly ere the last act of the conquest was reached. By the withdrawal of the Dane the hopes of England rested wholly on the aid it looked for from Scotland, where Eadgar the Ætheling had taken refuge, and where his sister Margaret had become the wife of King Malcolm. It was probably some assurance of Malcolm's aid which roused Eadwine and Morkere to a new revolt, which was at once foiled by the vigilance of the Conqueror. Eadwine fell in an obscure skirmish, while Morkere found refuge for a time in the marshes of the eastern counties, where a desperate band of patriots gathered round an outlawed leader, Hereward. Nowhere had William found so stubborn a resistance; but a causeway two miles long was at last driven across the fens, and the last hopes of English freedom died in the surrender

SEC. V
 —
 THE NORMAN
 CONQUEST 1068
 TO 1071
 —

Last struggle of the English
 1071

SEC. V
 THE NORMAN
 CONQUEST 1068
 TO 1071

William
 and Feudal-ism

of Ely. Malcolm alone held out till the Conqueror summoned the whole host of the crown, and crossing the Lowlands and the Forth penetrated into the heart of Scotland. He had reached the Tay when the King's resistance gave way, and Malcolm appeared in the English camp and swore fealty at William's feet.

The struggle which ended in the fens of Ely had wholly changed William's position. He no longer held the land merely as elected king, he added to his elective right the right of conquest. The system of government which he originated was, in fact, the result of the double character of his power. It represented neither the purely feudal system of the Continent nor the system of the older English royalty. More truly perhaps it may be said to have represented both. As the successor of Eadward, William retained the judicial and administrative organization of the older English realm. As the conqueror of England he introduced the military organization of feudalism so far as was necessary for the secure possession of his conquests. The ground was already prepared for such an organization; we have seen the beginnings of English feudalism in the warriors, the "companions" or "thegns" who were personally attached to the king's war-band, and received estates from the folk-land in reward for their personal services. In later times this feudal distribution of estates had greatly increased, as the bulk of the nobles followed the king's example and bound their tenants to themselves by a similar process of subinfeudation. On the other hand, the pure freeholders, the class which formed the basis of the original English society, had been gradually reduced in number, partly through imitation of the class above them, but still more through the incessant wars and invasions which drove them to seek protectors among the thegns at the cost of their independence. Feudalism, in fact, was superseding the older freedom in England even before the reign of William, as it had already superseded it in Germany or France. But the tendency was quickened and intensified by the Conquest; the desperate and universal resistance of his English subjects forced William to hold by the sword what the sword had won, and an army strong enough to crush at any moment a national revolt was necessary for the preservation of his throne. Such an army could only be maintained by a vast confiscation of the soil. The failure of the

JANUARY PLOUGHING.

FEBRUARY. PRUNING TREES.

MARCH. BREAKING UP SOIL—DIGGING—SOWING—HARROWING.

APRIL. FEASTING.

Eleventh Century.

Calendar. MS. Cott. Jul. A. vi.

SEC. V
 THE NORMAN
 CONQUEST 1068
 TO 1071

English risings cleared the way for its establishment ; the greater part of the higher nobility fell in battle or fled into exile, while the lower thegnhood either forfeited the whole of their lands or redeemed a portion of them by the surrender of the rest. We see the completeness of the confiscation in the vast estates which William was enabled to grant to his more powerful followers. Two hundred manors in Kent, with an equal number elsewhere, rewarded the services of his brother Odo, and grants almost as large fell to William's counsellors, Fitz-Osbern and Montgomery, or to barons like the Mowbrays and the Clares. But the poorest soldier of fortune found his part in the spoil. The meanest Norman rose to wealth and power in the new dominion of his lord. Great or small, however, each estate thus granted was granted on condition of its holder's service at the king's call ; and when the larger holdings were divided by their owners into smaller subtenancies, the under-tenants were bound by the same conditions of service to their lord. "Hear, my lord," swore the feudal dependant, as kneeling without arms and bareheaded he placed his hands within those of his superior : " I become liege man of yours for life and limb and earthly regard, and I will keep faith and loyalty to you for life and death, God help me." The kiss of his lord invested him with land or "fief" to descend to him and his heirs for ever. A whole army was by this means encamped upon the soil, and William's summons could at any moment gather an overwhelming force around his standard.

The English
 Baronage

Such a force however, effective as it was against the conquered, was hardly less formidable to the Crown itself. William found himself fronted in his new realm by the feudal baronage whom he had so hardly subdued to his will in Normandy, nobles impatient of law, as jealous of the royal power, and as eager for unbridled military and judicial independence within their own manors here as there. The genius of the Conqueror was shown in his quick discernment of this danger, and in the skill with which he met it. He availed himself of the old legal constitution of the country to hold justice firmly in his own hands. He retained the local courts of the hundred and the shire, where every freeman had a place, while he subjected all to the jurisdiction of the King's Court, which towards the close of the earlier English monarchy had assumed the

MAY. WATCHING SHEEP.

JUNE. CUTTING WOOD.

JULY. HAYMAKING.

AUGUST. HARVESTING.

Eleventh Century.

Calendar. MS. Cott. Jul. A. vi.

SEC. V
 —
 THE NORMAN
 CONQUEST 1068
 TO 1071
 —

right of hearing appeals and of calling up cases from any quarter to its bar. The authority of the Crown was maintained by the abolition of the great earldoms which had overshadowed it, those of Wessex, Mercia, and Northumberland, and by the royal nomination of sheriffs for the government of the shires. Large as the estates he granted were, they were scattered over the country in a way which made union between the landowners, or the hereditary attachment of great masses of vassals to a separate lord equally impossible. In other countries a vassal owed fealty to his lord against all foes, be they king or no. By a usage however which William enacted, and which was peculiar to England, each sub-tenant, in addition to his oath of fealty to his lord, swore fealty directly to the Crown, and loyalty to the King was thus established as the supreme and universal duty of all Englishmen. The feudal obligations, too, the rights and dues owing from each estate to the King, were enforced with remarkable strictness. Each tenant was bound to appear if needful thrice a year at the royal court, to pay a heavy fine or rent on succession to his estate, to contribute an "aid" in money in case of the King's capture in war, or the knighthood of the King's eldest son, or the marriage of his eldest daughter. An heir who was still a minor passed into the crown's wardship, and all profit from his estate went for the time to the King. If the estate devolved upon an heiress, her hand was at the King's disposal, and was generally sold to the highest bidder. Over the whole face of the land most manors were burthened with their own "customs," or special dues to the Crown: and it was for the purpose of ascertaining and recording these that William sent into each county the commissioners whose inquiries are preserved in Domesday Book. A jury empanelled in each hundred declared on oath the extent and nature of each estate, the names, number, condition of its inhabitants, its value before and after the Conquest, and the sums due from it to the Crown.

The Church
 of the Normans

William found another check on the aggressive spirit of the feudal baronage in his organization of the Church. One of his earliest acts was to summon Lanfranc from Normandy to aid him in its reform; and the deposition of Stigand, which raised Lanfranc to the see of Canterbury, was followed by the removal of most of the English prelates and abbots, and by the appointment of Norman

SEPTEMBER. HUNTING—PASTURING SWINE.

OCTOBER. HAWKING.

NOVEMBER. GROUP ROUND A FIRE.

DECEMBER. THRESHING AND WINNOWING.
Eleventh Century.

Calendar. MS. Cott. Jul. A. vi

SEC. V
—
THE NORMAN
CONQUEST 1068
TO 1071
—

ecclesiastics in their place. The new archbishop did much to restore discipline, and William's own efforts were no doubt partly directed by a real desire for the religious improvement of his realm.

CHAPEL IN THE TOWER OF LONDON.
Built by William the Conqueror.

“In choosing abbots and bishops,” says a contemporary, “he considered not so much men’s riches or power as their holiness and wisdom. He called together bishops and abbots and other wise counsellors in any vacancy, and by their advice inquired very carefully who was the best and wisest man, as well in divine things as in worldly, to rule the Church of God." But honest as they were, the King's reforms tended directly to the increase of the royal power. The new bishops and abbots were cut off by their foreign origin from the flocks they ruled, while their popular influence was lessened by the removal of ecclesiastical cases from shire or hundred-court, where the bishop had sat side by side with the civil magistrate, to the separate court of the bishop himself. The change was pregnant with future trouble to the Crown ; but for the moment it told mainly in removing the bishop from his traditional contact with the popular assembly, and in effacing the memory of the original equality of the religious with the civil power. The dependence of the Church on the royal power was strictly enforced. Homage was exacted from bishop as from baron. No royal tenant could be excommunicated without the King's leave. No synod could legislate without his previous assent and subsequent confirmation of its decrees. No papal letters could be received within the realm save by his permission. William firmly repudiated the claims which were now beginning to be put forward by the court of Rome. When Gregory VII. called on him to do fealty for his realm, the King sternly refused to admit the claim. "Fealty I have never willed to do, nor do I will to do it now. I have never promised it, nor do I find that my predecessors did it to yours."

But the greatest safeguard of the Crown lay in the wealth and personal power of the kings. Extensive as had been his grants to noble and soldier, William remained the greatest landowner in his realm. His rigid exaction of feudal dues added wealth to the great hoard at Winchester, which had been begun by the spoil of the conquered. But William found a more ready source of revenue in the settlement of the Jewish traders, who followed him from Normandy, and who were enabled by the royal protection to establish themselves in separate quarters or "Jewries" of the chief towns of England. The Jew had no right or citizenship in the land ; the Jewry in which he lived was, like the King's forest, exempt from the common law. He was simply the King's chattel, and his life and goods were absolutely at the King's mercy. But he was too valuable a possession to be lightly thrown away. A

SEC. V
 THE NORMAN
 CONQUEST 1068
 TO 1071

Settlement of the Jews

SEC. V
 THE NORMAN
 CONQUEST 1068
 TO 1071 royal justiciary secured law to the Jewish merchant, who had no standing-ground in the local courts ; his bonds were deposited for safety in a chamber of the royal palace at Westminster ; he was protected against the popular hatred in the free exercise of his religion, and allowed to build synagogues and to direct his own ecclesiastical affairs by means of a chief Rabbi. That the presence

EARL'S BARTON CHURCH TOWER.
 Eleventh Century.

TASEBURGH CHURCH TOWER.
 Twelfth Century.

of the Jew was, at least in the earlier years of his settlement, beneficial to the kingdom at large there can be little doubt. His arrival was the arrival of a capitalist ; and heavy as was the usury he necessarily exacted in the general insecurity of the time, his loans gave an impulse to industry such as England had never felt before. The century which followed the Conquest witnessed an outburst of architectural energy which covered the land with castles

A BANQUET

From MS. Cott. Tib. C. VI. 11th Century and cathedrals ; but castle and cathedral alike owed their existence to the loans of the Jew. His own example gave a new direction to domestic architecture. The buildings which, as at Lincoln and S. Edmundsbury, still retain their title of "Jews' Houses" were almost the first houses of stone which superseded the mere hovels of the English burghers. Nor was the influence of the Jews simply industrial. Through their connection with the Jewish schools in Spain and the East they opened a way for the revival of physical science. A Jewish medical school seems to have existed at Oxford ; Roger Bacon himself studied under English Rabbis. But to the kings the Jew was simply an engine of finance. The wealth which his industry accumulated was wrung from him whenever the Crown had need, and torture and imprisonment were resorted to if milder entreaties failed. It was the gold of the Jew that filled the royal exchequer at the outbreak of war or of revolt. It was in the Hebrew coffers that the Norman kings found strength to hold their baronage at bay.

SEC. VI
—
THE ENGLISH REVIVAL 1071
TO 1127
—

Section VI.—The English Revival, 1071—1127.

[Authorities.—Orderic and the English chroniclers, as before. Eadmer, a monk of Canterbury, in his "Historia Novorum" and his "Life of Anselm," is the chief source of information for the reign of William the Second. William of Malmesbury and Henry of Huntingdon are both contemporary authorities during that of Henry the First : the latter remains a brief but accurate annalist ; the former is the leader of a new historic school, who treat English events as part of the history of the world, and emulate classic models by a more philosophical arrangement of their materials. See for them the opening section of the next chapter. On the early history of our towns the reader may gain something from Mr. Thompson's "English Municipal History" (London, 1857) ; more from the "Charter Rolls" (published by the Record Commissioners) ; for S. Edmundsbury see "Chronicle of Jocelyn de Brakelond" (Camden Society). The records of the Cistercian Abbeys of Yorkshire in Dugdale's "Monasticon" illustrate the religious revival. Henry's administration is admirably explained for the first time by Dr. Stubbs in his "Constitutional History."]]

The Conquest was hardly over when the struggle between the baronage and the Crown began. The wisdom of William's policy in the destruction of the great earldoms which had overshadowed the throne was shown in an attempt at their restoration made by

William
and the Barons

SEC. VI
 THE ENGLISH REVIVAL 1071
 TO 1127
 1075

Roger, the son of his minister William Fitz-Osbern, and by the Breton, Ralf de Guader, whom the King had rewarded for his services at Senlac with the earldom of Norfolk. The rising was quickly suppressed, Roger thrown into prison, and Ralf driven over sea ; but the intrigues of the baronage soon found another leader in William's half-brother, the Bishop of Bayeux. Under pretence of aspiring by arms to the papacy, Bishop Odo collected money and men, but the treasure was at once seized by the royal officers, and the Bishop arrested in the midst of the court. Even at the King's bidding no officer would venture to seize on a prelate of the Church ; it was with his own hands that William was forced to effect his arrest. "I arrest not the Bishop, but the Earl of Kent," laughed the Conqueror, and Odo remained a prisoner till William's death. It was in fact this vigorous personality of William which proved the chief safeguard of his throne. "Stark he was," says the English chronicler, "to men that withstood him. Earls that did aught against his bidding he cast into bonds ; bishops he stripped of their bishopricks, abbots of their abbasies.

BUILDING.
 Eleventh Century.
MS. Cott. Claud. B. iv.

He spared not his own brother : first he was in the land, but the King cast him into bondage. If a man would live and hold his lands, need it were that he followed the King's will." But stern as his rule was, it gave peace to the land. Even amidst the sufferings which necessarily sprang from the circumstances of the Conquest itself, from the erection of castles, or the enclosure of forests, or the exactions which built up the great hoard at Winchester, Englishmen were unable to forget "the good peace he made in the land, so that a man might fare over his realm with a bosom full of gold." Strange touches of a humanity far in advance of his age contrasted with the general temper of his government. One of the strongest traits in his character was his aversion to shed blood by process of law; he formally abolished the punishment of death, and only a single execution stains the annals of his reign. An edict yet more honourable to him put an end to the slave-trade which had till then been carried on at the port of Bristol. The pitiless warrior, the stern and awful king was a tender and faithful husband, an affectionate father. The lonely silence of his bearing broke into gracious converse with pure and sacred souls like Anselm. If William was "stark" to rebel and baron, men noted that he was "mild to those that loved God."

In power as in renown the Conqueror towered high above his predecessors on the throne. The fear of the Danes, which had so long hung like a thunder-cloud over England, passed away before the host which William gathered to meet a great armament assembled by King Cnut. A mutiny dispersed the Danish fleet, and the murder of its king removed all peril from the North. Scotland, already humbled by William's invasion, was bridled by the erection of a strong fortress at Newcastle-upon-Tyne; and after penetrating with his army to the heart of Wales, the King commenced its systematic reduction by settling barons along its frontier. It was not till his closing years that his unvarying success was disturbed by a rebellion of his son Robert and a quarrel with France; as he rode down the steep street of Mantes, which he had given to the flames, his horse stumbled among the embers, and William, flung heavily against his saddle, was borne

SEC. VI
THE ENGLISH REVIVAL 1071
TO 1127
—

DIGGING.
Eleventh Century.
MS. Cott. Claud. B. iv.

The English and their Kings

1085

SEC. VI
 THE ENGLISH REVIVAL 1071
 TO 1127 Death of the Conqueror
 1087 home to Rouen to die. The sound of the minster bell woke him at dawn as he lay in the convent of St. Gervais, overlooking the city—it was the hour of prime—and stretching out his hands in prayer the Conqueror passed quietly away. With him passed the terror which had held the baronage in awe, while the severance of his dominions roused their hopes of successful resistance to the stern rule beneath which they had bowed. William bequeathed Normandy to his eldest son Robert; William, his second son, hastened with his father's ring to England, where the influence of Lanfranc at once secured him the crown. The baronage seized the opportunity to rise in arms under pretext of supporting the claims of Robert, whose weakness of character gave full scope for the growth of feudal independence, and Bishop Odo placed himself at the head of the revolt. The new King was thrown almost wholly on the loyalty of his English subjects. But the national stamp which William had given to his kingship told at once. Bishop Wulfstan of Worcester, the one surviving bishop of English blood, defeated the insurgents in the West; while the King, summoning the freemen of country and town to his host under pain of being branded as "nithing" or worthless, advanced with a large force against Rochester, where the barons were concentrated. A plague which broke out among the garrison forced them to capitulate, and as the prisoners passed through the royal army, cries of "gallows and cord" burst from the English ranks. At a later period of his reign a conspiracy was organized to place Stephen of Albemarle, a near cousin of the royal house, upon the throne; but the capture of Robert Mowbray, the Earl of Northumberland, who had placed himself at its head, and the imprisonment and exile of his fellow-conspirators, again crushed the hopes of the baronage.

The Red King
 and the Church

While the spirit of national patriotism rose to life again in this struggle of the crown against the baronage, the boldness of a single ecclesiastic revived a national opposition to the mere administrative despotism which now pressed heavily on the land. If William the Red inherited much of his father's energy as well as his policy towards the conquered English, he inherited none of his moral grandeur. His profligacy and extravagance soon exhausted the royal hoard, and the death of Lanfranc left him free to fill it at the expense of the Church. During the vacancy of a see or abbey its revenues went to the royal treasury, and so steadily did William refuse to appoint successors to the prelates whom death removed, that at the close of his reign one archbishoprick, four bishopricks, and eleven abbeys were found to be without pastors. The see of Canterbury itself remained vacant till a dangerous illness frightened the king into the promotion of Anselm, who happened at the time to be in England on the business of his house.

The Abbot of Bec was dragged to the royal couch and the cross forced into his hands, but William had no sooner recovered from his sickness than he found himself face to face with an opponent whose meek and loving temper rose into firmness and grandeur when it fronted the tyranny of the King. The Conquest, as we have seen, had robbed the Church of all moral power as the representative of the higher national interests against a brutal despotism by placing it in a position of mere dependence on the Crown ; and though the struggle between William and the Archbishop turned for the most part on points which have no direct bearing on our history, the boldness of Anselm's attitude not only broke the tradition of ecclesiastical servitude, but infused through the nation at large a new spirit of independence. The real character of the contest appears in the Primate's answer, when his remonstrances against the lawless exactions from the Church were met by a demand for a present on

SEC. VI
—
THE ENGLISH REVIVAL 1071
TO 1127
—

Anselm
Archbishop 1093

SEAL OF S. ANSELM.
Ducarel, "Anglo-Norman Antiquities."

SEC. VI
 THE ENGLISH REVIVAL 1071
 TO 1127 his own promotion, and his first offer of five hundred pounds was contemptuously refused. "Treat me as a free man," Anselm replied, "and I devote myself and all that I have to your service, but if you treat me as a slave you shall have neither me nor mine." A burst of the Red King's fury drove the Archbishop from court, and he finally decided to quit the country, but his example had not been lost, and the close of William's reign found a new spirit of freedom in England with which the greatest of the Conqueror's sons was glad to make terms.

England
 and Henry
 the First

As a soldier the Red King was little inferior to his father. Normandy had been pledged to him by his brother Robert in exchange for a sum which enabled the Duke to march in the first Crusade for the delivery of the Holy Land, and a rebellion at Le Mans was subdued by the fierce energy with which William flung himself at the news of it into the first boat he found, and crossed the Channel in face of a storm. "Kings never drown," he replied contemptuously to the remonstrances of his followers. Homage was again wrested from Malcolm by a march to the Firth of Forth, and the subsequent death of that king threw Scotland into a disorder which enabled an army under Eadgar Ætheling to establish Eadgar, the son of Margaret, as an English feudatory on the throne. In Wales William was less triumphant, and the terrible losses inflicted on the heavy Norman cavalry in the fastnesses of Snowdon forced him to fall back on the slower but wiser policy of the Conqueror. Triumph and defeat alike ended in a strange and tragical close; the Red King was found dead by peasants in a glade of the New Forest, with the arrow either of a hunter or an assassin in his breast. Robert was still on his return from the Holy Land, where his bravery had redeemed much of his earlier ill-fame, and the English crown was at once seized by his younger brother Henry, in spite of the opposition of the baronage, who clung to the Duke of Normandy and the union of their estates on both sides the Channel under a single ruler. Their attitude threw Henry, as it had thrown Rufus, on the support of the English, and the two great measures which followed his coronation, his grant of a charter, and his marriage with Matilda, mark the new relation which was thus brought about between the people and their King. Henry's Charter is important, not merely as a direct precedent for the Death

 of the Red King 1100

Henry's
 Charter

Great Charter of John, but as the first limitation which had been imposed on the despotism established by the Conquest. The "evil customs" by which the Red King had enslaved and plundered the Church were explicitly renounced in it, the unlimited demands made by both the Conqueror and his son on the baronage exchanged for customary fees, while the rights of the people itself, though recognized more vaguely, were not forgotten. The barons were held to do justice to their under-tenants and to renounce tyrannical exactions from them, the King promising to restore order and the "law of Eadward," the old constitution of the realm, with the changes which his father had introduced. His marriage gave a significance to these promises which the meanest English péasant could understand. Edith, or Matilda, was the daughter of King Malcolm of Scotland and of Margaret, the sister of Eadgar Ætheling. She had been brought up in the nunnery of Romsey, where her aunt Christina was a nun, and the veil which she had taken there formed an obstacle to her union with the King which was only removed by the wisdom of Anselm. The Archbishop's recall had been one of Henry's first acts after his accession, and Matilda appeared before his court to tell her tale in words of passionate earnestness. She had been veiled in her childhood, she asserted, only to save her from the insults of the rude soldiery who infested the land, had flung the veil from her again and again, and had yielded at last to the unwomanly taunts, the actual blows of her aunt. "As often as

GREAT SEAL OF HENRY I.

SEC. VI
THE ENGLISH REVIVAL 1071
TO 1127

SEC. VI

THE ENGLISH REVIVAL 1071
TO 1127
—

Henry's Marriage

I stood in her presence," the girl pleaded, "I wore the veil, trembling as I wore it with indignation and grief. But as soon as I could get out of her sight I used to snatch it from my head, fling it on the ground, and trample it under foot. That was the way, and none other, in which I was veiled." Anselm at once declared her free from conventual bonds, and the shout of the English multitude when he set the crown on Matilda's brow drowned the murmur of Churchman or of baron. The taunts of the Norman nobles, who nicknamed the King and his spouse "Godric and Godgifu," were lost in the joy of the people at large. For the first time since the Conquest an English sovereign sat on the English throne. The blood of Cerdic and Ælfred was to blend itself with that of Hrolf and the Conqueror. Henceforth it was impossible that the two peoples should remain parted from each other; so quick indeed was their union that the very name of Norman had passed away in half a century, and at the accession of Henry's grandson it was impossible to distinguish between the descendants of the conquerors and those of the conquered at Senlac.

The English
towns

We can dimly trace the progress of this blending of the two races together in the case of the burgher population in the towns.

One immediate result of the Conquest had been a great immigration into England from the Continent. A peaceful invasion of MILKING AND CHURN, A.D. 1130-1174.

MS. Trin. Coll. Camb. R. 17, 1.

the industrial and trading classes of Normandy followed quick on the conquest of the Norman soldiery. Every Norman noble as he quartered himself upon English lands, every Norman abbot as he entered his English cloister, gathered French artists or French domestics around his new castle or his new church. Around the Abbey of Battle, for instance, which William had founded on the site of his great victory, "Gilbert the Foreigner, Gilbert the Weaver,

SEC. VI
—
THE ENGLISH REVIVAL 1071
TO 1127
—

WEAVING, A.D. 1130-1174.
MS. Trin. Coll. Camb. R. 17, 1.

Benet the Steward, Hugh the Secretary, Baldwin the Tailor," mixed with the English tenantry. More especially was this the case with the capital. Long before the landing of William, the Normans had had mercantile establishments in London. Such settlements however naturally formed nothing more than a trading colony; but London had no sooner submitted to the Conqueror than "many of the citizens of Rouen and Caen passed over thither, preferring to be dwellers in this city, inasmuch as it was fitter for their trading and better stored with the merchandize in which they were wont to traffic." In some cases, as at Norwich, the French colony isolated itself in a separate French town, side by side with the English borough. But in London it seems to have taken at once the position of a governing class. Gilbert Beket, the father of the famous archbishop, was believed in later days to have been one of the portreeves of London, the predecessors of its mayors; he held in Stephen's time a large property in

SEC. VI
 THE ENGLISH REVIVAL 1071
 TO 1127 houses within the walls, and a proof of his civic importance was preserved in the annual visit of each newly-elected chief magistrate to his tomb in the little chapel which he had founded in the churchyard of S. Paul's. Yet Gilbert was one of the Norman strangers

LOOM FROM FÆROE ISLES.
 Montelius, "Civilization of Sweden."

who followed in the wake of the Conqueror ; he was by birth a burgher of Rouen, as his wife was of a burgher family from Caen.

It was partly to this infusion of foreign blood, partly no doubt to the long internal peace and order secured by the Norman rule, that the English towns owed the wealth and importance to which they attained during the reign of Henry the First. In the silent growth and elevation of the English people the boroughs led the way ; unnoticed and despised by prelate and noble they had alone preserved or won back again the full tradition of Teutonic liberty. The rights of self-government, of free speech in free meeting, of equal justice by one's equals, were brought safely across the ages of tyranny by the burghers and shopkeepers of the towns. In the quiet, quaintly-named streets, in town-mead and market-place, in

SEC. VI
 THE ENGLISH REVIVAL 1071
 TO 1127

BUILDING.
 Eleventh Century.
 MS. Harl. 603.

the lord's mill beside the stream, in the bell that swung out its summons to the crowded borough-mote, in merchant-gild and church-gild and craft-gild, lay the life of Englishmen who were doing more than knight and baron to make England what she is, the life of their home and their trade, of their sturdy battle with oppression, their steady, ceaseless struggle for right and freedom. It is difficult to trace the steps by which borough after borough won its freedom. The bulk of them were situated in the royal demesne, and, like other tenants, their customary rents were collected and justice administered by a royal officer. Amongst our towns London stood chief, and the charter which Henry granted it became the model for the rest. The King yielded the citizens the right of justice: every townsman could claim to be tried by his fellow-townsmen in the town-court or hustings, whose sessions took place every week. They were subject only to the old English trial by oath, and exempt from the trial by battle which the Normans had introduced. Their trade was protected from toll or exaction over the length and breadth of the land. The King however still nominated in London as elsewhere the portreeve, or magistrate of the town, nor were the citizens as yet united together in a commune or corporation; but an imperfect civic organization existed in the "wards" or quarters of the town, each governed by its own alderman, and in the "gilds" or voluntary associations of merchants or traders which insured order and mutual protection for their members. Loose too as these bonds may seem, they were drawn firmly together by the older English traditions of freedom which the towns preserved. In London, for instance, the burgesses gathered in town-mote when the bell swung out from S. Paul's to deliberate freely on their own affairs under the presidency of their alderman. Here too they mustered in arms if danger threatened the city, and delivered the city banner to their captain, the Norman baron Fitz-Walter, to lead them against the enemy. Few boroughs had as yet attained to power such as this, but charter after charter during Henry's reign raised the townsmen of boroughs from mere traders, wholly at the mercy of their lord, into customary tenants, who had purchased their freedom by a fixed rent, regulated their own trade, and enjoyed exemption from all but their own justice.

GROUP ROUND A TABLE.
 Eleventh Century.
 MS. Harl. 603.

The advance of towns which had grown up not on the royal domain but around abbey or castle was slower and more difficult. The story of S. Edmundsbury shows how gradual was the transition from pure serfage to an imperfect freedom. Much that had been plough-land in the time of the Confessor was covered with houses under the Norman rule. The building of the great abbey-church drew its craftsmen and masons to mingle with the ploughmen and reapers of the Abbot's domain. The troubles of the time helped here as elsewhere the progress of the town; serfs, fugitives from justice or their lord, the trader, the Jew, naturally sought

SEC. VI
 —
 THE ENGLISH REVIVAL 1071
 TO 1127
 —

S. Edmunds-bury

SEC. VI
 —
 THE ENGLISH REVIVAL 1071
 TO 1127 shelter under the strong hand of S. Edmund. But the settlers were wholly at the Abbot's mercy. Not a settler but was bound to pay his pence to the Abbot's treasury, to plough a rood of his land, to reap in his harvest-field, to fold his sheep in the Abbey folds, to help bring the annual catch of eels from the Abbey

NORMAN TOWER, S. EDMUNDSBURY.
 Built 1067—1097.

waters. Within the four crosses that bounded the Abbot's domain land and water were his ; the cattle of the townsmen paid for their pasture on the common ; if the fullers refused the loan of their cloth, the cellarer would refuse the use of the stream, and seize their cloths wherever he found them. No toll might be levied from tenants of the Abbey farm, and customers had to wait before shop and stall till the buyers of the Abbot had had the pick of the market. There was little chance of redress, for if burghers complained in folkmote, it was before the Abbot's officers that its meeting was held ; if they appealed to the alderman, he was the Abbot's nominee, and received the horn, the symbol of his office, at the Abbot's hands.

Like all the greater revolutions of society, the advance from this mere serfage was a silent one ; indeed its more galling instances of oppression seem to have slipped unconsciously away. Some, like the eel-fishing, were commuted for an easy rent ; others,

SEC. VI
 THE ENGLISH REVIVAL 1071
 TO 1127

ABBOT'S BRIDGE, S. EDMUNDSBURY.
 Early Thirteenth Century.

like the slavery of the fullers and the toll of flax, simply disappeared. By usage, by omission, by downright forgetfulness, here by a little struggle, there by a present to a needy abbot, the town won freedom. But progress was not always unconscious, and one incident in the history of S. Edmundsbury is remarkable, not merely as indicating the advance of law, but yet more as marking the part which a new moral sense of man's right to equal justice was to play in the general advance of the realm. Rude as the borough was, it had preserved its right of meeting in full assembly of the townsmen for government and law. Justice was administered in presence of the burgesses, and the accused acquitted or con-

SEC. VI
 THE ENGLISH REVIVAL 1071
 TO 1127 demned by the oath of his neighbours. Without the borough bounds however the system of the Norman judicature prevailed ; and the rural tenants who did suit and service at the Cellarer's court were subject to the decision of the trial by battle. The execution of a farmer named Ketel, who was subject to this feudal jurisdiction, brought the two systems into vivid contrast. He seems to have been guiltless of the crime laid to his charge, but the duel went against him, and he was hanged just without the gates. The taunts of the townsmen woke his fellow-farmers to a sense of wrong. "Had Ketel been a dweller within the borough," said the burgesses, "he would have got his acquittal from the oaths of his neighbours, as our liberty is ;" and even the monks were moved to a decision that their tenants should enjoy equal liberty and justice with the townsmen. The franchise of the town was extended to the rural possessions of the Abbey without it ; the farmers "came to the toll-house, were written in the alderman's roll, and paid the town penny."

MEN IN PRISON AND IN STOCKS.

A.D. 1130-1174.

MS. Trin. Coll. Camb. R. 17, 1.

The Religious Revival

The moral revolution which events like this indicate was backed by a religious revival which forms a marked feature in the reign of Henry the First. Pious, learned, and energetic as the bishops of William's appointment had been, they were not Englishmen. Till the reign of Henry the First no Englishman occupied an English see. In language, in manner, in sympathy, the higher clergy were completely severed from the lower priesthood and the people, and the severance went far to paralyze the constitutional influence of the Church. Anselm stood alone against Rufus, and when Anselm was gone no voice of ecclesiastical freedom broke the silence of the reign of Henry the First. But at the close of Henry's reign and throughout that of Stephen, England was stirred by the first of those great religious movements which it was afterwards to GUTHLAC RECEIVING THE TONSURE.

GUTHLAC SAILING TO CROWLAND.

GUTHLAC BUILDING HIS ORATORY.

ÆTHELBALD VISITING GUTHLAC.

SCENES FROM LIFE OF S. GUTHLAC.
 Twelfth Century.
MS. Harl. Koll. Y. vi.

SEC. VI
 THE ENGLISH REVIVAL 1071
 TO 1127 experience in the preaching of the Friars, the Lollardism of Wyclif, Memoriale ayarid Regine. s. hospitalis q. lond

HOSPITAL IN LONDON, FOUNDED BY QUEEN MATILDA, c. 1101.

Drawn by Matthew Paris.

MS. C. C. C. Camb. xvi.

the Reformation, the Puritan enthusiasm, and the mission work of the Wesleys. Everywhere in town and country men banded themselves together for prayer; hermits flocked to the woods; noble and churl welcomed the austere Cistercians, a reformed outshoot of the Benedictine order, as they spread over the moors and forests of the North. A new spirit of devotion woke the slumber of the religious houses, and penetrated alike to the home of the noble Walter de l'Espece at Rievaulx, or of the trader Gilbert Beket in Cheapside. London took its full share in the revival. The city was proud of its religion, its thirteen conventual and more than a hundred parochial churches. The new impulse changed its very aspect. In the midst of the city Bishop Richard busied himself with the vast cathedral church of S. Paul which Bishop Maurice had begun; barges came up the river with stone from Caen for the great arches that moved the popular wonder,

SEAL OF S. BARTHOLOMEW'S PRIORY, SMITHFIELD.

Public Record Office.

while street and lane were being levelled to make space for its famous churchyard. Rahere, the King's minstrel, raised the Priory of S. Bartholomew beside Smithfield. Alfune built S. Giles's at Cripplegate. The old English Cnichtenagild surrendered their soke of Aldgate as a site for the new priory of Holy Trinity. The tale of this house paints admirably the temper of the citizens at the time. Its founder, Prior Norman, had built church and

SEC. VI
—
THE ENGLISH REVIVAL 1071
TO 1127
—

INTERIOR OF S. SEPULCHRE CHURCH, CAMBRIDGE.
Built c. 1114-1130.

cloister and bought books and vestments in so liberal a fashion that at last no money remained to buy bread. The canons were at their last gasp when many of the city folk, looking into the refectory as they paced round the cloister in their usual Sunday procession, saw the tables laid but not a single loaf on them. "Here is a fine set-out," cried the citizens, "but where is the bread to come from?" The women present vowed to bring a loaf every Sunday, and there was soon bread enough and to spare for the priory and its priests. We see the strength of the new movement in the new class of ecclesiastics that it forced on the

SEC. VI
 THE ENGLISH REVIVAL 1071
 TO 1127 stage ; men like Anselm or John of Salisbury, or the two great prelates who followed one another after Henry's death in the see of Canterbury, Theobald and Thomas, drew whatever influence they wielded from a belief in their holiness of life and unselfishness of aim. The paralysis of the Church ceased as the new impulse bound the prelacy and people together, and its action, when at the end of Henry's reign it started into a power strong enough to save England from anarchy, has been felt in our history ever since.

ORGAN. A.D. 1130-1174.
MS. Trin. Coll. Camb. R. 17, 1.

Henry's
 Administration

From this revival of English feeling Henry himself stood jealously aloof ; but the enthusiasm which his marriage had excited enabled him to defy the claims of his brother and the disaffection of his nobles. Robert landed at Portsmouth to find himself face to face with an English army which Anselm's summons had gathered round the King ; and his retreat left Henry free to deal sternly with the rebel barons. Robert of Belesme, the son of Roger of Montgomery, was now their chief ; but 60,000 English footmen followed the King through the rough passes which led to Shrewsbury, and an early surrender alone saved Robert's life. Master of his own realm and enriched by the confiscated lands of the revolted baronage, Henry crossed into Normandy, where the misgovernment of Robert had alienated the clergy and trades, and where the outrages of the Norman nobles forced the more peaceful classes to call the King to their aid. On the field of Tenchebray his forces met those of the Duke, and a decisive English victory on Norman soil avenged the shame of Hastings. The conquered duchy became a dependency of the English crown, and Henry's energies were frittered away through a quarter of a century in crushing its revolts, the hostility of the French, and the efforts of his nephew, William the son of Robert, to regain the crown which his father had lost at Tenchebray. In England, however, all was peace. The vigorous administration of Henry the First completed in fullest detail the system of government which the Conqueror had sketched. The vast estates which had fallen to the crown through revolt and forfeiture were granted out to new men dependent on royal favour. On the ruins of the great feudatories whom he had crushed the King built up a class of lesser nobles, whom the older barons of the Conquest looked down on in scorn, but who formed a counterbalancing force and furnished a class of useful administrators whom Henry employed as his sheriffs and judges. A new organization of justice and finance bound the kingdom together under the royal administration. The clerks of the Royal Chapel were formed into a body of secretaries or royal ministers, whose head bore the title of Chancellor. Above them stood the Justiciar, or lieutenant-general of the kingdom, who in the frequent absence of the King acted as Regent, and whose staff, selected from the barons connected with the royal household, were formed into a Supreme Court of the realm. The King's Court, as this was called, permanently represented the whole court of royal vassals, which had hitherto been summoned thrice in the year. As the royal council, it revised and registered laws, and its "counsel and consent," though merely formal, preserved the principle of the older popular legislation. As a court of justice it formed the highest court of appeal; it could call up any suit from a lower tribunal on the application of a suitor, while the union of several sheriffdoms under some of its members connected it closely with the local courts. As a financial body, its chief work lay in the assessment and collection of the revenue. In this capacity it

SEC. VI
 THE ENGLISH REVIVAL 1071
 TO 1127

SEC. VI
 —
 THE ENGLISH REVIVAL
 —
 1071
 TO 1127
 —

took the name of the Court of Exchequer from the chequered table, much like a chess-board, at which it sat, and on which accounts were rendered. In their financial capacity its justices became "barons of the Exchequer." Twice every year the sheriff of each county appeared before these barons and rendered the sum of the fixed rent from royal domains, the Danegeld or land tax, the fines

OFFICERS RECEIVING AND WEIGHING COIN AT THE EXCHEQUER.

A.D. 1130 1174.

MS. Trin. Coll. Camb. R. 17, 1.

of the local courts, the feudal aids from the baronial estates, which formed the chief part of the royal revenue. Local disputes respecting these payments or the assessment of the town-rents were settled by a detachment of barons from the court who made the circuit of the shires, and whose fiscal visitations led to the judicial visitations, the "judges' circuits," which still form so marked a feature in our legal system.

The White
 Ship

From this work of internal reform Henry's attention was called suddenly by one terrible loss to the question of the succession to the throne. His son William "the Ætheling," as the English fondly styled the child of their own Matilda, had with a crowd of nobles accompanied the King on his return from Normandy; but the White Ship in which he had embarked lingered behind the rest of the royal fleet while the young nobles, excited with wine, hung over the ship's side and chased away with taunts the priest who came to give the customary benediction. At last the guards of the King's treasure pressed the vessel's departure, and, driven by the arms of fifty rowers, it swept swiftly out to sea. All at once the ship's side struck on a rock at the mouth of the harbour, and in an instant it sank beneath the waves. One terrible cry, ringing through the stillness of the night, was heard by the royal fleet; but it was not till the morning that the fatal news reached the King. He fell unconscious to the ground, and rose never to smile again. Henry had no other son, and the whole circle of his foreign foes closed round him the more fiercely that the son of Robert was now his natural heir. The King hated William, while he loved Matilda, the daughter who still remained to him, who had been married to the Emperor Henry the Fifth, and whose husband's death now restored her to her father. He recognized her as his heir, though the succession of a woman seemed strange to the feudal baronage; nobles and priests were forced to swear allegiance to her as their future mistress, and Henry affianced her to the son of the one foe he really feared, Count Fulk of Anjou.

SEC. VI
 —
 THE ENGLISH REVIVAL 1071
 TO 1127
 —
Wreck of the White Ship
 1120

Section VII.—England and Anjou, 870—1154

[Authorities.—The chief documents for Angevin history have been collected in the "Chroniques d'Anjou," published by the Historical Society of France (Paris, 1856-1871). The best known of these is the "Gesta Consulum," a compilation of the twelfth century (given also by D'Achery, "Spicilegium," 4to. vol. x. p. 534), in which the earlier romantic traditions are simply dressed up into historical shape by copious quotations from the French historians. Save for the reigns of Geoffry Martel, and Fulk of Jerusalem, it is nearly valueless. The short autobiography of Fulk Rechin is the most authentic memorial of the earlier Angevin history; and much can be gleaned from the verbose life of Geoffry the Handsome by John of Marmoutier. For England, Orderic and the Chronicle die out in the midst of Stephen's reign; here, too, end William of Malmesbury, Huntingdon, the "Gesta Stephani," a record in great detail by one of Stephen's clerks, and the Hexham Chroniclers, who are most valuable for its opening (published by Mr. Raine for the Surtees Society). The blank in our historical literature extends over the first years of Henry the Second. The lives and letters of Beket have been industriously collected and published by Canon Robertson in the Rolls Series.]

To understand the history of England under its Angevin rulers, we must first know something of the Angevins themselves. The character and the policy of Henry the Second and his sons were

The Counts of Anjou

SEC. VII ENGLAND
 AND ANJOU 870
 TO 1154 as much a heritage of their race as the broad lands of Anjou. The fortunes of England were being slowly wrought out in every incident of the history of the Counts, as the descendants of a Breton woodman became masters not of Anjou only, but of Touraine, Maine, and Poitou, of Gascony and Auvergne, of Aquitaine and Normandy, and sovereigns at last of the great realm which Normandy had won. The legend of the father of their race carries us back to the times of our own Ælfred, when the Danes were ravaging along Loire as they ravaged along Thames. In the heart of the Breton border, in the debateable land between France and Brittany, dwelt Tortulf the Forester, half-brigand, half-hunter as the gloomy days went, living in free, outlaw-fashion in the woods about Rennes. Tortulf had learned in his rough forest school "how to strike the foe, to sleep on the bare ground, to bear hunger and toil, summer's heat and winter's frost, how to fear nothing save ill-fame." Following King Charles the Bald in his struggle with the Danes, the woodman won broad lands along Loire, and his son Ingelger, who had swept the northmen from Touraine and the land to the west, which they had burned and wasted into a vast solitude, became the first Count of Anjou. But the tale of Tortulf and Ingelger is a mere creation of some twelfth century jongleur, and the earliest Count whom history recognizes is Fulk the Red. Fulk attached himself to the Dukes of France who were now drawing nearer to the throne, and received from them in guerdon the county of Anjou. The story of his son is a story of peace, breaking like a quiet idyll the war-storms of his house. Alone of his race Fulk the Good waged no wars: his delight was to sit in the choir of Tours and to be called "Canon." One Martinmas eve Fulk was singing there in clerkly guise when the king, Lewis d'Outremer, entered the church. "He sings like a priest," laughed the King, as his nobles pointed mockingly to the figure of the Count-Canon; but Fulk was ready with his reply. "Know, my lord," wrote the Count of Anjou, "that a king unlearned is a crowned ass." Fulk was in fact no priest, but a busy ruler, governing, enforcing peace, and carrying justice to every corner of the wasted land. To him alone of his race men gave the title of "the Good."

Himself in character little more than a bold dashing soldier,

REMAINS OF CLOISTER OF ABBEY OF S. AUBIN, ANGERS.
Built by Geoffry Grey-gown and Fulk the Black.

SEC. VII ENGLAND,
 AND ANJOU 870
 TO 1154
 Fulk the Black 987-1040

Fulk's son, Geoffry Grey-gown, sank almost into a vassal of his powerful neighbours, the Counts of Blois and Champagne. The vassalage was roughly shaken off by his successor. Fulk Nerra, Fulk the Black, is the greatest of the Angevins, the first in whom we can trace that marked type of character which their house was to preserve with a fatal constancy through two hundred years. He was without natural affection. In his youth he burnt a wife at the stake, and legend told how he led her to her doom decked out in his gayest attire. In his old age he waged his bitterest war against his son, and exacted from him when vanquished a humiliation which men reserved for the deadliest of their foes. "You are conquered, you are conquered!" shouted the old man in fierce exultation, as Geoffry, bridled and saddled like a beast of burden, crawled for pardon to his father's feet. In Fulk first appeared the low type of superstition which startled even superstitious ages in the early Plantagenets. Robber as he was of Church lands, and contemptuous of ecclesiastical censures, the fear of the judgment drove Fulk to the Holy Sepulchre. Barefoot and with the strokes of the scourge falling heavily on his shoulders, the Count had himself dragged by a halter through the streets of Jerusalem, and courted the doom of martyrdom by his wild outcries of penitence. He rewarded the fidelity of Herbert of Le Mans, whose aid saved him from utter ruin, by entrapping him into captivity and robbing him of his lands. He secured the terrified friendship of the French king by despatching twelve assassins to cut down before his eyes the minister who had troubled it. Familiar as the age was with treason and rapine and blood, it recoiled from the cool cynicism of his crimes, and believed the wrath of Heaven to have been revealed against the union of the worst forms of evil in Fulk the Black. But neither the wrath of Heaven nor the curses of men broke with a single mishap the fifty years of his success.

The greatness of Anjou

At his accession Anjou was the least important of the greater provinces of France. At his death in 1040 it stood, if not in extent, at least in real power, first among them all. Cool-headed, clear-sighted, quick to resolve, quicker to strike, Fulk's career was one long series of victories over all his rivals. He was a consummate general, and he had the gift of personal bravery, which was denied to some of his greatest descendants. There was a moment

DURTAL.

SEC. VII ENGLAND
AND ANJOU 870
TO 1154

in the first of his battles when the day seemed lost for Anjou ; a feigned retreat of the Bretons had drawn the Angevin horsemen into a line of hidden pitfalls, and the Count himself was flung heavily to the ground. Dragged from the medley of men and horses, he swept down almost singly on the foe "as a storm-wind" (so rang the pæan of the Angevins) "sweeps down on the thick corn-rows," and the field was won. To these qualities of the warrior he added a power of political organization, a capacity for far-reaching combinations, a faculty of statesmanship, which became the heritage of the Angevins, and lifted them as high above the intellectual level of the rulers of their time as their shameless wickedness degraded them below the level of man. His overthrow of Brittany on the field of Conquereux was followed by the gradual absorption of Southern Touraine, while his restless activity covered the land with castles and abbeys. The very spirit of the Black Count seems still to frown from the dark tower of Durtal on the sunny valley of the Loir. A victory at Pontlevoi crushed the rival house of Blois ; the seizure of Saumur completed his conquests in the south, while Northern Touraine was won bit by bit till only Tours resisted the Angevin. The treacherous seizure of its Count, Herbert Wake-dog, left Maine at his mercy ere the old man bequeathed his unfinished work to his son. As a warrior Geoffry Martel was hardly inferior to his father. A decisive victory left Poitou at his mercy, a second wrested Tours from the Count of Blois ; and the seizure of Le Mans brought him to the Norman border. Here however his advance was checked by the genius of William the Conqueror, and with his death the greatness of Anjou seemed for the time to have come to an end.

The Angevin
Marriage

Stripped of Maine by the Normans and weakened by internal dissensions, the weak administration of the next count, Fulk Rechin, left Anjou powerless against its rivals. It woke to fresh energy with the accession of his son, Fulk of Jerusalem. Now urging the turbulent Norman nobles to revolt, now supporting Robert's son William against his uncle, offering himself throughout as the loyal supporter of France, which was now hemmed in on all sides by the forces of the English king and of his allies the Counts of Blois and Champagne, Fulk was the one enemy whom Henry the First really feared. It was to disarm his restless hostility that the King

SEC. VII ENGLAND
 AND ANJOU 870
 TO 1154

EFFIGY OF GEOFFRY PLANTAGENET, FROM HIS TOMB AT LE MANS.

gave to his son, Geoffry the Handsome, the hand of his daughter Matilda. No marriage could have been more unpopular, and the

SEC. VII ENGLAND
AND ANJOU 870
TO 1154 secrecy with which it was effected was held by the barons as freeing them from the oath which they had sworn ; for no baron, if he was without sons, could give a husband to his daughter save by his lord's consent, and by a strained analogy the nobles contended that their own assent was necessary to the marriage of Matilda. A more pressing danger lay in the greed of her husband Geoffry, who from his habit of wearing the common broom of Anjou (the planta genista) in his helmet had acquired, in addition to his surname of "the Handsome," the more famous title of "Plantagenet." His claims ended at last in intrigues with the Norman nobles, and Henry hurried to the border to meet an expected invasion ; but the plot broke down at his presence, the Angevins retired, and the old man withdrew to the forest of Lions to die.

Death of Henry 1135

Stephen of Blois

"God give him," wrote the Archbishop of Rouen from Henry's death-bed, "the peace he loved." With him indeed closed the long peace of the Norman rule. An outburst of anarchy followed on the news of his departure, and in the midst of the turmoil Earl Stephen, his nephew, appeared at the gates of London. Stephen was a son of the Conqueror's daughter, Adela, who had married a Count of Blois ; he had been brought up at the English court, and his claim as nearest male heir, save his brother, of the Conqueror's blood (for his cousin, the son of Robert, had fallen in Flanders) was supported by his personal popularity. Mere swordsman as he was, his good-humour, his generosity, his very prodigality made him a favourite with all. No noble however had as yet ventured to join him, nor had any town opened its gates when London poured out to meet him with uproarious welcome. Neither barons nor prelates were present to constitute a National Council, but the great city did not hesitate to take their place. The voice of her citizens had long been accepted as representative of the popular assent in the election of a king ; but it marks the progress of English independence under Henry that London now claimed of itself the right of election. Undismayed by the absence of the hereditary counsellors of the crown, its "Aldermen and wise folk gathered together the folkmoot, and these providing at their own will for the good of the realm, unanimously resolved to choose a king." The solemn deliberation ended in the choice of Stephen ; the citizens swore to defend the King with money and blood, Stephen swore to apply his whole strength to the pacification and good government of the realm.

If London was true to her oath, Stephen was false to his. The nineteen years of his reign are years of a misrule and disorder unknown in our history. Stephen had been acknowledged even by the partizans of Matilda, but his weakness and prodigality soon gave room to feudal revolt. In 1138 a rising of the barons, planned by Earl Robert of Gloucester, in southern and western England was aided by the King of Scots, who poured his forces over the northern border. Stephen himself marched on the western rebels, and left them few strongholds save Bristol. The pillage and cruelties of the wild tribes of Galloway and the Highlands roused the spirit of the north; baron and freeman gathered at York round Archbishop Thurstan, and marched to the field of Northallerton to await the foe. The sacred banners of S. Cuthbert of Durham, S. Peter of York, S. John of Beverley, and S. Wilfrid of Ripon hung from a pole fixed in a four-wheeled car which stood in the centre of the host. "I who wear no

SEC. VII

ENGLAND

AND ANJOU

870

TO

1154

Stephen
and the baronage

Battle of the Standard 1138

THE STANDARD, 1138.
MS. Arundel 150.
Early Thirteenth Century.

armour," shouted the chief of the Galwegians, "will go as far this day as any one with breastplate of mail;" his men charged with wild shouts of "Albin, Albin," and were followed by the Norman knighthood of the Lowlands. The rout, however, was complete; the fierce hordes dashed in vain against the close

SEC. VII

ENGLAND
AND ANJOU 870
TO 1154

English ranks around the Standard, and the whole army fled in confusion to Carlisle.

But Stephen had few kingly qualities save that of a soldier's bravery, and the realm soon began to slip from his grasp. Released from the stern hand of Henry, the barons fortified their castles, and their example was necessarily followed, in self-defence, by the great prelates and nobles who had acted as ministers to the late King. Roger, Bishop of Salisbury, the justiciar, and his son Roger the Chancellor, were carried away by the panic. They fortified their castles, and appeared at court followed by a strong force at their back. The weak violence of the king's temper suddenly broke out. He seized Roger with his son the Chancellor and his nephew the Bishop of Lincoln at Oxford, and forced them to surrender their strongholds. Shame broke the justiciar's heart; he died at the close of the year, and his nephew Nigel of Ely, the Treasurer, was driven from the realm. The fall of Roger's house shattered the whole system of government. The King's violence, while it cost him the support of the clergy, opened the way for Matilda's landing in 1139

England; and the country was soon divided between the adherents of the two rivals, the West supporting Matilda, London and the East Stephen. A defeat at 1141

Lincoln left the latter a captive in the hands of his enemies, while Matilda was received throughout the land as its "Lady." But the disdain with which she repulsed the claim of London to the enjoyment of its older privileges called its burghers to arms, and her resolve to hold Stephen a prisoner roused his party again to life. Flying to Oxford, she was besieged there by Stephen, who had obtained his release ; but she escaped in white robes by a postern, and crossing the river unobserved on the ice, made her way to Abingdon. Six years later she returned to Normandy. The war had in fact become a mere chaos of pillage and bloodshed. The outrages of the feudal baronage showed from what horrors the rule of the Norman kings had saved England. No more ghastly picture of a nation's misery has ever been painted than that which closes the English Chronicle, whose last accents falter out amidst the horrors of the time. "They hanged up men by their feet and smoked them with foul smoke. Some were hanged up by their thumbs, others by the head, and burning things were hung on to their feet. They put knotted strings about men's heads and writhed them till they went into the brain. They put men into prisons where adders and snakes and toads were crawling, and so they tormented them. Some they put into a chest short and narrow and not deep, and that had sharp stones within, and forced men therein so that they broke all their limbs. In many of the castles were hateful and grim things called rachenteges, which two or three men had enough to do to carry. It was thus made: it was fastened to a beam and had a sharp iron to go about a man's neck and throat, so that he might noways sit, or lie, or sleep, but he bore all the iron. Many thousands they starved with hunger."

GREAT SEAL OF EMPRESS MATILDA.

England was rescued from this feudal anarchy by the efforts of the Church. In the early part of Stephen's reign his brother Henry, the Bishop of Winchester, acting as Papal Legate for the realm, had striven to supply the absence of any royal or national authority by convening synods of bishops, and by asserting the moral right of the Church to declare sovereigns unworthy of the throne. The compact between king and people which became a part of constitutional law in the Charter of Henry had gathered new force in the Charter of Stephen, but its legitimate consequence in the responsibility of the crown for the execution of the compact was first drawn out by these ecclesiastical councils. From their alternate depositions of Stephen and Matilda flowed the after depositions of Edward and Richard, and the solemn act by which the succession was changed in the case of James. Extravagant and unauthorized as their expression of it may appear, they expressed the right of a

SEC. VII
 ENGLAND
 AND ANJOU 870
 TO 1154 1148

England
 and the Church

SEC. VII ENGLAND
AND ANJOU 870
TO 1154

Thomas of London

nation to good government. Henry of Winchester, however, "half monk, half soldier," as he was called, possessed too little religious influence to wield a really spiritual power; it was only at the close of Stephen's reign that the nation really found a moral leader in Theobald, the Archbishop of Canterbury. "To the Church," Thomas justly said afterwards, with the proud consciousness of having been Theobald's right hand, "Henry owed his crown and England her deliverance." Thomas was the son of Gilbert Beket, the portreeve of London, the site of whose house is still marked by the Mercers' chapel in Cheapside. His mother Rohese was a type of the devout woman of her day; she weighed her boy each year on his birthday against money, clothes, and provisions which she gave to the poor. Thomas grew up amidst the Norman barons and clerks who frequented his father's house with a genial freedom of character tempered by the Norman refinement; he passed from the school of Merton to the University of Paris, and returned to fling himself into the life of the young nobles of the time. Tall, handsome, bright-eyed, ready of wit and speech, his firmness of temper showed itself in his very sports; to rescue his hawk which had fallen into the water he once plunged into a millrace, and was all but crushed by the wheel. The loss of his father's wealth drove him to the court of Archbishop Theobald, and he soon became the Primate's confidant in his plans for the rescue of England. Henry, the son of Matilda and Geoffry, had now by the death of his father become master of Normandy and Anjou, while by his marriage with its duchess, Eleanor of Poitou, he had added Aquitaine to

SEAL OF BISHOP HENRY OF WINCHESTER.

Journal of Archaeological Association.

THE DOMINIONS OF THE ANGEVINS

Scale of Stat. Miles his dominions. Thomas, as Theobald's agent, invited Henry to appear in England, and on the Duke's landing the Archbishop interposed between the rival claimants to the crown. The Treaty of Wallingford abolished the evils of the long anarchy; the castles were to be razed, the crown lands resumed, the foreign mercenaries banished from the country. Stephen was recognized as King, and in turn acknowledged Henry as his heir. But a year had hardly passed when Stephen's death gave his rival the crown.

SEC. VIII
HENRY THE SECOND
1154
TO 1189
1153

Section VIII.—Henry the Second, 1154—1189

[Authorities.—Up to the death of Archbishop Thomas we have only the letters of Becket himself, Foliot, and John of Salisbury, collected by Canon Robertson and Dr. Giles; but this dearth is followed by a vast outburst of historical industry. From 1169 till 1192 our primary authority is the Chronicle known as that of Benedict of Peterborough, whose authorship Dr. Stubbs has shown to be more probably due to the royal treasurer, Bishop Richard Fitz-Neal. It is continued to 1201 by Roger of Howden. Both are works of the highest value, and have been edited for the Rolls series by Dr. Stubbs, whose prefaces have thrown a new light on the constitutional history of Henry's reign. The history by William of Newburgh (which ends in 1198) is a work of the classical school, like William of Malmesbury, but distinguished by its fairness and good sense. To these may be added the chronicles of Ralf Niger, with the additions of Ralf of Coggeshall, that of Gervase of Canterbury, and the Life of S. Hugh of Lincoln. A mass of general literature lies behind these distinctively historical sources, in the treatises of John of Salisbury, the voluminous works of Giraldus Cambrensis, the "trifles" and satires of Walter Map, Glanvill's treatise on Law, Fitz-Neal's "Dialogue on the Exchequer," the romances of Gaimar and Wace, the poem of the San Graal. Lord Lyttelton's "Life of Henry the Second" is a full and sober account of the time; Canon Robertson's Biography of Becket is accurate, but hostile in tone. In his "Select Charters" Dr. Stubbs has printed the various "Assizes," and the Dialogus de Scaccario, which explains the financial administration of the Curia Regis.]

Young as he was, Henry mounted the throne with a resolute purpose of government which his reign carried steadily out. His practical, serviceable frame suited the hardest worker of his time. There was something in his build and look, in the square, stout frame, the fiery face, the close-cropped hair, the prominent eyes, the bull neck, the coarse strong hands, the bowed legs, that marked out the keen, stirring, coarse-fibred man of business. "He never sits down," said one who observed him closely; "he is always on

SEC. VIII
HENRY THE SECOND
1154
TO 1189

his legs from morning till night." Orderly in business, careless in appearance, sparing in diet, never resting or giving his servants rest, chatty, inquisitive, endowed with a singular charm of address and strength of memory, obstinate in love or hatred, a fair scholar, a great hunter, his general air that of a rough, passionate, busy man, Henry's personal character told directly on the character of his reign. His accession marks the period of amalgamation, when neighbourhood and traffic and intermarriage drew Englishmen and Normans rapidly into a single people. A national feeling was thus springing up before which the barriers of the older feudalism were to be swept away. Henry had even less reverence for the feudal past than the men of his day; he was indeed utterly without the imagination and reverence which enable men to sympathize with any past at all. He had a practical man's impatience of the obstacles thrown in the way of his reforms by the older constitution of the realm, nor could he understand other men's reluctance to purchase undoubted improvements by the sacrifice of customs and traditions of bygone days. Without any theoretical hostility to the co-ordinate powers of the state, it seemed to him a perfectly reasonable and natural course to trample either baronage or Church under foot to gain his end of good government. He saw clearly that the remedy for such anarchy as England had endured under Stephen lay in the establishment of a kingly government unembarrassed by any privileges of order or class, administered by royal servants, and in whose public administration the nobles acted simply as delegates of the sovereign. His work was to lie in the organization of judicial and administrative reforms which realized this idea. But of the great currents of thought and feeling which were tending in the same direction he knew nothing. What he did for the moral and social impulses which were telling on men about him was simply to let them alone. Religion grew more and more identified with patriotism under the eyes of a King who whispered, and scribbled, and looked at picture-books during mass, who never confessed, and cursed God in wild frenzies of blasphemy. Great peoples formed themselves on both sides of the sea round a sovereign who bent the whole force of his mind to hold together an Empire which the growth of nationality must inevitably destroy. There is throughout a tragic grandeur in the irony of Henry's position, that of a Sforza of the fifteenth century set in the midst of the twelfth, building up by patience and policy and craft a dominion alien to the deepest sympathies of his age, and fated to be swept away in the end by popular forces to whose existence his very cleverness and activity blinded him. But indirectly and unconsciously, his policy did more than that of all his predecessors to prepare England for the unity and freedom which the fall of his house was to reveal.

He had been placed on the throne, as we have seen, by the Church. His first work was to repair the evils which England had endured till his accession by the restoration of the system of Henry the First ; and it was with the aid and counsel of Theobald that the foreign marauders were driven from the realm, the castles demolished in spite of the opposition of the baronage, the King's Court and Exchequer restored. Age and infirmity however warned the Primate to retire from the post of minister, and his power fell into the younger and more vigorous hands of Thomas Becket, who had long acted as his confidential adviser and was now made Chancellor. Thomas won the personal favour of the King. The two young men had, in Theobald's words, "but one heart and mind ;" Henry jested in the Chancellor's hall, or tore his cloak from his shoulders in rough horse-play as they rode through the streets. He loaded his favourite with riches and honours, but there is no ground for thinking that Thomas in any degree influenced his system of rule. Henry's policy seems for good or evil to have been throughout his own. His work of reorganization went steadily on amidst troubles at home and abroad. Welsh outbreaks forced him in 1157 to lead an army across the border. The next year saw him drawn across the Channel, where he was already master of a third of the present France. He had inherited Anjou, Maine, and Touraine from his father, Normandy from his mother, and the seven provinces of the South, Poitou, Saintonge, the Angoumois, La Marche, the Limousin, Périgord, and Gascony belonged to his wife. As Duchess of Aquitaine Eleanor had claims on Toulouse, and these Henry prepared in 1159 to enforce by arms. He was however luckless in the war. King Lewis of France threw himself into Toulouse. Conscious of the ill-compacted nature of his wide dominions, Henry shrank from an open contest with his suzerain ;

SEC. VIII
HENRY THE SECOND
1154
TO 1189

Henry
and the Church

PLAN OF CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL CHURCH AND MONASTERY, A.D. 1130—1174.
MS. Trin. Coll. Camb. R. 17, 1.

he withdrew his forces, and the quarrel ended in 1160 by a formal alliance and the betrothal of his eldest son to the daughter of Lewis. Thomas had fought bravely throughout the campaign, at the head of the 700 knights who formed his household. But the King had other work for him than war. On Theobald's death he at once forced on the monks of Canterbury, and on Thomas himself, his election as Archbishop. His purpose in this appointment was soon revealed. Henry proposed to the bishops that a clerk

SEC. VIII
HENRY THE SECOND
1154
TO 1189

1162

SEAL OF S. THOMAS.

Journal of Archaeological Association.

MITRE OF S. THOMAS, AT SENS.

convicted of a crime should be deprived of his orders, and handed over to the King's tribunals. The local courts of the feudal baronage had been roughly shorn of their power by the judicial reforms of Henry the First; and the Church courts, as the Conqueror had created them, with their exclusive right of justice over the clerical order, in other words over the whole body of educated men throughout the realm, formed the one great exception to the system which was concentrating all jurisdiction in the hands of the king. The bishops yielded, but opposition came from the very

SEC. VIII
HENRY THE SECOND
1154
TO 1189

prelate whom Henry had created to enforce his will. From the moment of his appointment Thomas had flung himself with the whole energy of his nature into the part he had to play. At the first intimation of Henry's purpose he had pointed with a laugh to his gay attire—"You are choosing a fine dress to figure at the head of your Canterbury monks ;" but once monk and primate, he passed with a fevered earnestness from luxury to asceticism.

S. THOMAS AND HIS SECRETARY,
HERBERT OF BOSHAM.
MS. Trin. Coll. Camb. B. 5, 4

Even as minister he had opposed the King's designs, and foretold their future opposition : " You will soon hate me as much as you love me now," he said, " for you assume an authority in the affairs of the Church to which I shall never assent." A prudent man might have doubted the wisdom of destroying the only shelter which protected piety or learning against a despot like the Red King, and in the mind of Thomas the ecclesiastical immunities were parts of the sacred heritage of the Church.

He stood without support ; the Pope advised concession, the bishops forsook him, and Thomas bent at last to agree to the Constitutions drawn up at the Council of Clarendon. The King had appealed to the ancient " customs " of the realm, and it was to state these " customs " that a court was held at Clarendon near Salisbury. The report presented by bishops and barons formed the " Constitutions of Clarendon," a code which in the bulk of its provisions simply re-enacted the system of the Conqueror. Every election of bishop or abbot was to take place before royal officers, in the King's Constitutions of Clarendon 1164 chapel; and with the King's assent.

KNOCKER OF SANCTUARY-DOOR, DURHAM.

The prelate elect was bound to do homage to the King for his lands, before consecration, and to hold his lands as a barony from the king, subject to all feudal burthens of taxation and attendance in the King's court. No bishop might leave the realm without the royal permission. No tenant in chief or royal servant might be excommunicated, or their land placed under interdict, but by the King's assent. What was new was the legislation respecting ecclesiastical jurisdiction. The King's court was to decide whether a suit between clerk and layman, whose nature was disputed, belonged to the Church courts or the King's. A royal officer was to be present at all ecclesiastical proceedings, in order to confine the Bishop's court within its own due limits, and a clerk once convicted there passed at once under the civil jurisdiction. An appeal was left from the Archbishop's court to the King's court for defect of justice, but none

SEC. VIII
HENRY THE SECOND
1154
TO 1189

FRITHSTOOL, HEXHAM PRIORY.
Jusserand, "Wayfaring Life."

SEC. VIII

HENRY THE SECOND
1154
TO 1189*Flight of Archbishop Thomas 1164Beket's return 1170*

might appeal to the Papal court save with the King's consent. The privilege of sanctuary in churches or churchyards was repealed, so far as property and not persons was concerned. After a passionate refusal the Primate at last gave his assent to the Constitutions; but this assent was soon retracted, and the King's savage resentment threw the moral advantage of the position into the Archbishop's hands. Vexatious charges were brought against him; in the Council of Northampton a few months later his life was said to be in danger, and all urged him to submit. But in the presence of danger the courage of the man rose to its full height. Grasping his archiepiscopal cross he entered the royal court, forbade the nobles to condemn him, and appealed to the Papal See. Shouts of "Traitor! traitor!" followed him as he retired. The Primate turned fiercely at the word: "Were I a knight," he retorted, "my sword should answer that foul taunt!" At nightfall he fled in disguise, and reached France through Flanders. For six years the contest raged bitterly; at Rome, at Paris, the agents of the two powers intrigued against each other. Henry stooped to acts of the meanest persecution in driving the Primate's kinsmen from England, and in threats to confiscate the lands of the Cistercians that he might force the monks of Pontigny to refuse Thomas a home; while Beket himself exhausted the patience of his friends by his violence and excommunications, as well as by the stubbornness with which he clung to the offensive clause "Saving the honour of my order," the addition of which would have practically neutralized the King's reforms. The Pope counselled mildness, the French king for a time withdrew his support, his own clerks gave way at last. "Come up," said one of them bitterly when his horse stumbled on the road, "saving the honour of the Church and my order." But neither warning nor desertion moved the resolution of the Primate. Henry, in dread of papal excommunication, resolved at last on the coronation of his son, in defiance of the privileges of Canterbury, by the Archbishop of York. But the Pope's hands were now freed by his successes in Italy, and his threats of an interdict forced the king to a show of submission. The Archbishop was allowed to return after a reconciliation with Henry at Fréteval, and the Kentishmen flocked around him with uproarious welcome as he entered Canterbury. "This is England," said his clerks, as they saw the white headlands of the coast. "You will wish yourself elsewhere before fifty days are gone," said Thomas sadly, and his foreboding showed his appreciation of Henry's

SEC. VIII
HENRY THE SECOND
1154
TO 1189

S. THOMAS EXCOMMUNICATING HIS ENEMIES AND ARGUING WITH HENRY AND LOUIS.

PARTING OF S. THOMAS AND THE TWO KINGS.

SCENES FROM "VIE DE ST. THOMAS."

French MS. written in England, 1230-1260.

Société des anciens textes français.

character. He was now in the royal power, and orders had already been issued in the younger Henry's name for his arrest, when four knights from the King's court, spurred to outrage by a passionate

SEC. VIII outburst of their master's wrath, crossed the sea and forced their way into the Archbishop's palace. After a stormy parley with HENRY THE SECOND 1154 TO 1189 him in his chamber they withdrew to arm. Thomas was hurried CROWNING OF THE YOUNG KING; HIS FATHER SERVING HIM AT TABLE.

S. THOMAS EMBARKING FOR ENGLAND

SCENES FROM "VIE DE ST. THOMAS."

French MS. written in England, 1230-1260.

Société des anciens textes français.

by his clerks into the cathedral, but as he reached the steps leading from the transept to the choir his pursuers burst in from the cloisters. "Where," cried Reginald Fitzurse in the dusk of the dimly-lighted minster, "where is the traitor, Thomas Beket?" The Primate turned resolutely back: "Here am I, no traitor, but a priest of God," he replied, and again descending the steps he placed himself with his back against a pillar and fronted his foes. All the bravery, the violence of his old knightly life seemed to revive in Thomas as he tossed back the threats and demands of his assailants. "You are our prisoner," shouted Fitzurse, and the four knights seized him to drag him from the church. "Do not touch me, Reginald," shouted the Primate, "pander that you are, you owe me fealty;" and availing himself of his personal strength he shook him roughly off. "Strike, strike," retorted Fitzurse, and blow after blow struck Thomas to the ground. A retainer of Ranulf de Broc with the point of his sword scattered the Pri-mate's brains on the ground. "Let us be off," he cried triumphantly, "this traitor will never rise again."

The brutal murder was received with a thrill of horror throughout Christendom; miracles were wrought at the martyr's tomb; he was canonized, and became the most popular of English saints; but Henry's show of submission to the Papacy averted the excommunication which at first threatened to avenge the deed of blood,

SEC VIII
HENRY THE SECOND
1154
TO 1189

MARTYRDOM OF S. THOMAS OF CANTERBURY.

MS. Harl. 5102.
Early Thirteenth Century.

Henry
and the baronage

SEC. VIII

HENRY THE SECOND
1154
TO 1189

The judicial provisions of the Constitutions of Clarendon were in form annulled, and liberty of election was restored to bishopricks and abbacies. In reality however the victory rested with the King.

"CAPUT THOMÆ."
Sign of a Canterbury Pilgrim.
Wright, "Archæological Album."

The great scutage

Throughout his reign ecclesiastical appointments were practically in his hands, while the King's court asserted its power over the spiritual jurisdiction of the bishops. The close of the struggle left Henry free to complete his great work of legal reform. He had already availed himself of the expedition against Toulouse to deliver a blow at the baronage by allowing the lower tenants to commute their personal service in the field for a money payment under the name of "scutage," or shield-money. The King thus became master of resources which enabled him to dispense with the military support of his tenants, and to maintain a force of mercenary soldiers in their place. The diminution of the military power of the nobles was accompanied by measures which robbed them of their legal jurisdiction. The circuits of the judges were restored, and instructions were given them to enter the manors of the barons and make inquiry into their privileges ;

Inquest of sheriffs 1170 while the office of sheriff was withdrawn from the great nobles of the shire and entrusted to the law-

SEAL OF THE YOUNG KING HENRY, SON OF HENRY II.

yers and courtiers who already furnished the staff of justices. The resentment of the barons found an opportunity of displaying itself when the King's eldest son, whose coronation had given him the title of King, demanded to be put in possession of his English realm, and on his father's refusal took refuge with Lewis of France. France, Flanders, and Scotland joined the league against Henry; his younger sons, Richard and Geoffry, took up arms in Aquitaine. In England a descent of Flemish mercenaries under the Earl of Leicester was repulsed by the loyal justiciars near S. Edmundsbury; but Lewis had no sooner entered Normandy and invested Rouen than the whole extent of the danger was revealed. The Scots crossed the border, Roger Mowbray rose in revolt in Yorkshire, Ferrars, Earl of Derby, in the midland shires, Hugh Bigod in the eastern counties, while a Flemish fleet prepared to support the insurrection by a descent upon the coast. The murder of Archbishop Thomas still hung around Henry's neck, and his first act in hurrying to England to meet these perils was to prostrate himself before the shrine of the new martyr, and to submit to a public scourging in expiation of his sin. But the penance was hardly wrought when all danger was dispelled by a series of triumphs. The King of Scotland, William the Lion, surprised by the English under cover of a mist, fell into the hands of his minister, Ranulf de Glanvill, and at the retreat of the Scots the English rebels hastened to lay down their arms. With the army of mercenaries which he had brought over sea Henry was able to return to Normandy, to raise the siege of Rouen, and to reduce his sons to submission. The revolt of the baronage was followed by fresh blows at their power. A further step was taken a few years later in the military organization of the realm by the Assize of Arms, which restored the national militia to the place which it had lost at the Conquest. The substitution of scutage for military service had freed the crown from its dependence on the baronage and its feudal retainers; the Assize of Arms replaced this feudal organization by the older obligation of every freeman to serve in the defence of the realm. Every knight was bound to appear at the King's call in coat of mail and with shield and lance, every freeholder with lance and hauberk, every burgess and poorer freeman with lance and helmet. The levy of an armed nation was thus placed wholly at the disposal of the King for purposes of defence.

SEC. VIII
HENRY THE SECOND
1154
TO 1189

1174

Assize of Arms
1181

SEC. VIII

HENRY THE SECOND
1154
TO 1189Henry
and the law*Assize of Clarendon* 1166*Trial by jury*

The measures we have named were only part of Henry's legislation. His reign, it has been truly said, "initiated the rule of law" as distinct from the despotism, whether personal or tempered by routine, of the Norman kings. It was in successive "Assizes" or codes issued with the sanction of great councils of barons and prelates, that he perfected by a system of reforms the administrative measures which Henry the First had begun. The fabric of our judicial legislation commences with the Assize of Clarendon, the first object of which was to provide for the order of the realm by reviving the old English system of mutual security or frankpledge. No stranger might abide in any place save a borough, and there but for a single night, unless sureties were given for his good behaviour; and the list of such strangers was to be submitted to the itinerant justices. In the provisions of this assize for the repression of crime we find the origin of trial by jury, so often attributed to earlier times. Twelve lawful men of each township, with four from each were sworn to present those who were known or reputed as criminals within their district for trial by ordeal. The jurors were thus not merely witnesses, but sworn to act as judges also in determining the value of the charge, and it is this double character of Henry's jurors that has descended to our "grand jury," who still remain charged with the duty of

TOWER OF HADDISCOE CHURCH.
Twelfth Century.

presenting criminals for trial after examination of the witnesses against them. Two later steps brought the jury to its modern condition. Under Edward the First witnesses acquainted with the particular fact in question were added in each case to the general jury, and by the separation of these two classes of jurors at a later time the last became simply "witnesses" without any judicial power, while the first ceased to be witnesses at all, and became our modern jurors, who are only judges of the testimony given. With this assize, too, the practice which had prevailed from the earliest English times of "compurgation" passed away. Under this system the accused could be acquitted of the charge by the voluntary oath of his neighbours and kinsmen; but this was abolished by the Assize of Clarendon, and for the next fifty years his trial, after the investigation of the grand jury, was found solely in the ordeal or "judgement of God," where innocence was proved by the power of holding hot iron in the hand, or by sinking when flung into the water, for swimming was a proof of guilt. It was the abolition of the whole system of ordeal by the Council of Lateran which led the way to the establishment of what is called a "petty jury" for the final trial of prisoners. The Assize of Clarendon was expanded in that of Northampton, which was drawn up immediately after the rebellion of the Barons. Henry, as we have seen, had restored the King's Court and the occasional circuits of its justices: by the Assize of Northampton he rendered this institution permanent and regular by dividing the kingdom into six districts, to each of which he assigned three itinerant justices. The circuits thus defined correspond roughly with those that still exist. The primary object of these circuits was financial, but the rendering of the King's justice went on side by side with the exaction of the King's dues, and this carrying of justice to every corner of the realm was made still more effective by the abolition of all feudal exemptions from the royal jurisdiction. The chief danger of the new system lay in the opportunities it afforded to judicial corruption; and so great were its abuses that Henry was soon forced to restrict for a time the number of justices to five, and to reserve appeals from their court to himself in council. The Court of Appeal which he thus created, that of the King in Council, gave birth as time went on to tribunal after tribunal. It is from it that the judicial

SEC. VIII
 HENRY THE SECOND
 1154
 TO 1189

1216

Assize of Northampton 1176

1178

SEC. VIII powers now exercised by the Privy Council are derived, as well as HENRY THE the equitable jurisdiction of the Chancellor. In the next century SECOND it becomes the Great Council of the realm, from which the 1154 Privy Council drew its legislative, and the House of Lords TO its judicial character. The Court of 1189 Star Chamber and the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council are later offshoots of Henry's Court of Appeal.
 The King's Court, which became inferior to this higher jurisdiction, was divided after the Great Charter into the three distinct courts of the King's Bench, the Exchequer, and the Common Pleas, which by the time of Edward the First received distinct judges, and became for all purposes separate.

Death of Henry
 the Second

1183-1186

1189

For the ten years which followed the revolt of the barons Henry's power was at its height; and an invasion, which we shall tell hereafter, had annexed Ireland to his English crown. But the course of triumph and legislative reform was rudely broken by the quarrels and revolts of his sons. The successive deaths of Henry and Geoffry were followed by intrigues between Richard, now his father's heir, who had been entrusted with Aquitaine, and Philip, who had succeeded Lewis on the throne of France. The plot broke out at last in actual conflict; Richard did homage to Philip, and their allied forces suddenly appeared before Le Mans, from which Henry was driven in headlong flight towards Normandy.
 From a height where he halted to look back on the burning city, so dear to him as his birthplace, the King hurled his curse against God: "Since Thou hast taken from me the town I loved best, where I was born and bred, and where my father lies buried, I will

EFFIGY OF HENRY II. ON HIS TOMB AT FONTEVRAUD.

have my revenge on Thee too—I will rob Thee of that thing Thou lovest most in me.” Death was upon him, and the longing of a dying man drew him to the home of his race, but Tours fell as he lay at Saumur, and the hunted King was driven to beg mercy from his foes. They gave him the list of the conspirators against him: at the head of them was his youngest and best loved son, John. “Now,” he said, as he turned his face to the wall, “let things go as they will—I care no more for myself or for the world.” He was borne to Chinon by the silvery waters of Vienne, and muttering, “Shame, shame on a conquered King,” passed sullenly away.

SEC. IX.
THE FALL
OF THE ANGEVINS
1189
TO 1204

Section IX.—The Fall of the Angevins, 1189—1204

[Authorities.—In addition to those mentioned in the last Section, the Chronicle of Richard of Devizes, and the “Itinerarium Regis Ricardi,” edited by Dr. Stubbs, are useful for Richard’s reign. Rigord’s “Gesta Philippi,” and the “Philippis Willelmi Britonis,” the chief authorities on the French side, are given in Duchesne, “Hist. Franc. Scriptores,” vol. v.]

We need not follow Richard in the Crusade which occupied the beginning of his reign, and which left England for four years without a ruler,—in his quarrels in Sicily, his conquest of Cyprus, his victory at Jaffa, his fruitless march upon Jerusalem, the truce he concluded with Saladin, his shipwreck as he returned, or his two imprisonments in Germany. Freed at last from his captivity, he returned to face new perils. During his absence, the kingdom had been entrusted to William of Longchamp, Bishop of Ely, head of Church and State, as at once Justiciar and Papal Legate. Longchamp was loyal to the King, but his exactions and scorn of Englishmen roused a fierce hatred among the baronage, and this hatred found a head in John, traitor to his brother as to his father. John’s intrigues with the baronage and the French king ended at last in open revolt, which was, however, checked by the ability of the new Primate, Hubert Walter; and Richard’s landing in 1194 was followed by his brother’s complete submission. But if Hubert Walter had secured order in England, oversea Richard found himself face to face with dangers which he was too clear-sighted to undervalue. Destitute of his father’s administrative genius, less

Richard
the First

1190-1194

SEC. IX.
 —
 THE FALL
 OF THE ANGEVINS
 1189
 TO 1204
 —

ingenious in his political conceptions than John, Richard was far from being a mere soldier. A love of adventure, a pride in sheer physical strength, here and there a romantic generosity, jostled roughly with the craft, the unscrupulousness, the violence of his race; but he was at heart a statesman, cool and patient in the execution of his plans as he was bold in their conception. "The devil is loose; take care of yourself," Philip had written to John at the news of the king's release. In the French king's case a restless ambition was spurred to action by insults which he had borne during the Crusade, and he had availed himself of Richard's imprisonment to invade Normandy, while the lords of Aquitaine rose in revolt under the troubadour Bertrand de Born. Jealousy of the rule of strangers, weariness of the turbulence of the mercenary soldiers of the Angevins or of the greed and oppression of their financial administration, combined with an impatience of their firm government and vigorous justice to alienate the nobles of their provinces on the Continent. Loyalty among the people there was none; even Anjou, the home of their race, drifted towards Philip as steadily as Poitou. But in warlike ability Richard was more than Philip's peer. He held him in check on the Norman frontier and surprised his treasure at Fréteval, while he reduced to submission the rebels of Aquitaine. England, drained by the tax for Richard's ransom, groaned under its burdens as Hubert Walter raised vast sums to support the army of mercenaries which Richard led against his foes.

GREAT SEAL OF RICHARD I.

Crushing taxation had wrung from England wealth which again filled the royal treasury, and during a short truce Richard's bribes detached Flanders from the French alliance, and united the Counts of Chartres, Champagne, and Boulogne with the Bretons in a revolt against Philip. He won a valuable aid by the election of his nephew Otto to the German throne, and his envoy, William Longchamp, knitted an alliance which would bring the German lances to bear on the King of Paris. But the security of Normandy was requisite to the success of these wider plans, and Richard saw that its defence could no longer rest on the loyalty of the Norman people. His father might trace his descent through Matilda from the line of Hrolf, but the Angevin ruler was in fact a stranger to the Norman. It was impossible for a Norman to recognize his Duke with any real sympathy in the Angevin prince whom he saw moving along the border at the head of Brabançon mercenaries, in whose camp the old names of the Norman baronage were missing, and Merchadé, a Provençal ruffian, held supreme command. The purely military site which Richard selected for the new fortress with which he guarded the border showed his realization of the fact that Normandy could now only be held by force of arms. As a monument of warlike skill his "Saucy

SEC. 17
—
THE FAI
OF THE ANGEVINS
1189
TO 1204
—

Chateau-Gaillard

SEAL OF LES ANDELYS, WITH REPRESENTATION OF CHATEAU-GAILLARD.
Fifteenth Century.

Collection of the late Rev. S. S. Lewis.

SEC. IX
 THE FALL
 OF THE ANGEVINS
 1189
 TO 1204

Castle," Château-Gaillard, stands first among the fortresses of the middle ages. Richard fixed its site where the Seine bends suddenly at Gaillon in a great semicircle to the north, and where the valley of Les Andelys breaks the line of the chalk cliffs along its banks. Blue masses of woodland crown the distant hills ; within the river curve lies a dull reach of flat meadow, round which the Seine, broken with green islets, and dappled with the grey and blue of the sky, flashes like a silver bow on its way to Rouen. The castle formed a part of an entrenched camp which Richard designed to cover his Norman capital. Approach by the river was blocked by a stockade and a bridge of boats, by a fort on the islet in mid-stream, and by the fortified town which the King built in the valley of the Gambon, then an impassable marsh. In the angle between this valley and the Seine, on a spur of the chalk hills which only a narrow neck of land connects with the general plateau, rose at the height of 300 feet above the river the crowning fortress of the whole. Its outworks and the walls which connected it with the town and stockade have for the most part gone, but time and the hand of man have done little to destroy the fortifications themselves—the fosse, hewn deep into the solid rock, with casemates hollowed out along its sides, the fluted walls of the citadel, the huge donjon looking down on the brown roofs and huddled gables of Les Andelys. Even now in its ruin we can understand the triumphant outburst of its royal builder as he saw it rising against the sky: "How pretty a child is mine, this child of but one year old!"

Richard's
 death

The easy reduction of Normandy on the fall of Château-Gaillard at a later time proved Richard's foresight ; but foresight and sagacity were mingled in him with a brutal violence and a callous indifference to honour. "I would take it, were its walls of iron," Philip exclaimed in wrath as he saw the fortress rise. "I would hold it, were its walls of butter," was the defiant answer of his foe. It was Church land, and the Archbishop of Rouen laid Normandy under interdict at its seizure, but the King met the interdict with mockery, and intrigued with Rome till the censure was withdrawn. He was just as defiant of a "rain of blood," whose fall scared his courtiers. "Had an angel from heaven bid him abandon his work," says a cool observer, "he would have

CHÂTEAU-GAILLARD FROM THE EAST.
After J. M. W. Turner.

SEC. IX
 THE FALL
 OF THE ANGEVINS
 1189
 TO 1204
 —

answered with a curse." The twelvemonths' hard work, in fact, by securing the Norman frontier, set Richard free to deal his long-planned blow at Philip. Money only was wanting, and the king listened with more than the greed of his race to the rumour that a treasure had been found in the fields of the Limousin. Twelve knights of gold seated round a golden table were the find, it was said, of the Lord of Châlus. Treasure-trove at any rate there was, and Richard prowled around the walls, but the castle held stubbornly out till the King's greed passed into savage menace; he would hang all, he swore—man, woman, the very child at the breast. In the midst of his threats an arrow from the walls struck him down. He died as he had lived, owning the wild passion which for seven years past had kept him from confession lest he should be forced to pardon Philip, forgiving with kingly generosity the archer who had shot him.

1199

The loss of Normandy

The Angevin dominion broke to pieces at his death. John was acknowledged as king in England and Normandy, Aquitaine was secured for him by its Duchess, his mother; but Anjou, Maine, and Touraine did homage to Arthur, the son of his elder brother Geoffry, the late Duke of Brittany. The ambition of Philip, who protected his cause, turned the day against Arthur; the Angevins rose against the French garrisons with which the French King practically annexed the country, and John was at last owned as master of the whole dominion of his house. A fresh outbreak of war in Poitou was fatal to his rival; surprised at the siege of Mirebeau by a rapid march of the King, Arthur was taken prisoner to Rouen and murdered there, as men believed, by his uncle's hand. The brutal outrage at once roused the French provinces in revolt, while the French King marched straight on Normandy. The ease with which its conquest was effected can only be explained by the utter absence of any popular resistance on the part of the Normans themselves. Half a century before the sight of a Frenchman in the land would have roused every peasant to arms from Avranches to Dieppe, but town after town surrendered at the mere summons of Philip, and the conquest was hardly over before Normandy settled down into the most loyal of the provinces of France. Much of this was due to the wise liberality with which Philip met the claims of the towns to independence and self-government, as well as to the overpowering force and military ability with which the conquest was effected. But the utter absence of all opposition sprang from a deeper cause. To the Norman his transfer from John to Philip was a mere passing from one foreign master to another, and foreigner for foreigner Philip was the less alien of the two. Between France and Normandy there had been as many years of friendship as of strife; between Norman and Angevin lay a century of bitterest hate. Moreover, the subjection to France was the realization in fact of a dependence which had always existed in theory; Philip entered Rouen as the over-lord of its Dukes; while the submission to the house of Anjou had been the most humiliating of all submissions, the submission to an equal.

1200

1203

It was the consciousness of this temper in the Norman people that forced John to abandon all hope of resistance on the failure of his attempt to relieve Château-Gaillard, by the siege of which Philip commenced his invasion. The skill with which the combined movements for its relief were planned proved the King's military ability. The besiegers were parted into two masses by the Seine; the bulk of their forces were camped in the level space within the bend of the river, while one division was thrown across it to occupy the valley of the Gambon, and sweep the country around of its provisions. John proposed to cut the French army in two by destroying the bridge of boats which formed the only communication between the two bodies, while the whole of his own forces flung themselves on the rear of the French division encamped in the cul-de-sac formed by the river-bend, and without any exit save the bridge. Had the attack been carried out as ably as it was planned, it must have ended in Philip's ruin; but the two assaults were not made simultaneously, and were successively repulsed. The repulse was followed by the utter collapse of the military system by which the Angevins had held Normandy; John's treasury was exhausted, and his mercenaries passed over to the foe. The King's despairing appeal to the Duchy itself came too late; its nobles were already treating with Philip, and the towns were incapable of resisting the siege train of the French. It was despair of any aid from Normandy that drove John over sea to seek it as fruitlessly from England, but with the fall of Château-

SEC. IX
 THE FALL
 OF THE ANGEVINS
 1189
 TO 1204

SEC. IX
 THE FALL
 OF THE ANGEVINS
 1189
 TO 1204
 1204

Gaillard, after a gallant struggle, the province passed without a struggle into the French King's hands. In 1204 Philip turned on the south with as startling a success. Maine, Anjou, and Touraine passed with little resistance into his hands, and the death of Eleanor was followed by the submission of the bulk of Aquitaine. Little was left save the country south of the Garonne; and from the lordship of a vast empire that stretched from the Tyne to the Pyrenees John saw himself reduced at a blow to the realm of England. On the loss of Château-Gaillard in fact hung the destinies of England, and the interest that attaches one to the grand ruin on the heights of Les Andelys is, that it represents the ruin of a system as well as of a camp. From its dark donjon and broken walls we see not merely the pleasant vale of Seine, but the sedgy flats of our own Runnymede.

CHÂTEAU-GAILLARD FROM THE SOUTH.
After J. M. W. Turner.

NAMING OF S. JOHN THE BAPTIST

From a wall painting, 12th Century, in the Crypt of Canterbury Cathedral

ANCIENT SWORD OF STATE, ISLE OF MAN
Manx Society's Publications

CHAPTER III

THE GREAT CHARTER

1204—1265

Section I.—English Literature under the Norman and Angevin Kings

[Authorities.—For the general literature of this period, see Mr. Morley's "English Writers from the Conquest to Chaucer," vol. i. part ii. The prefaces of Mr. Brewer and Mr. Dimock to his collected works in the Rolls Series give all that can be known of Gerald de Barri. The poems of Walter Map have been edited by Mr. Wright for the Camden Society; Layamon, by Sir F. Madden.]

IT is in a review of the literature of England during the period that we have just traversed that we shall best understand the new English people with which John, when driven from Normandy, found himself face to face.

The Literary Revival

In his contest with Becket, Henry the Second had been powerfully aided by the silent revolution which now began to part the purely literary class from the purely clerical. During the earlier ages of our history we have seen literature springing up in ecclesiastical schools, and protecting itself against the ignorance and violence of the time under ecclesiastical privileges. Almost all our writers from Bæda to the days of the Angevins are clergy or monks. The revival of letters which followed the Conquest was a purely ecclesiastical revival; the intellectual impulse which Bec had given to Normandy travelled across the Channel with the new Norman abbots who were established in the greater English monasteries; and writing-rooms or scriptoria, where the chief works of Latin literature, patristic or classical, were copied

SEC. I ENGLISH LITERATURE
 UNDER THE NORMAN AND ANGE-
 VIN KINGS

and illuminated, the lives of saints compiled, and entries noted in the monastic chronicle, formed from this time a part of every religious house of any importance. But the literature which found this religious shelter was not so much ecclesiastical as secular. Even the philosophical and devotional impulse given by Anselm produced no English work of theology or metaphysics. The literary revival which followed the Conquest took mainly the old historical form. At Durham, Turgot and Simeon threw into Latin shape the national annals to the time of Henry the First with an especial regard to northern affairs, while the earlier events of Stephen's reign were noted down by two Priors of Hexham in the wild border-land between England and the Scots. These however were the colourless jottings of mere annalists; it was in the Scriptorium of Canterbury, in Osbern's lives of the English saints, or in Eadmer's record of the struggle of Anselm against the Red King and his successor, that we see the first indications of a distinctively English feeling telling on the new literature. The national impulse is yet more conspicuous in the two historians that followed. The war-songs of the English conquerors of Britain were preserved by Henry, an Archdeacon of Huntingdon, who wove them into annals compiled from Bæda and the Chronicle; while William, the librarian of Malmesbury, as industriously collected the lighter ballads which embodied the popular traditions of the English Kings.

Literature and the Court

William of Malmesbury

The Court historians

It is in William above all others that we see the new tendency of English literature. In himself, as in his work, he marks the fusion of the conquerors and the conquered, for he was of both English and Norman parentage, and his sympathies were as divided as his blood. The form and style of his writings show the influence of those classical studies which were now reviving throughout Christendom. Monk as he is, he discards the older ecclesiastical models and the annalistic form. Events are grouped together with no strict reference to time, while the lively narrative flows rapidly and loosely along, with constant breaks of digression over the general history of Europe and the Church. It is in this change of historic spirit that William takes his place as first of the more statesmanlike and philosophic school of historians who began soon to arise in direct connection with the Court, and amongst whom the author of the chronicle which commonly bears the name of "Benedict of Peterborough," with his continuator Roger of Howden, are the most conspicuous. Both held judicial offices under Henry the Second, and it is to their position at Court that they owe the fulness and accuracy of their information as to affairs at home and abroad, their copious supply of official documents,

SEC. I
—
ENGLISH LITERATURE
UNDER THE NORMAN AND ANGE-VIN KINGS
—

MONK ILLUMINATING, c. 1200.
MS. Bodl. 602.

and the purely political temper with which they regard the conflict of Church and State in their time. The same freedom from ecclesiastical bias, combined with remarkable critical ability, is found in the history of William, the Canon of Newburgh, who wrote far away in his Yorkshire monastery. The English court, however, had become the centre of a distinctly secular literature. The treatise of Ranulf de Glanvill, the justiciar of Henry the

SEC. 1

ENGLISH LITERATURE
UNDER THE NORMAN AND ANGE-VIN KINGS

Gerald
of Wales

Second, is the earliest work on English law, as that of the royal treasurer, Richard Fitz-Neal, on the Exchequer is the earliest on English government.

Still more distinctly secular than these, though the work of a priest who claimed to be a bishop, are the writings of Gerald de Barri. Gerald is the father of our popular literature, as he is the originator of the political and ecclesiastical pamphlet. Welsh blood (as his usual name of Giraldus Cambrensis implies) mixed with Norman in his veins, and something of the restless Celtic fire runs alike through his writings and his life. A busy scholar at Paris, a reforming archdeacon in Wales, the wittiest of Court chaplains, the most troublesome of bishops, Gerald became the gayest and most amusing of all the authors of his time. In his hands the stately Latin tongue took the vivacity and picturesqueness of the jongleur's verse. Reared as he had been in classical studies, he threw pedantry contemptuously aside. "It is better to be dumb than not to be understood," is his characteristic apology for the novelty of his style: "new times require new fashions, and so I have thrown utterly aside the old and dry method of some authors, and aimed at adopting the fashion of speech which is actually in vogue to-day." His tract on the conquest of Ireland and his account of Wales, which are in fact reports of two journeys undertaken in those countries with John and Archbishop Baldwin, illustrate his rapid faculty of careless observation, his audacity, and his good sense. They are just the sort of lively, dashing letters that we find in the correspondence of a modern journal. There is the same modern tone in his political pamphlets; his profusion of jests, his fund of anecdote, the aptness of his quotations, his natural shrewdness and critical acumen, the clearness and vivacity of his style, are backed by a fearlessness and impetuosity that made him a dangerous assailant even to such a ruler as Henry the Second. The invectives in which Gerald poured out his resentment against the Angevins are the cause of half the scandal about Henry and his sons which has found its way into history. His life was wasted in an ineffectual struggle to secure the see of St. David's, but his pungent pen played its part in rousing the spirit of the nation to its struggle with the Crown.

FAUNA OF IRELAND, AS DESCRIBED BY GERALD OF WALES.
MS. Roy. 13, B. viii.
 Thirteenth Century.

SEC. I

ENGLISH LITERATURE
UNDER THE NORMAN AND ANGE-VIN KINGS

Romance

Geoffry of Monmouth

A tone of distinct hostility to the Church developed itself almost from the first among the singers of romance. Romance had long before taken root in the court of Henry the First, where under the patronage of Queen Maud the dreams of Arthur, so long cherished by the Celts of Brittany, and which had travelled to Wales in the train of the exile Rhys ap Tewdor, took shape in the History of the Britons by Geoffry of Monmouth. Myth, legend, tradition, the classical pedantry of the day, Welsh hopes of future triumph over the Saxon, the memories of the Crusades and of the world-wide dominion of Charles the Great, were mingled together by this daring fabulist in a work whose popularity became at once immense. Alfred of Beverley transferred Geoffry's inventions into the region of sober history, while two Norman trouvères, Gaimar and Wace, translated them into French verse. So complete was the credence they obtained, that Arthur's tomb at Glastonbury was visited by Henry the Second, while the child of his son Geoffry and of Constance of Brittany bore the name of the Celtic hero. Out of Geoffry's creation grew little by little the poem of the Table Round. Brittany, which had mingled with the story of Arthur the older and more mysterious legend of the Enchanter Merlin, lent that of Lancelot to the wandering minstrels of the day, who moulded it, as they wandered from hall to hall, into the familiar tale of knight-hood wrested from its loyalty by the love of woman. The stories of Tristram and Gawayne, at first as independent as that of Lancelot, were drawn with it into the whirlpool of Arthurian romance; and when the Church, jealous of the popularity of the legends of chivalry, invented as a counteracting influence the poem of the Sacred Dish, the San Graal which held the blood of the Cross invisible to all eyes but those of the pure in heart, the genius of a court poet, Walter de Map, wove the rival legends together, sent Arthur and his knights wandering over sea and land in the quest of the San Graal, and crowned the work by the figure of Sir Galahad, the type of ideal knighthood, without fear and without reproach.

HEDGEHOGS AND TREES.

Bestiarium, c. A.D. 1200.

M.S. Bodl. 602.

Walter stands before us as the representative of a sudden outburst of literary, social, and religious criticism which followed the growth of romance and the

Walter de Map

SHOOTING BIRDS IN A TREE.
MS. Ashm. 1511.
C. A.D. 1200.

appearance of a freer historical tone in the court of the two Henries. Born on the Welsh border, a student at Paris, a favourite with the King, a royal chaplain, justiciar, and ambassador, the genius of Walter de Map was as various as it was prolific. He is as much at his ease in sweeping together the chit-chat of the time in his "Courtly Trifles" as in creating the character of Sir Galahad. But he only rose to his fullest strength when he turned from the fields of romance to that of Church reform, and embodied the ecclesiastical abuses of his day in the figure of his "Bishop

SEC. I ENGLISH LITERATURE
UNDER THE NORMAN AND ANGE-
VIN KINGS

Goliath." The whole spirit of Henry and his court in their struggle with Becket is reflected and illustrated in the apocalypse and confession of this imaginary prelate. Picture after picture strips the veil from the corruption of the mediæval Church, its indolence, its thirst for gain, its secret immorality. The whole body of the clergy, from Pope to hedge-priest, is painted as busy in the chase for gain; what escapes the bishop is snapped up by the archdeacon, what escapes the archdeacon is nosed and hunted down by the dean, while a host of minor officials prowl hungrily around these greater marauders. Out of the crowd of figures which fills the canvas of the satirist, pluralist vicars, abbots "purple as their wines," monks feeding and chattering together like parrots in the refectory, rises the Philistine Bishop, light of purpose, void of conscience, lost in sensuality, drunken, unchaste, the Goliath who sums up the enormities of all, and against whose forehead this new David slings his sharp pebble of the brook.

Revival
of the English tongue

It is only, however, as the writings of Englishmen that Latin or French works like these can be claimed as part of English literature. The spoken tongue of the nation at large remained of course English as before; William himself had tried to learn it that he might administer justice to his subjects; and for a century after the Conquest only a few new words crept in from the language of the conquerors. Even English literature, banished as it was from the court of the stranger and exposed to the fashionable rivalry of Latin scholars, survived not only in religious works, in poetic paraphrases of gospels and psalms, but in the great monument of our prose, the English Chronicle. It was not till the miserable

GLUTTONY.
MS. Arundel 91.
Twelfth Century.

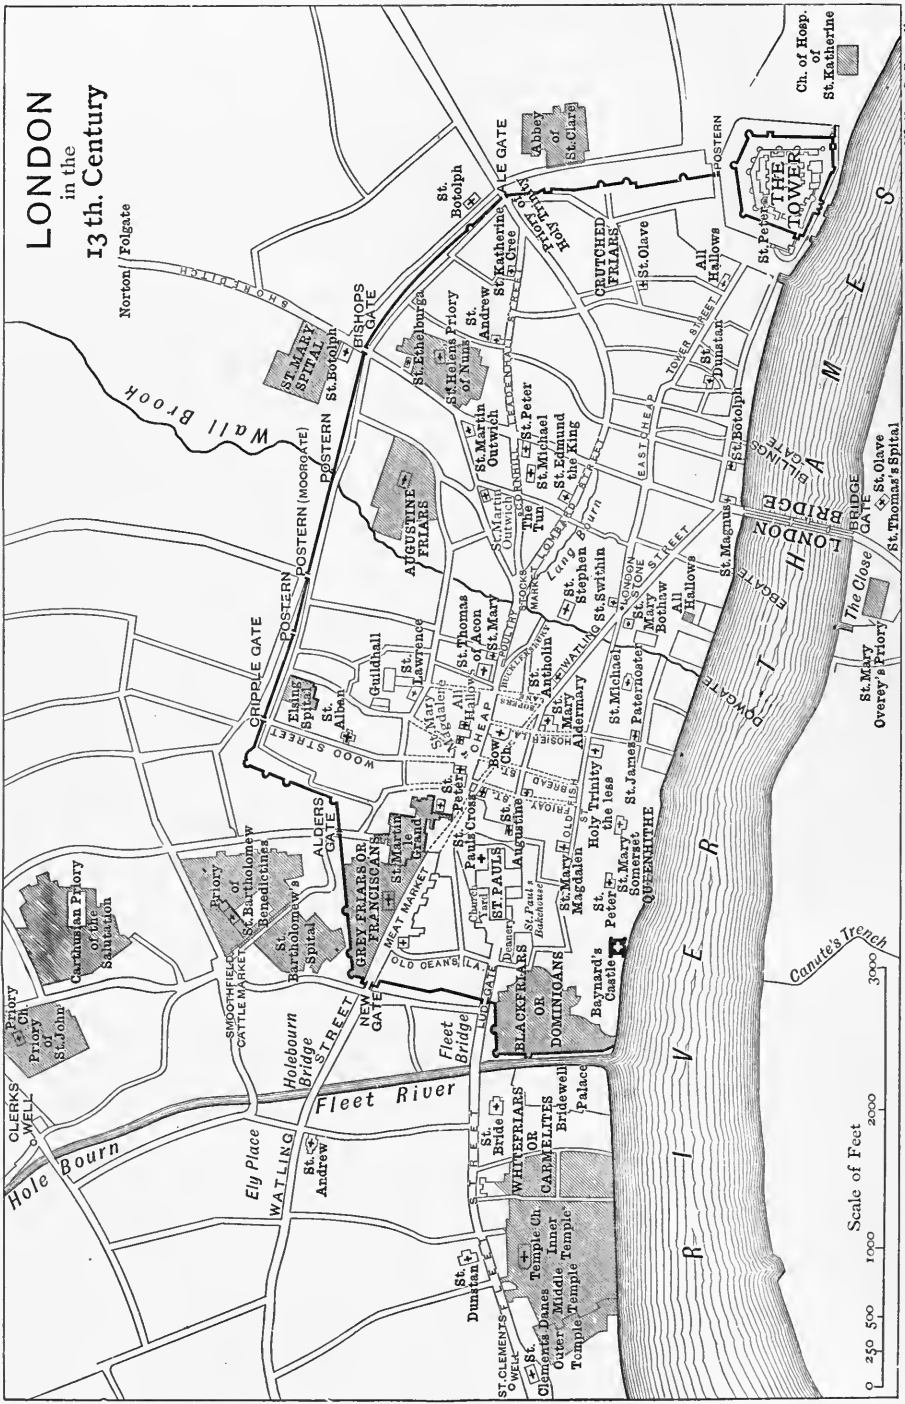

reign of Stephen that the Chronicle died out in the Abbey of Peterborough. But the "Sayings of Ælfred," which embodied the ideal of an English king and gathered a legendary worship round the great name of the English past, show a native literature going on through the reign of Henry the Second. The appearance of a great work of English verse coincides in point of time with the loss of Normandy, and the return of John to his island realm. "There was a priest in the land whose name was Layamon; he was son of Leovenath: may the Lord be gracious to him! He dwelt at Earnley, a noble church on the bank of Severn (good it seemed to him!) near Radstone, where he read books. It came in mind to him and in his chiefest thought that he would tell the noble deeds of England, what the men were named, and whence they came, who first had English land." Journeying far and wide over the land, the priest of Earnley found Bæda and Wace, the books too of S. Albin and S. Austin. "Layamon laid down these books and turned the leaves; he beheld them lovingly: may the Lord be gracious to him! Pen he took with fingers and wrote a book-skin, and the true words set together, and compressed the three books into one." Layamon's church is now Areley, near Bewdley, in Worcestershire. His poem was in fact an expansion of Wace's "Brut," with insertions from Bæda. Historically it is worthless, but as a monument of our language it is beyond all price. After Norman and Angevin English remained unchanged. In more than thirty thousand lines not more than fifty Norman words are to be found. Even the old poetic tradition remains the same; the alliterative metre of the earlier verse is only slightly affected by riming terminations, the similes are the few natural similes of Cædmon, the battles are painted with the same rough, simple joy. It is by no mere accident that the English tongue thus wakes again into written life on the eve of the great struggle between the nation and its King. The artificial forms imposed by the Conquest were falling away from the people as from its literature, and a new England, quickened by the Celtic vivacity of de Map and the Norman daring of Gerald, stood forth to its conflict with John.

SEC. I ENGLISH LITERATURE
 UNDER THE NORMAN AND ANGE-VIN KINGS

Layamon

LONDON in the 13 th. Century

Norton / Folgate

Walker & Bond, sc.

SEC. II

JOHN 1204
TO 1215

Section II.—John, 1204—1215

[Authorities.—Our chief sources of information are the Chronicle embodied in the “Memoriale” of Walter of Coventry; and the “Chronicle of Roger of Wendover,” the first of the published annalists of S. Alban’s, whose work was subsequently revised and continued in a more patriotic tone by another monk of the same abbey, Matthew Paris. The Annals of Waverley, Dunstable, and Burton are important for the period. The great series of the Royal Rolls begin now to be of the highest value. The French authorities as before. For Langton, see Hook’s biography in the “Lives of the Archbishops.” The best modern account of this reign is in Mr. Pearson’s “History of England,” vol. ii.]

“Foul as it is, hell itself is defiled by the fouler presence of John.” The terrible verdict of the King’s contemporaries has passed into the sober judgement of history. Externally John possessed all the quickness, the vivacity, the cleverness, the good-humour, the social charm which distinguished his house. His worst enemies owned that he toiled steadily and closely at the work of administration. He was fond of learned men like Gerald of Wales. He had a strange gift of attracting friends and of winning the love of women. But in his inner soul John was the worst outcome of the Angevins. He united into one mass of wickedness their insolence, their selfishness, their unbridled lust, their cruelty and tyranny, their shamelessness, their superstition, their cynical indifference to honour or truth. In mere boyhood he had torn with brutal levity the beards of the Irish chieftains who came to own him as their lord. His ingratitude and perfidy had brought down his father with sorrow to the grave. To his brother he had been the worst of traitors. All Christendom believed him to be the murderer of his nephew Arthur of Brittany. He abandoned one wife and was faithless to another. His punishments were refinements of cruelty—the starvation of children, the crushing old men under copes of lead. His court was a brothel where no woman was safe from the royal lust, and where his cynicism loved to publish the news of his victims’ shame. He was as craven in his superstition as he was daring in his impiety. He scoffed at priests and turned his back on the mass even amidst the solemnities of his coronation, but he never stirred on a journey without hanging relics round his neck. But with the supreme wickedness

SEC. II
 JOHN 1204
 TO 1215 of his race he inherited its profound ability. His plan for the relief of Château-Gaillard, the rapid march by which he shattered Arthur's hopes at Mirebeau, showed an inborn genius for war. In the rapidity and breadth of his political combinations he far surpassed the statesmen of his time. Throughout his reign we see him quick to discern the difficulties of his position, and inexhaustible in the resources with which he met them. The overthrow of his continental power only spurred him to the formation of a great league which all but brought Philip to the ground ; and the sudden revolt of all England was parried by a shameless alliance with the Papacy. The closer study of John's history clears away the charges of sloth and incapacity with which men tried to explain the greatness of his fall. The awful lesson of his life rests on the fact that it was no weak and indolent voluptuary, but the ablest and most ruthless of the Angevins who lost Normandy, became the vassal of the Pope, and perished in a struggle of despair against English freedom.

The interdict

The whole energies of the King were bent on the recovery of his lost dominions on the Continent. He impatiently collected money and men for the support of the adherents of the House of Anjou who were still struggling against the arms of France in Poitou and Guienne, and had assembled an army at Portsmouth in the summer of 1205, when his project was suddenly thwarted by the resolute opposition of the Primate and the Earl of Pembroke, William Marshal. So completely had both the baronage and the Church been humbled by his father, that the attitude of their representatives indicated the new spirit of national freedom which was rising around the King. John at once braced himself to a struggle with it. The death of Hubert Walter, a few weeks after his protest, enabled him, as it seemed, to neutralize the opposition of the Church by placing a creature of his own at its head. John de Grey, Bishop of Norwich, was elected by the monks of Canterbury at his bidding and enthroned as Primate. In a previous though informal gathering, however, the convent had already chosen its sub-prior, Reginald, as Archbishop, and the rival claimants hastened to appeal to Rome ; but the result of their appeal was a startling one both for themselves and for the King. Innocent the Third, who now occupied the Papal throne, had pushed its claims of supremacy over Christendom further than any of his predecessors : after a careful examination he quashed both the contested elections. The decision was probably a just one ; but Innocent did not stop there ; whether from love of power, or, as may fairly be supposed, in despair of a free election within English bounds, he commanded the monks who appeared before him to elect in his presence Stephen Langton to the archiepiscopal see. Personally a better choice could not have been made, for Stephen was a man who by sheer weight of learning and holiness of life had risen to the dignity of Cardinal, and whose after career placed him in the front rank of English patriots. But in itself the step was an usurpation of the rights both of the Church and of the Crown. The King at once met it with resistance, and replied to the Papal threats of interdict if Langton were any longer excluded from his see, by a counter threat that the interdict should be followed by the banishment of the clergy and the mutilation of every Italian he could seize in the realm. Innocent, however, was not a man to draw back from his purpose, and the interdict fell at last upon the land. All worship save that of a few privileged orders, all administration of the Sacraments save that of private baptism, ceased over the length and breadth of the country : the church-bells were silent, the dead lay unburied on the ground. The King replied by confiscating the lands of the clergy who observed the interdict, by subjecting them in spite of their privileges to the royal courts, and often by leaving outrages on them unpunished. "Let him go," said John, when a Welshman was brought before him for the murder of a priest, "he has killed my enemy!" A year passed before the Pope proceeded to the further sentence of excommunication. John was now formally cut off from the pale of the Church ; but the new sentence was met with the same defiance as the old. Five of the bishops fled over sea, and secret disaffection was spreading widely, but there was no public avoidance of the excommunicated King. An Archdeacon of Norwich who withdrew from his service was crushed to death under a cope of lead, and the hint was sufficient to prevent either prelate or noble from following his example. Though the King stood alone, with nobles estranged from him and the Church against him, his strength seemed utterly unbroken. From the first

SEC. II
 JOHN 1204
 TO 1215

1208

SEC. II
 JOHN 1204
 TO 1215

moment of his rule John had defied the baronage. The promise to satisfy their demand for redress of wrongs in the past reign, a promise made at his election, remained unfulfilled; when the demand was repeated he answered it by seizing their castles and taking their children as hostages for their loyalty. The cost of his fruitless threats of war had been met by heavy and repeated taxation. The quarrel with the Church and fear of their revolt only deepened his oppression of the nobles. He drove De Braose, one of the most powerful of the Lords Marchers, to die in exile, while his wife and grandchildren were believed to have been starved to death in the royal prisons. On the nobles who still clung panic-stricken to the court of the excommunicate king John heaped outrages worse than death. Illegal exactions, the seizure of their castles, the preference shown to foreigners, were small provocations compared with his attacks on the honour of their wives and daughters. But the baronage still submitted; and the King's vigour was seen by the rapidity with which he crushed a rising of the nobles in Ireland, and foiled an outbreak of the Welsh. Hated as he was the land remained still. Only one weapon now remained in Innocent's hands. An excommunicate king had ceased to be a Christian, or to have claims on the obedience of Christian subjects. As spiritual heads of Christendom, the Popes had ere now asserted their right to remove such a ruler from his throne and to give it to a worthier than he; and this right Innocent at last felt himself driven to exercise. He issued a bull of deposition against John, proclaimed a crusade against him, and committed the execution of his sentence to Philip of France. John met it with the same scorn as before. His insolent disdain suffered the Roman legate, Cardinal Pandulf, to proclaim his deposition to his face at Northampton. An enormous army gathered at his call on Barham Down; and the English fleet dispelled all danger of invasion by crossing the Channel, by capturing a number of French ships, and by burning Dieppe.

John's deposition 1212

The Pope's vassal

But it was not in England only that the King showed his strength and activity. Vile as he was, John possessed in a high degree the political ability of his race, and in the diplomatic efforts with which he met the danger from France he showed himself his

SEC. II
JOHN 1204
TO 1215 father's equal. The barons of Poitou were roused to attack Philip from the south. John bought the aid of the Count of Flanders on his northern border. The German King, Otto, pledged himself to bring the knighthood of Germany to support an invasion of France. But at the moment of his success in diplomacy John suddenly gave way. It was in fact the revelation of a danger at home which shook him from his attitude of contemptuous defiance. The bull of deposition gave fresh energy to every enemy. The Scotch King was in correspondence with Innocent. The Welsh Princes who had just been forced to submission broke out again in war. John hanged their hostages, and called his host to muster for a fresh inroad into Wales, but the army met only to become a fresh source of danger. Powerless to resist openly, the baronage had plunged almost to a man into secret conspiracies; many promised aid to Philip on his landing. John, in the midst of hidden enemies, was only saved by the haste with which he disbanded his army and took refuge in Nottingham Castle. His daring self-confidence, the skill of his diplomacy, could no longer hide from him the utter loneliness of his position. At war with Rome, KNIGHT AND SLINGER.

Early Thirteenth Century.
MS. Roy. 1 D. x.

with France, with Scotland, Ireland and Wales, at war with the Church, he saw himself disarmed by this sudden revelation of treason in the one force left at his disposal. With characteristic suddenness he gave way. He endeavoured by remission of fines to win back his people. He negotiated eagerly with the Pope, consented to receive the Archbishop, and promised to repay the money he had extorted from the Church. The shameless ingenuity of the King's temper was seen in his immediate resolve to make Rome his ally, to turn its spiritual thunder

SEC. II
JOHN 1204
TO 1215 against his foes, to use it in breaking up the confederacy it had formed against him. His quick versatile temper saw the momentary gain to be won. On the 15th of May 1213 he knelt before the legate Pandulf, surrendered his kingdom to the Roman See, took it back again as a tributary vassal, swore fealty, and did liege homage to the Pope.

The Battle of Bouvines

In after times men believed that England thrilled at the news with a sense of national shame such as she had never felt before. "He has become the Pope's man," the whole country was said to have murmured; "he has forfeited the very name of King; from a free man he has degraded himself into a serf." But we see little trace of such a feeling in the contemporary accounts of the time. As a political measure indeed the success of John's submission was complete. The French army at once broke up in impotent rage, and when Philip turned against the enemy whom John had raised up for him in Flanders, five hundred English ships under the Earl of Salisbury fell upon the fleet which accompanied his army along the coast and utterly destroyed it. The league which John had so long matured at last disclosed itself. The King himself landed in Poitou, rallied its nobles round him, crossed the Loire in triumph, and won back Angers, the home of his race. At the same time Otto, reinforcing his German army by the knighthood of Flanders and Boulogne as well as by a body of English troops, threatened France from the north. For the moment Philip seemed lost, and yet on the fortunes of Philip hung the fortunes of English freedom. But in this crisis of her fate France was true to herself and her King; the townsmen marched from every borough to Philip's rescue, priests led their flocks to battle with the Church banners flying at their head. The two armies met near the bridge of Bouvines, between Lille and Tournay, and from the first the day went against the allies. The Flemish were the first to fly; then the Germans in the centre were overwhelmed by the numbers of the French; last of all the English on the right were broken by a fierce onset of the Bishop of Beauvais, who charged mace in hand and struck the Earl of Salisbury to the ground. The news of this complete overthrow reached John in the midst of his triumphs in the South, and scattered his hopes to the winds. He was at once deserted by the Poitevin nobles, and a hasty retreat alone enabled him to return, baffled and humiliated, to his island kingdom.

KING OF FRANCE UNHORSED AT BOUVINES.
Drawn by Matthew Paris.
MS. C.C.C. Camb. xvi.

SEC. 11
 JOHN 1204
 TO 1215
 1214

It is to the victory of Bouvines that England owes her Great Charter. From the hour of his submission to the Papacy,

Stephen Langton

John's vengeance on the barons had only been delayed till he should return a conqueror from the fields of France. A sense of their danger nerved the baronage to resistance; they refused to follow the King on his foreign campaign till the excommunication were removed, and when it was removed they still refused, on the plea that they were not bound to serve in wars without the realm. Furious as he was at this new attitude of resistance, the time had not yet come for vengeance, and John sailed for Poitou with the dream of a great victory which should lay

SEAL OF STEPHEN LANGTON, British Museum.

SEC. II
JOHN 1204
TO 1215

Philip and the barons alike at his feet. He returned from his defeat to find the nobles no longer banded together in secret conspiracies, but openly united in a definite claim of liberty and law. The leader in this great change was the new Archbishop whom Innocent had set on the throne of Canterbury. From the moment of his landing in England, Stephen Langton had assumed the constitutional position of the Primate as champion of the old English customs and law against the personal despotism of the Kings. As Anselm had withstood William the Red, as Theobald had rescued England from the lawlessness of Stephen, so Langton prepared to withstand and rescue his country from the tyranny of John. He had already forced him to swear to observe the laws of the Confessor, a phrase in which the whole of the national liberties were summed up. When the baronage refused to sail to Poitou, he compelled the King to deal with them not by arms but by process of law. Far however from being satisfied with resistance such as this to isolated acts of tyranny, it was the Archbishop's aim to restore on a formal basis the older freedom of the realm. The pledges of Henry the First had long been forgotten when the Justiciar, Geoffrey Fitz-Peter, brought them to light at a Council held at S. Albans. There in the King's name the Justiciar promised good government for the time to come, and forbade all royal officers to practise extortion as they prized life and limb. The King's peace was pledged to those who had opposed him in the past; and observance of the laws of Henry the First was enjoined upon all within the realm. Langton saw the vast importance of such a precedent. In a fresh meeting of the barons at S. Paul's he produced the Charter of Henry the First, and it was at once welcomed as a base for the needed reforms. All hope however hung on the fortunes of the French campaign; the victory at Bouvines gave strength to John's opponents, and after the King's landing the barons secretly met at S. Edmundsbury, and swore to demand from him, if needful by force of arms, the restoration of their liberties by Charter under the King's seal. Early in January in the year 1215 they presented themselves in arms before the King, and preferred their claim. The few months that followed showed John the uselessness of resistance; nobles and Churchmen were alike arrayed against him, and the commissioners whom he sent to plead his cause at the shire-courts brought back the news that no man would help him against the Charter. At Easter the barons again gathered in arms at Brackley, and renewed their claim. "Why do they not ask for my kingdom?" cried John in a burst of passion; but the whole country rose as one man at his refusal. London threw open her gates to the forces of the barons, now organised under Robert Fitz-Walter as "Marshal of the Army of God and Holy

SEC. II
JOHN 1204
TO 1215

SEAL OF ROBERT FITZ-WALTER.
British Museum.

Church." The example of the capital was followed by Exeter and Lincoln; promises of aid came from Scotland and Wales; the northern barons marched hastily to join their comrades in London. There was a moment when John found himself with seven knights at his back and before him a nation in arms. He had summoned mercenaries and appealed to his liege lord, the Pope: but summons and appeals were alike too late. Nursing wrath in his heart the tyrant bowed to necessity, and called the barons to a conference at Runnymede.

SEC. III
 THE GREAT CHARTER
 1215
 TO 1217

Section III.—The Great Charter, 1215—1217

[Authorities.—The text of the Charter is given by Dr. Stubbs, with valuable comments, in his “Select Charters.” Mr. Pearson gives a useful analysis of it.]

1215
 June 15

An island in the Thames between Staines and Windsor had been chosen as the place of conference: the King encamped on one bank, while the barons covered the marshy flat, still known by the name of Runnymede, on the other. Their delegates met in the island between them, but the negotiations were a mere cloak to cover John's purpose of unconditional submission. The Great Charter was discussed, agreed to, and signed in a single day.

One copy of it still remains in the British Museum, injured by age and fire, but with the royal seal still hanging from the brown, shrivelled parchment. It is impossible to gaze without reverence on the earliest monument of English freedom which we can see with our own eyes and touch with our own hands, the great Charter to which from age to age patriots have looked back as the basis of English liberty. But in itself the Charter was no novelty, nor did it claim to establish any new constitutional principles. The Charter of Henry the First formed the basis of the whole, and the additions to it are for the most part formal recognitions of the judicial and administrative changes introduced by Henry the Second. But the vague expressions of the older charter were now exchanged for precise and elaborate provisions. The bonds of unwritten custom which the older grant did little more than recognize had proved too weak to hold the Angevins; and the baronage now threw them aside for the restraints of written law. It is in this way that the Great Charter marks the transition from the age of traditional rights, preserved in the nation's memory and officially declared by the Primate, to the age of written legislation, of Parliaments and Statutes, which was soon to come. The Church had shown its power of self-defence in the struggle over the interdict, and the clause which recognized its rights alone retained the older and general form. But all vagueness ceases when the Charter passes on to deal with the rights of Englishmen at large, their right to justice, to security of person and property, to good Handwritten text in Arabic script, likely a historical document or manuscript. The text is dense and covers most of the page.

THE GREAT CHARTER.
British Museum.

SEC. III
 THE GREAT CHARTER
 1215
 TO 1217 government. "No freeman," ran the memorable article that lies at the base of our whole judicial system, "shall be seized or imprisoned, or dispossessed, or outlawed, or in any way brought to ruin: we will not go against any man nor send against him, save by legal judgement of his peers or by the law of the land." "To no man will we sell," runs another, "or deny, or delay, right or justice." The great reforms of the past reigns were now formally recognized; judges of assize were to hold their circuits four times in the year, and the King's Court was no longer to follow the King in his wanderings over the realm, but to sit in a fixed place. But the denial of justice under John was a small danger compared with the lawless exactions both of himself and his predecessor. Richard had increased the amount of the scutage which Henry the Second had introduced, and applied it to raise funds for his ransom. He had restored the Danegeld, or land-tax, so often abolished, under the new name of "carucage," had seized the wool of the Cistercians and the plate of the churches, and rated moveables as well as land. John had again raised the rate of scutage, and imposed aids, fines, and ransoms at his pleasure without counsel of the baronage. The Great Charter met this abuse by the provision on which our constitutional system rests. With the exception of the three customary feudal aids which still remained to the Crown, "no scutage or aid shall be imposed in our realm save by the common council of the realm;" and to this Great Council it was provided that prelates and the greater barons should be summoned by special writ, and all tenants in chief through the sheriffs and bailiffs, at least forty days before. The provision defined what had probably been the common usage of the realm; but the definition turned it into a national right, a right so momentous that on it rests our whole Parliamentary life.

The Charter
 and the People

The rights which the barons claimed for themselves they claimed for the nation at large. The boon of free and unbought justice was a boon for all, but a special provision protected the poor. The forfeiture of the freeman on conviction of felony was never to include his tenement, or that of the merchant his wares, or that of the countryman his wain. The means of actual livelihood were to be left even to the worst. The under-tenants or farmers were protected against all lawless exactions of their lords in precisely the same terms as these were protected against the lawless exactions of the Crown. The towns were secured in the enjoyment of their municipal privileges, their freedom from arbitrary taxation, their rights of justice, of common deliberation, of regulation of trade. "Let the city of London have all its old liberties and its free customs, as well by land as by water. Besides this, we will and grant that all other cities, and boroughs, and towns, and ports, have all their liberties and free customs." The influence of the trading class is seen in two other enactments, by which freedom of journeying and trade was secured to foreign merchants, and an uniformity of weights and measures was ordered to be enforced throughout the realm. There remained only one question, and that the most difficult of all; the question how to secure this order which the Charter had established in the actual government of the realm. The immediate abuses were easily swept away, the hostages restored to their homes, the foreigners banished from the country. But it was less easy to provide means for the control of a King whom no man could trust, and a council of twenty-five barons were chosen from the general body of their order to enforce on John the observance of the Charter, with the right of declaring war on the King should its provisions be infringed. Finally, the Charter was published throughout the whole country, and sworn to at every hundred-mote and town-mote, by order from the King.

SEC. III
 THE GREAT CHARTER
 1215
 TO 1217

EFFIGY OF JOHN, ON HIS TOMB IN WORCESTER CATHEDRAL.

"They have given me five-and-twenty over-kings," cried John

SEC. III
 THE GREAT CHARTER
 1215
 TO 1217
 John
 and the Charter

in a burst of fury, flinging himself on the floor and gnawing sticks and straw in his impotent rage. But the rage soon passed into the subtle policy of which he was a master. Some days after he left Windsor, and lingered for months along the southern shore, waiting for news of the aid he had solicited from Rome and from the Continent. It was not without definite purpose that he had become the vassal of Rome. While Innocent was dreaming of a vast Christian Empire with the Pope at its head to enforce justice and religion on his under-kings, John believed that the Papal protection would enable him to rule as tyrannically as he would. The thunders of the Papacy were to be ever at hand for his protection, as the armies of England are at hand to protect the vileness and oppression of a Turkish Sultan or a Nizam of Hyderabad. His envoys were already at Rome, and Innocent, indignant that a matter which might have been brought before his court of appeal as overlord should have been dealt with by armed revolt, annulled the Great Charter and suspended Stephen Langton from the exercise of his office as Primate. Autumn brought a host of foreign soldiers from over sea to the King's standard, and advancing against the disorganised forces of the barons, John starved Rochester into submission and marched ravaging through the midland counties to the North, while his mercenaries spread like locusts over the whole face of the land. From Berwick the King turned back triumphant to coop up his enemies in London, while fresh Papal excommunications fell on the barons and the city. But the burghers set Innocent at defiance. "The ordering of secular matters appertaineth not to the Pope," they said, in words that seem like mutterings of the coming Lollardry; and at the advice of Simon Langton, the Archbishop's brother, bells swung out and mass was celebrated as before. With the undisciplined militia of the country and the towns, however, success was impossible against the trained forces of the King, and despair drove the barons to seek aid from France. Philip had long been waiting the opportunity for his revenge upon John, and his son Lewis at once accepted the crown in spite of Innocent's excommunications, and landed in Kent with a considerable force. As the barons had foreseen, the French mercenaries who constituted John's host refused to fight against the French sovereign. The whole aspect of affairs was suddenly reversed. Deserted by the bulk of his

WILLIAM MARSHAL, FROM HIS TOMB IN THE TEMPLE CHURCH, LONDON.

troops, the King was forced to fall rapidly back on the Welsh Marches, while his rival entered London, and received the submission of the larger part of England. Only Dover held out obstinately against Lewis. By a series of rapid marches John succeeded in distracting the plans of the barons and in relieving Lincoln ; then after a short stay at Lynn he crossed the Wash in a fresh movement to the north. In crossing, however, his army was surprised by the tide, and his baggage with the royal treasures washed away.

The fever which seized the baffled tyrant in the abbey of Swineshead was inflamed by a gluttonous debauch, and John entered Newark only to die. His death changed the whole face of affairs, for his son Henry was but a child of nine years old, and the royal authority passed into the hands of one who stands high among English patriots, William Marshal. The boy-king was hardly crowned when the Earl and the Papal Legate issued in his name the very Chârter against which his father had died fighting ; only the clauses which regulated taxation and the summoning of Parliament were as yet declared to be suspended. The nobles soon

SEC. III
THE GREAT CHARTER
1215
TO 1217

The Earl Marshal

SEC. III
 THE GREAT CHARTER
 1215
 TO 1217

Fair of Lincoln
 1217

streamed away from the French camp ; for national jealousy and suspicions of treason told heavily against Lewis, while the pity which was excited by the youth and helplessness of Henry was aided by a sense of injustice in burthening the child with the iniquity of his father. One bold stroke of William Marshal decided the struggle. A joint army of French and English barons under the Count of Perche and Robert Fitz-Walter was besieging Lincoln, when the Earl, rapidly gathering forces from the royal castles, marched to its relief. Cooped up in the steep narrow streets, and attacked at once by the Earl and the garrison, the barons fled in hopeless rout ; the Count of Perche fell on the field ; Robert Fitz-Walter was taken prisoner. Lewis, who was investing Dover, retreated to London, and called for aid from France. But a more terrible defeat crushed his remaining hopes. A small English fleet, which had set sail from Dover under Hubert de Burgh, fell boldly on the reinforcements which were crossing under the escort of Eustace the Monk, a well-known freebooter of the Channel. The fight admirably illustrates the naval warfare of the time. From the decks of the English vessels bowmen poured their arrows into the crowded transports, others hurled quicklime into their enemies' faces, while the more active vessels crashed with their armed prows into the sides of the French ships. The skill of the mariners of the Cinque Ports decided the day against the larger forces of their opponents, and the fleet of Eustace was utterly destroyed. The royal army at once closed in upon London, but resistance was really at an end. By the treaty of Lambeth Lewis promised to withdraw from England on payment of a sum which he claimed as debt ; his adherents were restored to their possessions, the liberties of London and other towns confirmed, and the prisoners on either side set at liberty. The expulsion of the stranger left English statesmen free to take up again the work of reform ; and a fresh issue of the Charter, though in its modified form, proclaimed clearly the temper and policy of the Earl Marshal.

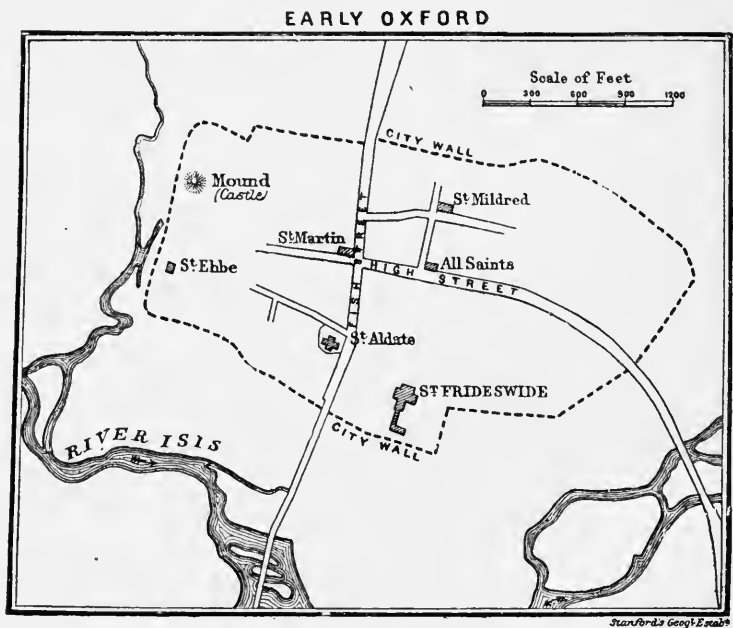

Section IV.—The Universities

SEC. IV
—
THE UNIVER-SITIES
—

[Authorities.—For the Universities we have the collection of materials edited by Mr. Anstey under the name of “Munimenta Academica.” I have borrowed much from two papers of my own in “Macmillan’s Magazine,” on “The Early History of Oxford.” For Bacon, see his “Opera Inedita,” in the Rolls Series, with Mr. Brewer’s admirable introduction, and Dr. Whewell’s estimate of him in his “History of the Inductive Sciences.”]

From the turmoil of civil politics we turn to the more silent but hardly less important revolution from which we may date our national education. It is in the reign of Henry the Third that the English universities begin to exercise a definite influence on the intellectual life of Englishmen. Of the early history of Cambridge we know little or nothing, but enough remains to enable us to trace the early steps by which Oxford attained to its intellectual eminence. The establishment of the great schools which bore the name of Universities was everywhere throughout Europe a special mark of the new impulse that Christendom had gained from the Crusades. A new fervour of study sprang up in the West from its contact with the more cultured East. Travellers like Adelard of Bath brought back the first rudiments of physical and mathematical science from the schools of Cordova or Bagdad. In the twelfth century a classical revival restored Cæsar and Vergil to the list of monastic studies, and left its stamp on the pedantic style, the profuse classical quotations of writers like William of Malmesbury or John of Salisbury. The scholastic philosophy sprang up in the schools of Paris. The Roman law was revived by the imperialist doctors of Bologna. The long mental inactivity of feudal Europe broke up like ice before a summer’s sun. Wandering teachers such as Lanfranc or Anselm crossed sea and land to spread the new power of knowledge. The same spirit of restlessness, of inquiry, of impatience with the older traditions of mankind, either local or intellectual, that had hurried half Christendom to the tomb of its Lord, crowded the roads with thousands of young scholars hurrying to the chosen seats where teachers were gathered together. A new power had sprung up in the midst of a world as yet under the rule of sheer brute force. Poor as they were, sometimes even of servile race, the wandering scholars who lectured in every cloister were hailed as "masters" by the crowds at their feet. Abelard was a foe worthy of the menaces of councils, of the thunders of the Church. The teaching of a single Lombard was of note enough in England to draw down the prohibition of a King. When Vacarius, probably a guest in the court of Archbishop Theobald, where Beket and John of Salisbury were already busy with the study of the Civil Law, opened lectures on it at Oxford, he was at once silenced by Stephen, who was then at war with the Church, and jealous of the power which the wreck of the royal authority was throwing into Theobald's hands.

Oxford At the time of the arrival of Vacarius Oxford stood in the first rank among English towns. Its town church of S. Martin rose from the midst of a huddled group of houses, girt in with massive walls, that lay along the dry upper ground of a low peninsula between the streams of Cherwell and the upper Thames. The ground fell gently on either side, eastward and westward, to these rivers, while on the south a sharper descent led down across swampy meadows to the city bridge. Around lay a wild forest

SOUTH VIEW OF NORTH GATE OR BOCARDO, WITH TOWER OF S. MICHAEL'S CHURCH, OXFORD.

OLD CHURCH OF S. MARTIN, OXFORD.
Re-built temp. Edward III. ; demolished in eighteenth century.
Skelton, "Oxonia Antiqua Restaurata."

SEC. IV
 THE UNIVER-SITIES

country, the moors of Cowley and Bullingdon fringing the course of Thames, the great woods of Shotover and Bagley closing the horizon to the south and east. Though the two huge towers of its Norman castle marked the strategic importance of Oxford as commanding the river valley along which the commerce of Southern England mainly flowed, its walls formed, perhaps, the

WATCH-TOWER ON HYTHE BRIDGE, CALLED "FRIAR BACON'S STUDY."
 Twelfth or Thirteenth Century.
Skelton, "Oxonia Antiqua Restaurata."

least element in its military strength, for on every side but the north the town was guarded by the swampy meadows along Cherwell, or by the intricate network of streams into which the Thames breaks among the meadows of Osney. From the midst of these meadows rose a mitred abbey of Austin Canons, which, with the older priory of S. Frideswide, gave the town some ecclesiastical dignity. The residence of the Norman house of the D'Oillis within its castle, the frequent visits of English kings to a palace without its walls, the presence again and again of important councils, marked its political weight within the realm.

SEC. IV
THE UNIVERSITIES

HYTHE BRIDGE AND CASTLE TOWER, OXFORD.
Skelton, "Oxonia Antiqua Restaurata."

The settlement of one of the wealthiest among the English Jewries in the very heart of the town indicated, while it promoted, the activity of its trade. No place better illustrates the transformation of the land in the hands of its Norman masters, the sudden

HOME FOR CONVERTED JEWS, OR DOMUS CONVERSORUM, OXFORD.
Founded 1235; demolished 1750.
Skelton, "Oxonia Antiqua Restaurata."

outburst of industrial effort, the sudden expansion of commerce and accumulation of wealth which followed the Conquest. To the west of the town rose one of the stateliest of English castles, and in the meadows beneath the hardly less stately abbey of

SEC. IV
THE UNIVER-SITIES

Osney In the fields to the north the last of the Norman kings raised his palace of Beaumont. The canons of S. Frideswide reared the church which still exists as the diocesan cathedral, while the piety of the Norman Castellans rebuilt almost all the parish churches of the city, and founded within their new castle walls the church of the Canons of S. George. We know nothing of the causes which drew students and teachers within the walls of Oxford. It is possible that here as elsewhere a new teacher had quickened older educational foundations, and that the cloisters of Osney and S. Frideswide already possessed schools which burst into a larger life under the impulse of Vacarius. As yet, however, the fortunes of the University were obscured by the glories of Paris. English scholars gathered in thousands round the chairs of William of Champeaux or Abelard. The English took their place as one of the "nations" of the French University. John of Salisbury became famous as one of the Parisian teachers.

REMAINS OF OSNEY ABBEY.
From an engraving by W. Hollar.

Beket wandered to Paris from his school at Merton. But through the peaceful reign of Henry the Second Oxford was quietly increasing in numbers and repute. Forty years after the visit of Vacarius its educational position was fully established. When Gerald of Wales read his amusing Topography of Ireland to its

SEC. IV
THE UNIVERSITIES

S. FRIDESWIDE'S PRIORY CHURCH (NOW THE CATHEDRAL), OXFORD.
Ingram, "Memorials of Oxford."

students, the most learned and famous of the English clergy were, he tells us, to be found within its walls. At the opening of the thirteenth century Oxford was without a rival in its own country, while in European celebrity it took rank with the greatest schools of the Western world. But to realize this Oxford of the past we must dismiss from our minds all recollections of the Oxford of the present. In the outer aspect of the new University there was nothing of the pomp that overawes the freshman as he first paces the "High," or looks down from the gallery of S. Mary's. In the stead of long fronts of venerable colleges, of stately walks beneath immemorial elms, history plunges us into the mean and filthy lanes of a mediæval town. Thousands of boys, huddled in bare lodging-houses, clustering round teachers as poor as themselves in church porch and house porch, drinking, quarrelling, dicing, begging at the SEAL OF OXFORD UNIVERSITY, c. 1300.

SEC. IV
THE UNIVERSITIES

Ingram, "Memorials of Oxford."

corners of the streets, take the place of the brightly-coloured train of doctors and Heads. Mayor and Chancellor struggled in vain to enforce order or peace on this seething mass of turbulent life. The retainers who followed their young lords to the University fought out the feuds of their houses in the streets. Scholars from Kent and scholars from Scotland waged the bitter struggle of North and South. At nightfall roysterer and reveller roamed with torches through the narrow lanes, defying bailiffs, and cutting down burghers at their doors. Now a mob of clerks plunged into the Jewry, and wiped off the memory of bills and bonds by sacking a Hebrew house or two. Now a tavern row between scholar and townsman widened into a general broil, and the academical bell of S. Mary's vied with the town bell of S. Martin's in clanging to arms. Every phase of ecclesiastical controversy or political strife was preluded by some fierce

SEC. IV
—
THE UNIVER-SITIES
—

SEAL OF OXFORD CITY.
Ingram, "Memorials of Oxford."

outbreak in this turbulent, surging mob. When England growled at the exactions of the Papacy, the students besieged a legate in the abbot's house at Osney. A murderous town and gown row preceded the opening of the Barons' War. "When Oxford draws knife," ran the old rime, "England's soon at strife."

But the turbulence and stir was a stir and turbulence of life. A keen thirst for knowledge, a passionate poetry of devotion, gathered thousands round the poorest scholar, and welcomed

Edmund Rich

SEC. IV
THE UNIVERSITIES

the barefoot friar. Edmund Rich—Archbishop of Canterbury and saint in later days—came to Oxford, a boy of twelve years old, from the little lane at Abingdon that still bears his name. He found his school in an inn that belonged to the abbey of

HOSPITAL AT OXFORD BUILT BY HENRY III., 1233.

Drawn by Matthew Paris.
MS. Roy. 14 C. vii.

Eynsham, where his father had taken refuge from the world. His mother was a pious woman of the day, too poor to give her boy much outfit besides the hair shirt that he promised to wear every Wednesday; but Edmund was no poorer than his neighbours. He plunged at once into the nobler life of the place, its ardour for knowledge, its mystical piety. "Secretly," perhaps at eventide when the shadows were gathering in the church of S. Mary's, and the crowd of teachers and students had left its aisles, the boy stood before an image of the Virgin, and placing a ring of gold upon its finger took Mary for his bride. Years of study, broken by a fever that raged among the crowded, noisome streets, brought the time for completing his education at Paris; and Edmund, hand in hand with a brother Robert of his, begged his way, as poor scholars were wont, to the great school of Western Christendom. Here a damsel, heedless of his tonsure, wooed him so pertinaciously that Edmund consented at last to an assignation; but when he appeared it was in company of grave academical officials, who, as the maiden declared in the hour of penitence which followed, "straightway whipped the offending Eve out of her." Still true to his Virgin bridal, Edmund, on his return from Paris, became the most popular of Oxford teachers. It is to him that Oxford owes her first introduction to the Logic of Aristotle. We see him in the little room which he hired, with the Virgin's chapel hard by, his grey gown reaching to his feet, ascetic in his devotion, falling asleep in lecture time after a sleepless night of prayer, with a grace and cheerfulness of manner which told of his French training, and a chivalrous love of knowledge that let his pupils pay what they would. "Ashes to ashes, dust to dust," the young tutor would say, a touch of scholarly pride perhaps mingling with his contempt of worldly things, as he threw down the fee on the dusty window-ledge, whence a thievish student would sometimes run off with it. But even knowledge brought its troubles; the Old Testament, which with a copy of the Decretals long formed his sole library, frowned down upon a love of secular learning from which Edmund found it hard to wean himself. At last, in some hour of dream, the form of his dead mother floated into the room where the teacher stood among his mathematical diagrams. "What are these?" she seemed to say; and seizing Edmund's right hand, she drew on the palm three circles interlaced, each of which bore the name of one of the Persons of the Christian Trinity. "Be these," she cried, as her figure faded away, "thy diagrams henceforth, my son."

SEC. IV
THE UNIVERSITIES
AND FEUDALISM

The story admirably illustrates the real character of the new training, and the latent opposition between the spirit of the Univer-

The Universities and Feudal-ism

PART OF AUSTIN FRIARY, OXFORD.
Founded A.D. 1268; demolished 1801.
Skelton, "Oxonia Antiqua Restaurata."

sities and the spirit of the Church. The feudal and ecclesiastical order of the old mediæval world were both alike threatened by

SEC. IV
 THE UNIVER-SITIES

the power that had so strangely sprung up in the midst of them. Feudalism rested on local isolation, on the severance of kingdom from kingdom and barony from barony, on the distinction of blood and race, on the supremacy of material or brute force, on an allegiance determined by accidents of place and social position. The University, on the other hand, was a protest against this isolation of man from man. The smallest school was European and not local. Not merely every province of France, but every people of Christendom, had its place among the "nations" of Paris or Padua. A common language, the BIHAM HALL AND POSTMASTER'S HALL, OXFORD.

 Thirteenth and Fourteenth Centuries.
Skelton, "Oxonia Antiqua Restaurata."

Latin tongue, superseded within academical bounds the warring tongues of Europe. A common intellectual kinship and rivalry took the place of the petty strifes which parted province from province or realm from realm. What the Church and Empire had both aimed at and both failed in, the knitting of Christian nations together into a vast commonwealth, the Universities for a time actually did. Dante felt himself as little a stranger in the "Latin" quarter around Mont Ste. Geneviève as under the arches of Bologna. Wandering Oxford scholars carried the writings of Wyclif to the libraries of Prague. In England the work of provincial fusion was less difficult or important than elsewhere, but even in England work had to be done. The feuds of Northerner and Southerner which so long disturbed the discipline of Oxford witnessed at any rate to the fact that Northerner and Southerner had at last been brought face to face in its streets. And here as elsewhere the spirit of national isolation was held in check by the larger comprehensiveness of the University. After the dissensions that threatened the prosperity of Paris in the thirteenth century, Norman and Gascon mingled with Englishmen in Oxford lecture-halls. At a later time the rebellion of Owen Glyndwr found

SEC. IV
THE UNIVERSITIES

GLOUCESTER HALL (NOW WORCESTER COLLEGE), OXFORD.
From an engraving by Loggan, c. 1673.

hundreds of Welshmen gathered round its teachers. And within this strangely mingled mass, society and government rested on a purely democratic basis. Among Oxford scholars the son of the noble stood on precisely the same footing with the poorest mendicant. Wealth, physical strength, skill in arms, pride of ancestry and blood, the very grounds on which feudal society rested, went for nothing in the lecture-room. The University was a state absolutely self-governed, and whose citizens were admitted by a purely intellectual franchise. Knowledge made the "master." To know more than one's fellows was a man's sole claim to be a "ruler" in the schools: and within this

SEC. IV
 THE UNIVER-SITIES

intellectual aristocracy all were equal. When the free commonwealth of the masters gathered in the aisles of S. Mary's all had an equal right to counsel, all had an equal vote in the final decision. Treasury and library were at their complete disposal. It was their voice that named every officer, that proposed and sanctioned every statute. Even the Chancellor, their head, who had at first been an officer of the Bishop, became an elected officer of their own.

The Universities
 and the Church

If the democratic spirit of the Universities threatened feudalism, their spirit of intellectual inquiry threatened the Church. To all outer seeming they were purely ecclesiastical bodies. The wide

BUILDINGS OF MERTON COLLEGE, OXFORD.
 Early Fourteenth Century.

Skelton, "Oxonia Antiqua Restaurata."

extension which mediæval usage gave to the word "orders" gathered the whole educated world within the pale of the clergy. Whatever might be their age or proficiency, scholar and teacher were alike clerks, free from lay responsibilities or the control of civil tribunals, and amenable only to the rule of the Bishop and the sentence of his spiritual courts. This ecclesiastical character of the University appeared in that of its head. The Chancellor, as we have seen, was at first no officer of the University, but of the ecclesiastical body under whose shadow it had sprung into life.

At Oxford he was simply the local officer of the Bishop of Lincoln, within whose immense diocese the University was then situated. But this identification in outer form with the Church only rendered more conspicuous the difference of its spirit. The sudden expansion of the field of education diminished the importance of those purely ecclesiastical and theological studies which had hitherto absorbed the whole intellectual energies of mankind. The revival of classical literature, the rediscovery as it were of an older and a greater world, the contact with a larger, freer life, whether in mind, in society, or in politics, introduced a spirit of scepticism, of doubt, of denial into the realms of unquestioning belief. Abelard claimed for reason the supremacy over faith. Florentine poets discussed with a smile the immortality of the soul. Even to Dante, while he censures these, Vergil is as sacred as Jeremiah. The imperial ruler in whom the new culture took its most notable form, Frederick the Second, the "World's Wonder" of his time, was regarded by half Europe as no better than an infidel. A faint revival of physical science, so long crushed as magic by the dominant ecclesiasticism, brought Christians into perilous contact with the Moslem and the Jew. The books of the Rabbis were no longer a mere accursed thing to Roger Bacon. The scholars of Cordova were no mere Paynim swine to Adelard of Bath. How slowly indeed and against what obstacles science won its way we know from the witness of Roger Bacon. "Slowly," he tells us, "has any portion of the philosophy of Aristotle come into use among the Latins. His Natural Philosophy and his Metaphysics, with the Commentaries of Averroes and others, were translated in my time, and interdicted at Paris up to the year of grace 1237 because of their assertion of the eternity of the world and of time, and because of the book of the divinations by dreams (which is the third book, De Somniis et Vigiliis), and because of many passages erroneously translated. Even his Logic was slowly received and lectured on. For St. Edmund, the Archbishop of Canterbury, was the first in my time who read the Elements at Oxford. And I have seen Master Hugo, who first read the book of Posterior Analytics, and I have seen his writing. So there were but few, considering the multitude of the Latins, who were of any account in the philosophy of Aristotle ;

SEC. IV

THE UNIVERSITIESRoger Bacon
1214-1292

may, very few indeed, and scarcely any up to this year of grace 1292."

We shall see in a later page how fiercely the Church fought against this tide of opposition, and how it won back the allegiance of the Universities through the begging Friars. But it was in the ranks of the Friars themselves that the intellectual progress of the Universities found its highest representative. The life of Roger Bacon almost covers the thirteenth century; he was the child of royalist parents, who had been driven into exile and reduced to poverty by the civil wars. From Oxford, where he studied under Edmund of Abingdon, to whom he owed his introduction to the works of Aristotle, he passed to the University of Paris, where his whole heritage was spent in costly studies and experiments. "From my youth up," he writes, "I have laboured at the sciences and tongues. I have sought the friendship of all men among the Latins who had any reputation for knowledge. I have caused youths to be instructed in languages, geometry, arithmetic, the construction of tables and instruments, and many needful things besides." The difficulties in the way of such studies as he had resolved to pursue were immense. He was without instruments or means of experiment. "Without mathematical instruments no science can be mastered," he complains afterwards, "and these instruments are not to be found among the Latins, nor could they be made for two or three hundred pounds. Besides, better tables are indispensably necessary, tables on which the motions of the heavens are certified from the beginning to the end of the world without daily labour, but these tables are worth a king's ransom, and could not be made without a vast expense. I have often attempted the composition of such tables, but could not finish them through failure of means and the folly of those whom I had to employ." Books were difficult and sometimes even impossible to procure. "The philosophical works of Aristotle, of Avicenna, of Seneca, of Cicero, and other ancients cannot be had without great cost; their principal works have not been translated into Latin, and copies of others are not to be found in ordinary libraries or elsewhere. The admirable books of Cicero de Republica are not to be found anywhere, so far as I can hear, though I have made anxious inquiry for them in different parts of the world, and by various messengers. I could never find the works of Seneca, though I made diligent search for them during twenty years and more. And so it is with many more most useful books connected with the science of morals." It is only words like these of his own that bring home to us the keen thirst for knowledge, the patience, the energy of Roger Bacon. He returned as a teacher to Oxford, and a touching record of his devotion to those whom he taught remains in the story of John of London, a boy of fifteen, whose ability raised him above the general level of his pupils. "When he came to me as a poor boy," says Bacon, in recommending him to the Pope, "I caused him to be nurtured and instructed for the love of God, especially since for aptitude and innocence I have never found so towardly a youth. Five or six years ago I caused him to be taught in languages, mathematics, and optics, and I have gratuitously instructed him with my own lips since the time that I received your mandate. There is no one at Paris who knows so much of the root of philosophy, though he has not produced the branches, flowers, and fruit because of his youth, and because he has had no experience in teaching. But he has the means of surpassing all the Latins if he live to grow old and goes on as he has begun."

The pride with which he refers to his system of instruction was justified by the wide extension which he gave to scientific teaching in Oxford. It is probably of himself that he speaks when he tells us that "the science of optics has not hitherto been lectured on at Paris or elsewhere among the Latins, save twice at Oxford." It was a science on which he had laboured for ten years. But his teaching seems to have fallen on a barren soil. From the moment when the friars settled in the Universities scholasticism absorbed the whole mental energy of the student world. The temper of the age was against scientific or philosophical studies. The older enthusiasm for knowledge was dying down; the study of law was the one source of promotion, whether in Church or state; philosophy was discredited, literature in its purer forms became almost extinct. After forty years of incessant study, Bacon found himself in his own words "unheard, forgotten, buried." He seems at one time to have been wealthy, but his wealth was gone. "During the twenty years that I have specially laboured in the attainment of wisdom, abandoning the path of common men, I have spent on these pursuits more than two thousand pounds, on account of the cost of books, experiments, instruments, tables, the acquisition of languages, and the like. Add to all this the sacrifices I have made to procure the friendship of the wise, and to obtain well-instructed assistants." Ruined and baffled in his hopes, Bacon listened to the counsels of his friend Grosseteste and renounced the world. He became a friar of the order of S. Francis, an order where books and study were looked upon as hindrances to the work which it had specially undertaken, that of preaching among the masses of the poor. He had written hardly anything. So far was he from attempting to write, that his new superiors had prohibited him from publishing anything under pain of forfeiture of the book and penance of bread and water. But we can see the craving of his mind, the passionate instinct of creation which marks the man of genius, in the joy with which he seized the strange opportunity which suddenly opened before him. "Some few chapters on different subjects, written at the entreaty of friends," seem to have got abroad, and were brought by one of his chaplains under the notice of Clement the Fourth. The Pope at once invited him to write. Again difficulties stood in his way. Materials, transcription, and other expenses for such a work as he projected would cost at least £60, and the Pope had not sent a penny. He begged help from his family, but they were ruined like himself. No one would lend to a mendicant friar, and when his friends raised the money it was by pawning their goods in the hope of repayment from Clement. Nor was this all; the work itself, abstruse and scientific as was its subject, had to be treated in a clear and popular form to gain the Papal ear. But difficulties which would have crushed another man only roused Roger Bacon to an almost superhuman energy. In little more than a year the work was done. The "greater work," itself in modern form a closely printed folio, with its successive summaries and appendices in the "lesser" and the "third" works (which make a good octavo more) were produced and forwarded to the Pope within fifteen months.

SEC. IV
 THE UNIVERSITIES

The Opus Majus

No trace of this fiery haste remains in the book itself. The "Opus Majus" is alike wonderful in plan and detail. Bacon's main plan, in the words of Dr. Whewell, is "to urge the necessity of a reform in the mode of philosophizing, to set forth the reasons why knowledge had not made a greater progress, to draw back attention to sources of knowledge which had been unwisely neglected, to discover other sources which were yet wholly unknown, and to animate men to the undertaking by a prospect of the vast advantages which it offered." The development of his scheme is on the largest scale; he gathers together the whole knowledge of his time on every branch of science which it possessed, and as he passes them in review he suggests improvements in nearly all. His labours, both here and in his after works, in the field of grammar and philology, his perseverance in insisting on the necessity of correct texts, of an accurate knowledge of languages, of an exact interpretation, are hardly less remarkable than his scientific investigations. But from grammar he passes to mathematics, from mathematics to experimental philosophy. Under the name of mathematics was included all the physical science of the time. "The neglect of it for nearly thirty or forty years," pleads Bacon passionately, "hath nearly destroyed the entire studies of Latin Christendom. For he who knows not mathematics cannot know any other sciences: and what is more, he cannot discover his own ignorance or find its proper remedies." Geography, chronology, arithmetic, music, are brought into something of scientific form, and the same rapid examination is devoted to the question of climate, to hydrography, geography, and astrology. The subject of optics, his own especial study, is treated with greater fulness; he enters into the question of the anatomy of the eye, besides discussing the problems which lie more strictly within the province of optical science. In a word, the "Greater Work," to borrow the phrase of Dr. Whewell, is "at once the Encyclopædia and the Novum Organum of the thirteenth century." The whole of the after works of Roger Bacon—and treatise after treatise has of late been disinterred from our libraries—are but developments in detail of the magnificent conception he had laid before Clement. Such a work was its own great reward. From the world around Roger Bacon could look for and found small recognition. No word of acknowledgement seems to have reached its author from the Pope. If we may credit a more recent

SEC. V
HENRY THE THIRD 1216
TO 1257 story, his writings only gained him a prison from his order. "Unheard, forgotten, buried," the old man died as he had lived, and it has been reserved for later ages to roll away the obscurity that had gathered round his memory, and to place first in the great roll of modern science the name of Roger Bacon.

Section V.—Henry the Third, 1216—1257

[Authorities.—The two great authorities for this period are the historiographers of St. Albans, Roger of Wendover, whose work ends in 1235, and his editor and continuator Matthew Paris. The first is full but inaccurate, and with strong royal and ecclesiastical sympathies : of the character of Matthew, I have spoken at the close of the present section. The Chronicles of Dunstable, Waverley, and Burton (published in Mr. Luard's "Annales Monastici") supply many details. The "Royal Letters," edited by Dr. Shirley, with an admirable preface, are, like the Patent and Close Rolls, of the highest value. For opposition to Rome, see "Grosseteste's Letters," edited by Mr. Luard.]

Hubert de Burgh

The death of the Earl Marshal in 1219 left the direction of affairs in the hands of a new legate, Pandulf, of Stephen Langton who had just returned forgiven from Rome, and of the Justiciar, Hubert de Burgh. It was an age of transition, and the temper of the Justiciar was eminently transitional. Bred in the school of Henry the Second, he had little sympathy with national freedom ; his conception of good government, like that of his master, lay in a wise personal administration, in the preservation of order and law. But he combined with this a thoroughly English desire for national independence, a hatred of foreigners, and a reluctance to waste English blood and treasure in Continental struggles. Able as he proved himself, his task was one of no common difficulty. He was hampered by the constant interference of Rome. A Papal legate resided at the English court, and claimed a share in the administration of the realm as the representative of its over-lord, and as guardian of the young sovereign. A foreign party, too, had still a footing in the kingdom, for William Marshal had been unable to rid himself of men like Peter des Roches or Faukes de Brauté, who had fought on the royal side in the struggle against Lewis. Hubert had to deal too with the anarchy which that struggle left behind it. From the time of the Conquest the centre of England had been covered with the domains of great nobles, whose longings were for feudal independence, and whose spirit of revolt had been held in check, partly by the stern rule of the Kings, and partly by their creation of a baronage sprung from the Court and settled for the most part in the North. The oppression of John united both the older and these newer houses in the struggle for the Charter.

SEC. V
 HENRY THE THIRD 1216
 TO 1257

CORONATION AND UNCTION OF A KING.

MS. Camb. Univ. Libr. Ec. iii. 59.

c. A.D. 1245.

But the character of each remained unchanged, and the close of the struggle saw the feudal party break out in their old lawlessness and defiance of the Crown. For a time the anarchy of Stephen's days seemed revived. But the Justiciar was resolute to crush it, and he was backed by the strenuous efforts of Stephen Langton. The Earl of Chester, the head of the feudal baronage, though he rose in armed rebellion, quailed before the march of Hubert and the

SEC. V
 HENRY THE THIRD 1216
 TO 1257
 1224

Primate's threats of excommunication. A more formidable foe remained in the Frenchman, Faukes de Breauté, the sheriff of six counties, with six royal castles in his hands, and allied both with the rebel barons and Llewelyn of Wales. His castle of Bedford was besieged for two months before its surrender, and the stern justice of Hubert hanged the twenty-four knights and their retainers who formed the garrison before its walls. The blow was effectual; the royal castles were surrendered by the barons, and the land was once more at peace. Freed from foreign soldiery, the country was freed also from the presence of the foreign legate. Langton wrested a promise from Rome that so long as he lived no future legate should be sent to England, and with Pandulf's resignation in 1221 the direct interference of the Papacy in the government of the realm came to an end. But even these services of the Primate were small compared with his services to English freedom. Throughout his life the Charter was the first object of his care. The omission of the articles which restricted the royal power over taxation in the Charter which was published at Henry's accession was doubtless due to the Archbishop's absence and disgrace at Rome. The suppression of disorder seems to have revived the older spirit of resistance among the royal ministers; when 1223 Langton demanded a fresh confirmation of the Charter in Parliament at London, William Brewer, one of the King's councillors, protested that it had been extorted by force, and was without legal validity. "If you loved the King, William," the Primate burst out in anger, "you would not throw a stumbling-block in the way of the peace of the realm." The King was cowed by the Archbishop's wrath, and at once promised observance of the Charter. Two years after, its solemn promulgation was demanded by the Archbishop and the barons as the price of a subsidy, and Henry's assent established the principle, so fruitful of constitutional results, that redress of wrongs precedes a grant to the Crown.

Hubert's Fall Langton's death 1228

The death of Stephen Langton in 1228 proved a heavy blow to English freedom. In 1227 Henry had declared himself of age; and though Hubert still remained Justiciar, every year saw him more powerless in his struggle with Rome and with the tendencies of the King. In the mediæval theory of the Papacy, the constitution of Christendom as a spiritual realm took the feudal form of the secular kingdoms within its pale, with the Pope for sovereign, bishops for his barons, the clergy for his under vassals. As the King demanded aids and subsidies in case of need from his liegemen, so it was believed might the head of the Church from the priest-

SEC. V
HENRY THE THIRD 1216
TO 1257

CONSECRATION OF A BISHOP.
Probably drawn by Matthew Paris.
MS. Cott. Nero D. i.

hood. At this moment the Papacy, exhausted by its long struggle with Frederick the Second, grew more and more extortionate in its demands. It regarded England as a vassal kingdom, and as bound to aid its overlord. The baronage, however, rejected the demand of aid from the laity, and the Pope fell back on the clergy. He demanded a tithe of all the moveables of the priesthood, and a threat of excommunication silenced their murmurs. Exaction followed exaction, the very rights of the lay patrons were set aside, and under the name of "reserves" presentations to English benefices were sold in the Papal market, while Italian clergy were quartered on the best livings of the Church. The general indignation found vent at last in a wide conspiracy; letters from "the

SEC. V
HENRY THE THIRD 1216
TO 1257

1229

1230 whole body of those who prefer to die rather than be ruined by the Romans" were scattered over the kingdom by armed men; tithes gathered for the Pope and foreign clergy were seized and given to the poor, the Papal commissioners beaten, and their bulls trodden under foot. The remonstrances of Rome only revealed the national character of the movement; but as inquiry proceeded the hand of the Justiciar himself was seen to have been at work. Sheriffs had stood idly by while the violence was done; royal letters had been shown by the rioters as approving their acts; and the Pope openly laid the charge of the outbreak on the secret connivance of Hubert de Burgh. The charge came at a time when Henry was in full collision with his minister, to whom he attributed the failure of his attempts to regain the foreign dominions of his house. An invitation from the barons of Normandy had been rejected through Hubert's remonstrances, and when a great armament gathered at Portsmouth for a campaign in Poitou, it was dispersed for want of transport and supplies. The young King drew his sword and rushed madly on the Justiciar, whom he charged with treason and corruption by the gold of France; but the quarrel was appeased, and the expedition deferred for the year. The failure of the campaign in the following year, when Henry took the field in Brittany and Poitou, was again laid at the door of Hubert, whose opposition was said to have prevented an engagement. The Papal accusation filled up the measure of Henry's wrath. Hubert was dragged from a chapel at Brentwood where he had taken refuge, and a smith was ordered to shackle him. "I will die any death," replied the smith, "before I put iron on the man who freed England from the stranger and saved Dover from France." On

HENRY III. SAILING TO BRITANNY, 1230.

Drawn by Matthew Paris.
MS. Roy. 14 C. vii.

Hubertus de burgo dis calciamus in eamisia solū añ altare de dyro nāi moztē ozando xps ta aduenit em̄ cures londhotes em̄

HUBERT DE BURGH IN SANCTUARY
 AT MERTON, 1232.
 Drawn by Matthew Paris.
 MS. Roy. 14 C. vii.

the remonstrances of the Bishop of London Hubert was replaced in sanctuary, but hunger compelled him to surrender; he was thrown a prisoner into the Tower, and though soon released he remained powerless in the realm. His fall left England without a check to the rule of Henry himself.

SEC. V
 HENRY THE THIRD 1216
 TO 1257

There was a certain refinement in Henry's temper which won him affection even in the worst days of his rule. The Abbey-church of Westminster, with which he replaced the ruder minster of the Confessor, remains a monument of his artistic taste. He was a patron and friend of artists and men of letters, and himself skilled in the "gay science" of the troubadour.

Henry III. and the Aliens

From the cruelty, the lust, the impiety of his father he was absolutely free. But of the political capacity which had been HENRY III. CARRYING THE HOLY BLOOD IN PROCESSION TO WESTMINSTER, A.D. 1247.

 Drawn by Matthew Paris.
 MS. C.C.C. Camb. xvi.

the characteristic of his house he had little or none. Profuse, changeable, impulsive alike in good and ill, unbridled in temper

SEC. V
HENRY THE THIRD 1216
TO 1257 and tongue, reckless in insult and wit, Henry's delight was in the display of an empty and prodigal magnificence, his one notion of government a dream of arbitrary power. But frivolous as the King's mood was, he clung with a weak man's obstinacy to a distinct line of policy. He cherished the hope of recovering his heritage across the sea. He believed in the absolute power of the Crown; and looked on the pledges of the Great Charter as promises which force had wrested from the King

Rex henricus Adienora.

MARRIAGE OF HENRY III.
Drawn by Matthew Paris.
MS. Roy. 14 C. vii.

1236 of Provence was followed by the arrival in England of the Queen's uncles. The "Savoy," as his house in the Strand was named, still recalls Peter of Savoy, who arrived five years later to take for a while the chief place at Henry's council-board; another brother, Boniface, was on Archbishop Edmund's death consecrated to the highest post in the realm save the Crown itself, the Archbishoprick of Canterbury. The young Primate, like his brother, brought with him foreign fashions strange enough to English folk. His armed retainers pillaged the markets. His own archiepiscopal and which force could wrest back again. The claim which the French kings were advancing to a divine and absolute power gave a sanction in Henry's mind to the claim of absolute authority which was still maintained by his favourite advisers in the royal council. The death of Langton, the fall of Hubert de Burgh, left him free to surround himself with dependent ministers, mere agents of the royal will. Hosts of hungry Poitevins and Bretons were at once summoned over to occupy the royal castles and fill the judicial and administrative posts about the Court. His marriage with Eleanor fist felled to the ground the prior of St. Bartholomew-by-Smithfield, who opposed his visitation. London was roused by the

SEC. V
HENRY THE THIRD 1216
TO 1257

A ROYAL MARRIAGE.
Probably drawn by Matthew Paris.
MS. Cott. Nero D. i.

outrage; on the King's refusal to do justice a noisy crowd of citizens surrounded the Primate's house at Lambeth with cries of EDMUND, SON OF HENRY III., IN HIS CRADLE, 1244.

Drawn by Matthew Paris.
MS. Roy. 14 C. vii.

vengeance, and the "handsome archbishop," as his followers styled him, was glad to escape over sea. This brood of Provençals was

SEC. V
HENRY THE THIRD 1216
TO 1257 followed in 1243 by the arrival of the Poitevin relatives of John's queen, Isabella of Angoulême. Aymer was made Bishop of Winchester ; William of Valence received the earldom of Pembroke. Even the King's jester was a Poitevin. Hundreds of their dependants followed these great lords to find a fortune in the English realm. The Poitevin lords brought in their train a bevy of ladies in search of husbands, and three English earls who were in royal wardship were wedded by the King to foreigners. The whole machinery of administration passed into the hands of men

KING AND COURT.
Probably drawn by Matthew Paris.
MS. Cott. Nero D. i.

ignorant and contemptuous of the principles of English government or English law. Their rule was a mere anarchy ; the very retainers of the royal household turned robbers, and pillaged foreign merchants in the precincts of the Court ; corruption invaded the judicature ; Henry de Bath, a justiciar, was proved to have openly taken bribes and to have adjudged to himself disputed estates.

The Barons
and the Church

That misgovernment of this kind should have gone on unchecked, in defiance of the provisions of the Charter, was owing to the disunion and sluggishness of the English baronage. On the first arrival of the foreigners, Richard, the Earl Marshal, a son of the great Regent, stood forth as their leader to demand the expulsion of the strangers from the royal Council, and though deserted by the bulk of the nobles, he defeated the foreign forces sent against him, and forced the King to treat for peace. But at this moment the Earl was drawn by an intrigue of Peter des Roches to Ireland; he fell in a petty skirmish, and the barons were left without a head. Edmund Rich, whom we have seen as an Oxford teacher and who had risen to the Archbishoprick of Canterbury, forced the King to dismiss Peter from court; but there was no real change of system, and the remonstrances of the

SEC. V
HENRY THE THIRD 1216
TO 1257 1234

CONSECRATION OF ARCHBISHOP EDMUND.

Drawn by Matthew Paris.

MS. Roy. 14 C. vii.

Archbishop and of Robert Grosseteste, Bishop of Lincoln, remained fruitless. In the long interval of misrule which followed, the financial straits of the King forced him to heap exaction on exaction. The Forest Laws were used as a means of extortion, sees and abbeys were kept vacant, loans were wrested from lords and prelates, the Court itself lived at free quarters wherever it moved. Supplies of this kind however were utterly insufficient to defray the cost of the King's prodigality. A sixth of the royal revenue was wasted in pensions to foreign favourites. The debts of the Crown mounted to four times its annual income. Henry was forced to appeal to the Great Council of the realm, and aid was granted on condition that the King confirmed the Charter. The Charter was confirmed and steadily disregarded; and the 1237

SEC. V
 HENRY THE THIRD 1216
 TO 1257 1242 resentment of the barons expressed itself in a determined protest and a refusal of further subsidies. In spite of their refusal however Henry gathered money enough for a costly expedition for the recovery of Poitou. The attempt ended in failure and shame. At Taillebourg the forces under Henry fled in disgraceful rout before the French as far as Saintes, and only the sudden illness of Lewis the Ninth and a disease which scattered his army saved Bordeaux from the conquerors. The treasury was drained, and Henry was driven to make a fresh appeal to the baronage. The growing resolution of the nobles to enforce good government was seen in their demand that the confirmation of the Charter was HENRY III. SAILING HOME FROM GASCONY, 1243.

Drawn by Matthew Paris.

MS. Roy. 14 C. vii.

to be followed by the election of Justiciar, Chancellor, and Treasurer in the Great Council, and that a perpetual Council was to attend the King and devise further reforms. The plan broke against Henry's resistance and a Papal prohibition. The scourge of Papal taxation fell heavily on the clergy. After vain appeals to Rome and to the King, Archbishop Edmund retired to an exile of despair at Pontigny, and tax-gatherer after tax-gatherer with powers of excommunication, suspension from orders, and presentation to benefices, descended on the unhappy priesthood. The wholesale pillage kindled a wide spirit of resistance. Oxford gave the signal by hunting a Papal legate out of the city, amid cries of "usurer" and "simoniac" from the mob of students. Fulk Fitz-

O fidei a secula Lactentis ubi non profusa di uiter crebra iudicia repant inf neque uer' ex te fili' mihi allidret neuis se pueri di genit' imparer,

FRS MATTHIAS PARISINSE

MATTHEW PARIS AT THE FEET OF THE VIRGIN AND CHILD

From his own drawing, MS. Roy. 14 C. VII.

Warene in the name of the barons bade a Papal collector begone out of England. "If you tarry three days longer," he added, "you and your company shall be cut to pieces." For a time Henry himself was swept away by the tide of national indignation. Letters from the King, the nobles and the prelates protested against the Papal exactions, and orders were given that no money should be exported from the realm. But the threat of interdict

SEC. V
HENRY THE THIRD 1216
TO 1257
1246

LEGATINE COUNCIL IN LONDON, A.D. 1237.
Drawn by Matthew Paris.
MS. Roy. 14 C. vii.

soon drove Henry back on a policy of spoliation, in which he went hand in hand with Rome.

The story of this period of misrule has been preserved for us by an annalist whose pages glow with the new outburst of patriotic feeling which this common oppression of the people and the clergy had produced. Matthew Paris is the greatest, as he is in reality the last, of our monastic historians. The school of S. Albans survived indeed till a far later time, but the writers dwindled into mere annalists whose view is bounded by the abbey precincts, and whose work is as colourless as it is jejune. In Matthew the breadth and precision of the narrative, the copiousness of his information on topics whether national or European, the general fairness and

Matthew Paris
1200-1259

SEC. V
HENRY THE THIRD 1216
TO 1257 justice of his comments, are only surpassed by the patriotic fire and enthusiasm of the whole. He had succeeded Roger of Wendover as chronicler at S. Alban's; and the Greater Chronicle with an abridgement of it which has long passed under the name of Matthew of Westminster, a "History of the English," and the "Lives of the Earlier Abbots," were only a few among the voluminous works which attest his prodigious industry. He was an artist as well as an historian, and many of the manuscripts which are preserved are illustrated by his own hand. A large circle of correspondents—bishops like Grosseteste, ministers like Hubert de Burgh, officials like Alexander de Swerford—furnished him with minute accounts of political and ecclesiastical proceedings. Pilgrims from the East and Papal agents brought news of foreign events to his scriptorium at S. Alban's. He had access to and quotes largely from state documents, charters, and exchequer rolls. The frequency of the royal visits to the abbey brought him a store of political intelligence, and Henry himself contributed to the great chronicle which has preserved with so terrible a faithfulness the memory of his weakness and misgovernment. On one solemn feast-day the King recognized Matthew, and bidding him sit on the middle step between the floor and the throne, begged him to write the story of the day's proceedings. While on a visit to S. Alban's he invited him to his table and chamber, and enumerated by name two hundred and fifty of the English baronies for his information. But all this royal patronage has left little mark on his work. "The case," as he says, "of historical writers is hard, for if they tell the truth they provoke men, and if they write what is false they offend God." With all the fulness of the school of court historians, such as Benedict or Hoveden, Matthew Paris combines an independence and patriotism which is strange to their pages. He denounces with the same unsparing energy the oppression of the Papacy and the King. His point of view is neither that of a courtier nor of a churchman, but of an Englishman, and the new national tone of his chronicle is but an echo of the national sentiment which at last bound nobles and yeomen and churchmen together into a people resolute to wrest freedom from the Crown.

Section VI.—The Friars

[Authorities.—Eccleston's Tract on their arrival in England and Adam Marsh's Letters, with Mr. Brewer's admirable Preface, in the "Monumenta Franciscana" of the Rolls series. Grosseteste's Letters in the same series, edited by Mr. Luard. For a general account of the whole movement, see Milman's "Latin Christianity," vol. iv. caps. 9 and 10.]

From the tedious record of misgovernment and political weakness which stretches over the forty years we have passed through, we turn with relief to the story of the Friars.

England
and the Church

Never, as we have seen, had the priesthood wielded such boundless power over Christendom as in the days of Innocent the Third and his immediate successors. But its religious hold

THE PAPAL COURT.
MS. Camb. Univ. Libr. Ec. iii. 59.
 c. A.D. 1245.

on the people was loosening day by day. The old reverence for the Papacy was fading away before the universal resentment at its political ambition, its lavish use of interdict and excommunication for purely secular ends, its degradation of the most sacred sentences into means of financial extortion. In Italy

SEC. VI
 THE FRIARS

the struggle that was opening between Rome and Frederick the Second disclosed a spirit of scepticism which among the Epicurean poets of Florence denied the immortality of the soul, and attacked the very foundations of the faith itself. In Southern Gaul, Languedoc and Provence had embraced the heresy of the Albigenses, and thrown off all allegiance to the Papacy. Even in England, though there were no signs as yet of religious revolt, and though the political action of Rome had been in the main on the side of freedom, there was a spirit of resistance

KING AND ARCHITECT.

BUILDERS AT WORK.

FOUNDATION OF A MINSTER.
 Probably drawn by Matthew Paris.
MS. Cott. Nero D. i.

to its interference with national concerns which broke out in the struggle against John. "The Pope has no part in secular matters," had been the reply of London to the interdict of Innocent. And within the English Church itself there was much to call for reform. Its attitude in the strife for the Charter as well as the after work of the Primate had made it more popular than ever; but its spiritual energy was less than its political. The disuse of preaching, the decline of the monastic orders into rich landowners, the non-residence and ignorance of the parish priests, robbed the clergy of spiritual influence. The abuses of INVESTITURE OF ABBOT.

OFFERING UP FOUNDATION CHARTER.

TRANSLATION OF RELICS.

FOUNDATION OF A MINSTER.
 Probably drawn by Matthew Paris.
MS. Cott. Nero D. i.

SEC. VI
 THE FRIARS

the time foiled even the energy of such men as Bishop Grosseteste of Lincoln. His constitutions forbid the clergy to haunt taverns, to gamble, to share in drinking bouts, to mix in the riot and debauchery of the life of the baronage. But such prohibitions only witness to the prevalence of the evils they denounce. Bishops and deans were withdrawn from their ecclesiastical duties to act as ministers, judges or ambassadors. Benefices were heaped in hundreds at a time on royal favourites like John Mansel. Abbeys absorbed the tithes of parishes, and then served them by half-starved vicars, while exemptions purchased from Rome shielded the scandalous lives of canons and monks from all episcopal discipline. And behind all this was a group of secular statesmen and scholars, waging indeed no open warfare with the Church, but noting with bitter sarcasm its abuses and its faults.

The Friars

To bring the world back again within the pale of the Church was the aim of two religious orders which sprang suddenly to life at the opening of the thirteenth century. The zeal of the Spaniard Dominic was roused at the sight of the lordly prelates who sought by fire and sword to win the Albigensian heretics to the faith. "Zeal," he cried, "must be met by zeal, lowliness by lowliness, false sanctity by real sanctity, preaching lies by preaching truth." His fiery ardour and rigid orthodoxy were seconded by the mystical piety, the imaginative enthusiasm of Francis of Assisi. The life of Francis falls like a stream of tender light across the darkness of the time. In the frescoes of Giotto or the verse of Dante we see him take Poverty for his bride. He strips himself of all, he flings his very clothes at his father's feet, that he may be one with Nature and God. His passionate verse claims the Moon for his sister and the Sun for his brother, he calls on his brother the Wind, and his sister the Water. His last faint cry was a "Welcome, Sister Death!" Strangely as the two men differed from each other, their aim was the same—to convert the heathen, to extirpate heresy, to reconcile knowledge with orthodoxy, to carry the Gospel to the poor. The work was to be done by the entire reversal of the older monasticism, by seeking personal salvation in effort for the salvation of their fellow-men, by exchanging the solitary of the cloister for the preacher, the monk for the friar. To force the new "brethren" into entire FRATER Johs de S: alingelod. q̄nq: Imfirmariul.

JOHN OF WALLINGFORD, MONK OF S. ALBANS, 1231—1258.

Drawing attributed to Matthew Paris.

MS. Cott. Jul. D. vii.

SEC. VI
THE FRIARS

dependence on those among whom they laboured their vow of Poverty was turned into a stern reality; the "Begging Friars" were to subsist on the alms of the poor, they might possess neither money nor lands, the very houses in which they lived were to be held in trust for them by others. The tide of popular enthusiasm which welcomed their appearance swept before it the reluctance of Rome, the jealousy of the older orders, the opposition of the parochial priesthood. Thousands of brethren gathered in a few years round Francis and Dominic; and the begging preachers, clad in their coarse frock of serge with a girdle of rope round their waist, wandered barefooted as missionaries over Asia, battled with heresy in Italy and Gaul, lectured in the Universities, and preached and toiled among the poor.

The Friars
and the Towns

To the towns especially the coming of the Friars was a religious revolution. They had been left for the most part to the worst and most ignorant of the clergy, the mass-priest, whose sole subsistence lay in his fees. Burgher and artisan were left to spell out what religious instruction they might from the gorgeous ceremonies of the Church's ritual, or the scriptural pictures and sculptures which were graven on the walls of its minsters. We can hardly wonder at the burst of enthusiasm which welcomed the itinerant preacher, whose fervid appeal, coarse wit, and familiar story brought religion into the fair and the market-place. The Black Friars of Dominic, the Grey Friars of Francis, were received with the same delight. As the 1221-1224

A FRANCISCAN.
Drawn by Matthew Paris.
MS. C.C.C. Camb. xvi.

older orders had chosen the country, the Friars chose the town. They had hardly landed at Dover before they made straight for London and Oxford. In their ignorance of the road the two first Grey Brothers lost their way in the woods between Oxford and Baldon, and fearful of night and of the floods, turned aside to a grange of the monks of Abingdon. Their ragged clothes and foreign gestures, as they prayed for hospitality, led the porter to take them for jongleurs, the jesters and jugglers of the day, and the news of this break in the monotony of their lives brought prior, sacrist, and cellarer to the door to welcome them and witness their tricks. The disappointment was too much for the temper of the monks, and the brothers were kicked roughly from the gate to find their night's lodging under a tree. But the welcome of the townsmen made up everywhere for the ill-will and opposition of both clergy and monks. The work of the Friars was physical as well as moral. The rapid progress of population within the boroughs had outstripped the sanitary regulations of the Middle Ages, and fever or plague or the more terrible scourge of leprosy festered in the wretched hovels of the suburbs. It was to haunts such as these that Francis had pointed his disciples, and the Grey Brethren at once fixed themselves in the meanest and poorest quarters of each town. Their first work lay in the noisome lazarehouses; it was amongst the lepers that they commonly chose the site of their homes. At London they settled in the shambles of Newgate; at Oxford they made their way to the swampy ground between its walls and the streams of Thames. Huts of mud and timber, as mean as the huts around them, rose within the rough fence and ditch that bounded the Friary. The order of Francis made a hard fight against the taste for sumptuous buildings and for greater personal comfort which characterized the time. "I did not enter into religion to build walls," protested an English provincial when the brethren pressed for a larger house; and Albert of Pisa ordered a stone cloister, which the burgesses of Southampton had built for them, to be razed to the ground. "You need no little mountains to lift your heads to heaven," was his scornful reply to a claim for pillows. None but the sick went shod. An Oxford Friar found a pair of shoes one morning, and wore them at matins. At night he dreamt that robbers leapt on him in a dangerous pass between Gloucester and Oxford with shouts of "Kill, kill!" "I am a friar," shrieked the terror-stricken brother. "You lie," was the instant answer, "for you go shod." The Friar lifted up his foot in disproof, but the shoe was there. In an agony of repentance he woke and flung the pair out of window.

SEC. VI
THE FRIARS

The Friars
and the Univers-
sities

It was with less success that the order struggled against the passion for knowledge. Their vow of poverty, rigidly interpreted as it was by their founders, would have denied them the possession of books or materials for study. "I am your breviary, I am your breviary," Francis cried passionately to a novice who asked for a psalter. When the news of a great doctor's reception was brought to him at Paris, his countenance fell. "I am afraid, my son," he replied, "that such doctors will be the destruction of my vineyard. They are the true doctors who with the meekness of wisdom show forth good works for the edification of their neighbours." At a later time Roger Bacon, as we have seen, was suffered to possess neither ink, parchment, nor books; and only the Pope's injunctions could dispense with the stringent observance of the rule. But one kind of knowledge indeed their work almost forced on them. The popularity of their preaching soon led them to the deeper study of theology. Within a short time after their establishment in England we find as many as thirty readers or lecturers appointed at Hereford, Leicester, Bristol, and other places, and a regular succession of teachers provided at each University. The Oxford Dominicans lectured on theology in the nave of their new church, while philosophy was taught in the cloister. The first provincial of the Grey Friars built a school in their Oxford house, and persuaded Grosseteste to lecture there. His influence after his promotion to the see of Lincoln was steadily exerted to secure study among the Friars, and their establishment in the University. He was ably seconded by his scholar, Adam Marsh, or de Marisco, under whom the Franciscan school at Oxford attained a reputation throughout Christendom. Lyons, Paris, and Köln borrowed from it their professors: it was owing, indeed, to its influence that Oxford now rose to a position hardly inferior to that of Paris itself as a centre of scholasticism. The three most profound and original of the school-men—Roger Bacon, Duns Scotus, and Ockham—were among its scholars ; and they were followed by a crowd of teachers hardly less illustrious in their day.

SEC. VI
—
THE FRIARS
—

But the result of this powerful impulse was soon seen to be fatal to the wider intellectual activity which had till now characterized

Scholasticism

ALEXANDER HALES, FRANCISCAN, A.D. 1228—1250.
MS. Camb. Univ. Libr. Mm. v. 31.

the Universities. Theology in its scholastic form, which now found its only efficient rivals in practical studies such as medicine and law, resumed its supremacy in the schools ; while Aristotle, who had been so long held at bay as the most dangerous foe of mediæval faith, was now turned by the adoption of his logical method in the discussion and definition of theological dogma into its unexpected ally. It was this very method that led to "that unprofitable subtlety and curiosity" which Lord Bacon notes as the vice of the scholastic philosophy. But "certain it is"—to continue the same great thinker's comment on the Friars—"that if these schoolmen to their great thirst of truth and unwearied travel of wit had joined variety of reading and contemplation, they had proved excellent lights to the great advancement of all learning and knowledge." What, amidst all their errors, they undoubtedly did was to insist on the necessity of rigid demonstration and a more exact use of words, to introduce a clear and methodical treatment of all subjects into discussion, and above all to substitute an appeal to reason for unquestioning obedience to authority. It was by this critical tendency, by the new clearness and precision which scholasticism gave to enquiry, that in spite of the trivial questions with which it often concerned itself, it trained the human mind through the next two centuries to a temper which fitted it to profit by the great disclosure of knowledge that brought about the Renaissance. And it is to the same spirit of fearless enquiry as well as to the strong popular sympathies which their very constitution necessitated that we must attribute the influence which the Friars undoubtedly exerted in the coming struggle between the people and the Crown. Their position is clearly and strongly marked throughout the whole contest. The University of Oxford, which had now fallen under the direction of their teaching, stood first in its resistance to Papal exactions and its claim of English liberty. The classes in the towns on whom the influence of the Friars told most directly were the steady supporters of freedom throughout the Barons' war. Adam Marsh was the closest friend and confidant both of Grosseteste and Earl Simon of Montfort.

SEC. VI
THE FRIARS

Section VII.—The Barons' War, 1258—1265

SEC. VII
—
THE BARONS'
WAR 1258
TO 1265
—

[Authorities.—At the very outset of this important period we lose the priceless aid of Matthew Paris. He is the last of the great chroniclers; the Chronicles of his successor at S. Alban's, Rishanger (published by the Master of the Rolls), are scant and lifeless jottings, somewhat enlarged for this period by his fragment on the Barons' War (published by Camden Society). Something may be gleaned from the annals of Burton, Melrose, Dunstable, Waverley, Osney, and Lanercost, the Royal Letters, the (royalist) Chronicle of Wykes, and (for London) the "Liber de Antiquis Legibus." Mr. Blaauw has given a useful summary of the period in his "Barons' War."]

SIMON DE MONTFORT.
Window in Chartres Cathedral, c. 1231.

When a thunderstorm once forced the King, as he was rowing on the Thames, to take refuge at the palace of the Bishop of Durham, Earl Simon of Montfort, who was a guest of the prelate, met the royal barge with assurances that the storm was drifting away, and that there was nothing to fear. Henry's petulant wit broke out in his reply. "If I fear the thunder," said the King, "I fear you, Sir Earl, more than all the thunder in the world."

The man whom Simon of Montfort Henry dreaded as the champion of English freedom was himself a foreigner, the son of a Simon de Montfort whose name has become memorable for his ruthless crusade

SEC. VII

THE BARONS'
WAR 1258
TO 1265

1239-1241

1248 against the Albigensian heretics in Southern Gaul. Though fourth son of this crusader, Simon became possessor of the English earldom of Leicester, which he inherited through his mother, and a secret match with Eleanor, the King's sister and widow of the second William Marshal, linked him to the royal house. The baronage, indignant at this sudden alliance with a stranger, rose in a revolt which failed only through the desertion of their head, Earl Richard of Cornwall; while the censures of the Church on Eleanor's breach of a vow of chastity, which she had made at her first husband's death, were hardly averted by a journey to Rome. Simon returned to find the changeable King quickly alienated from him and to be driven by a burst of royal passion from the realm. He was, however, soon restored to favour, and before long took his stand in the front rank of the patriot leaders. In 1248 he was appointed Governor of Gascony, where the stern justice of his rule, and the heavy taxation which his enforcement of order made necessary, earned the hatred of the disorderly nobles. The complaints of the Gascons brought about an open breach with the King. To Earl Simon's offer of the surrender of his post if the money he had spent in the royal service were, as Henry had promised, repaid him, the King hotly retorted that he was bound by no promise to a false traitor. Simon at once gave Henry the lie; "and but that thou bearest the name of King it had been a bad hour for thee when thou utterdest such a word!" A formal reconciliation was brought about, and the Earl once more returned to Gascony, but before winter had come he was forced to withdraw to France. The greatness of his reputation was shown in an offer which its nobles made him of the regency of their realm during the absence of King Lewis on the crusade. But the offer was refused; and Henry, who had himself undertaken the pacification of Gascony, was glad before the close of 1253 to recall its old ruler to do the work he had failed to do. Simon's character had now thoroughly developed. He had inherited the strict and severe piety of his father; he was assiduous in his attendance on religious services whether by night or day; he was the friend of Grosseteste and the patron of the Friars. In his correspondence with Adam Marsh we see him finding patience under his Gascon troubles in the perusal of the Book of

SEC. VII
 THE BARONS'
 WAR 1258
 TO 1265

Job. His life was pure and singularly temperate ; he was noted for his scant indulgence in meat, drink, or sleep. Socially he was cheerful and pleasant in talk ; but his natural temper was quick and ardent, his sense of honour keen, his speech rapid and trenchant. His impatience of contradiction, his fiery temper, were in fact the great stumbling-blocks in his after career. But the one characteristic which overmastered all was what men at that time called his "constancy," the firm immoveable resolve which trampled even death under foot in its loyalty to the right. The motto which Edward the First chose as his device, "Keep troth," was far truer as the device of Earl Simon. We see in his correspondence with what a clear discernment of its difficulties both at home and abroad he "thought it unbecoming to decline the danger of so great an exploit" as the reduction of Gascony to peace and order ; but once undertaken, he persevered in spite of the opposition he met with, the failure of all support or funds from England, and the King's desertion of his cause, till the work was done. There is the same steadiness of will and purpose in his patriotism. The letters of Grosseteste show how early he had learned to sympathize with the bishop in his resistance to Rome, and at the crisis of the contest he offers him his own support and that of his associates. He sends to Adam Marsh a tract of Grosseteste's on "the rule of a kingdom and of a tyranny," sealed with his own seal. He listens patiently to the advice of his friends on the subject of his household or his temper. "Better is

SEAL OF SIMON DE MONTFORT.
British Museum.

SEC. VII
 THE BARONS'
 WAR 1258
 TO 1265

a patient man," writes honest Friar Adam, "than a strong man, and he who can rule his own temper than he who storms a city." "What use is it to provide for the peace of your fellow-citizens and not guard the peace of your own household?" It was to secure "the peace of his fellow-citizens" that the Earl silently trained himself as the tide of misgovernment mounted higher and higher, and the fruit of his discipline was seen when the crisis came. While other men wavered and faltered and fell away, the enthusiastic love of the people gathered itself round the stern, grave soldier who "stood like a pillar," unshaken by promise or threat or fear of death, by the oath he had sworn.

The Provisions of Oxford

In England affairs were going from bad to worse. The Pope still weighed heavily on the Church. Two solemn confirmations of the Charter failed to bring about any compliance with its provisions. In 1248, in 1249, and again in 1255, the Great Council fruitlessly renewed its demand for a regular ministry, and the growing resolve of the nobles to enforce good government was seen in their offer of a grant on condition that the chief officers of the Crown were appointed by the Council. Henry indignantly refused the offer, and sold his plate to the citizens of London to find payment for his household. The barons were mutinous and defiant. "I will send reapers and reap your fields for you," Henry had threatened Earl Bigod of Norfolk when he refused him aid. "And I will send you back the heads of your reapers," retorted the Earl. Hampered by the profusion of the court and by the refusal of supplies, the Crown was penniless, yet new expenses were incurred by Henry's acceptance of a Papal offer of the kingdom of Sicily in favour of his second son Edmund. Shame had fallen on the English arms, and the King's eldest son, Edward, had been disastrously defeated on the Marches by Llewelyn of Wales. The tide of discontent, which was heightened by a grievous famine, burst its bounds in the irritation excited by the new demands from both Henry and Rome with which the year 1258 opened, and the barons repaired in arms to a Great Council summoned at London. The past half-century had shown both the strength and weakness of the Charter: its strength as a rallying-point for the baronage, and a definite assertion of rights which the King could be made to acknowledge; its weakness in providing no means for the enforcement of its own stipulations. Henry had sworn again and again to observe the Charter, and his oath was no sooner taken than it was unscrupulously broken. The barons had secured the freedom of the realm; the secret of their long patience during the reign of Henry lay in the difficulty of securing its right administration. It was this difficulty which Earl Simon was prepared to solve. With the Earl of Gloucester he now appeared at the head of

1254

SEC. VII
 THE BARONS'
 WAR 1258
 TO 1265

KINGS IN ARMOUR.

MS. Camb. Univ. Libr. Ee. iii. 59.

C. A. D. 1245.

the baronage in arms, and demanded the appointment of a committee of twenty-four to draw up terms for the reform of the state. Although half the committee consisted of royal ministers and favourites, it was impossible to resist the tide of popular feeling. By the "Provisions of Oxford" it was agreed that the Great Council should assemble thrice in the year, whether summoned by the King or no; and on each occasion "the Commonalty shall elect twelve honest men who shall come to the Parliaments, and at other times when occasion shall be when the King and his Council

*Provisions of Oxford
 July 1258*

SEC. VII
 THE BARONS'
 WAR 1258
 TO 1265

shall send for them, to treat of the wants of the King and of his kingdom. And the Commonalty shall hold as established: that which these Twelve shall do." Three permanent committees were named—one to reform the Church, one to negotiate financial aids, and a Permanent Council of Fifteen to advise the King in the ordinary work of government. The Justiciar, Chancellor, and the guardians of the King's castles swore to act only with the advice and assent of the Permanent Council, and the first two great officers, with the Treasurer, were to give account of their proceedings to it at the end of the year. Annual sheriffs were to be appointed from among the chief tenants of the county, and no undue fees were to be exacted for the administration of justice in their court.

A royal proclamation in the English tongue, the first in that tongue since the Conquest which has reached us, ordered the observance of these Provisions. Resistance came only from the foreign favourites, and an armed demonstration drove them in flight over sea. The whole royal power was now in fact in the hands of the committees appointed by the Great Council; and the policy of the administration was seen in the prohibitions against any further payments, secular or ecclesiastical, to Rome, in the formal withdrawal from the Sicilian enterprise, in the negotiations conducted by Earl Simon with France, which finally ended in the absolute renunciation of Henry's title to his lost provinces, and in the peace which put an end to the incursions of the Welsh. Within, however, the measures of the barons were feeble and selfish. The Provisions of Westminster, published by them under popular pressure in the following year, for the protection of tenants and furtherance of justice, brought little fruit; and a tendency to mere feudal privilege showed itself in an exemption of all nobles and prelates from attendance at the sheriffs' courts. It was in vain that Earl Simon returned from his negotiations in France to press for more earnest measures of reform, or that the King's son Edward remained faithful to his oath to observe the Provisions, and openly supported him. Gloucester and Hugh Bigod, faithless to the cause of reform, drew with the feudal party to the side of the King; and Henry, procuring from the Pope a bull which annulled the Provisions and freed him from his oath to observe them,

THE TOWER OF LONDON.
"Vetusta Monumenta," from a plan made in 1597.

SEC. VII

THE BARONS'
WAR 1258
TO 1265

The Struggle with the Crown

1263

regained possession of the Tower and the other castles, appointed a new Justiciar, and restored the old authority of the Crown.

Deserted as he was, the Earl of Leicester was forced to withdraw for eighteen months to France, while Henry ruled in open defiance of the Provisions. The confusion of the realm renewed the disgust at his government; and the death of Gloucester removed the one barrier to action. In 1263 Simon landed again as the unquestioned head of the baronial party. The march of Edward with a royal army against Llewelyn of Wales was viewed by the barons as a prelude to hostilities against themselves; and Earl Simon at once swept the Welsh border, marched on Dover, and finally appeared before London. His power was strengthened by the attitude of the towns. The new democratic spirit which we have witnessed in the Friars was now stirring the purely industrial classes to assert a share in the municipal administration, which had hitherto been confined to the wealthier members of the merchant guilds, and at London and elsewhere a revolution, which will be described at greater length hereafter, had thrown the government of the city into the hands of the lower citizens. The "Communes," as the new city-governments were called, showed an enthusiastic devotion to Earl Simon and his cause. The Queen was stopped in her attempt to escape from the Tower by an angry mob, who drove her back with stones and foul words. When Henry attempted to surprise Leicester in his quarters in Southwark, the Londoners burst the gates which had been locked by the richer burghers against him, and rescued him by a welcome into the city. The clergy and Universities went in sympathy with the towns, and in spite of the taunts of the royalists, who accused him of seeking allies against the nobility in the common people, the popular enthusiasm gave a strength to Earl Simon which enabled him to withstand the severest blow which had yet been dealt to his cause. The nobles drew to the King. The dread of civil war gave strength to the cry for compromise, and it was agreed that the strife should be left to the arbitration of Lewis the Ninth of France. In the Mise of Amiens Lewis gave his verdict wholly in favour of the King. The Provisions of Oxford were annulled. Only the charters granted before the Provisions were to be observed. The appointment and

*Mise of Amiens
Jan. 1264*

SEC. VII

THE BARONS'
WAR 1258
TO 1265 removal of all officers of state was to be wholly with the King, and he was suffered to call aliens to his councils. The blow was a hard one, and the decision of Lewis was at once confirmed by the Pope. The barons felt themselves bound by the award; only the exclusion of aliens—a point which they had not purposed to submit to arbitration—they refused to concede. Simon at once resolved on resistance. Luckily, the French award had reserved the rights of Englishmen to the liberties they had enjoyed before the Provisions of Oxford, and it was easy for Simon to prove that the arbitrary power it gave to the Crown was as contrary to the Charter as to the Provisions themselves. London was the first to reject the decision; its citizens mustered at the call of the town-bell at Saint Paul's, seized the royal officials, and plundered the royal parks. But an army had already mustered in great force at the King's summons, and Leicester found himself deserted by baron after baron. Every day brought news of ill. A detachment from Scotland joined Henry's forces. The younger De Montfort was taken prisoner. Northampton was captured, the King raised the siege of Rochester, and a rapid march of Earl Simon's only saved London itself from a surprise by Edward. Betrayed as he was, the Earl remained firm to the cause. He would fight to the

KING OF FRANCE.
MS. Roy. 2 A. xxii.
Late Thirteenth Century.

joined Henry's forces. The younger De Montfort was taken prisoner. Northampton was captured, the King raised the siege of Rochester, and a rapid march of Earl Simon's only saved London itself from a surprise by Edward. Betrayed as he was, the Earl remained firm to the cause. He would fight to the

SEC. VII

THE BARONS'
WAR 1258
TO 1265

*Battle of Lewes
May 14, 1264*

Simon's Rule

end, he said, even were he and his sons left to fight alone. With an army reinforced by 15,000 Londoners, he marched to the relief of the Cinque Ports, which were now threatened by the King. Even on the march he was forsaken by many of the nobles who followed him. Halting at Fletching in Sussex, a few miles from Lewes, where the royal army was encamped, Earl Simon with the young Earl of Gloucester offered the King compensation for all damage if he would observe the Provisions. Henry's answer was one of defiance, and though numbers were against him the Earl resolved on battle. His skill as a soldier reversed the advantages of the ground; marching at dawn he seized the heights eastward of the town, and moved down these slopes to an attack. His men, with white crosses on back and breast, knelt in prayer before the battle opened. Edward was the first to open the fight; his furious charge broke the Londoners on Leicester's left, and in the bitterness of his hatred he pursued them for four miles, slaughtering three thousand men. He returned to find the battle lost. Crowded in the narrow space with the river in their rear, the royalist centre and left were crushed by Earl Simon; the Earl of Cornwall, now King of the Romans, who, as the mocking song of the victors ran, "makede him a castel of a mulne post" ("he weened that the mill-sails were mangonels" goes on the sarcastic verse), was made prisoner, and Henry himself captured. Edward cut his way into the Priory only to join in his father's surrender.

The victory of Lewes placed Earl Simon at the head of the state. "Now England breathes in the hope of liberty," sang a poet of the time; "the English were despised like dogs, but now they have lifted up their head and their foes are vanquished." The song announces with almost legal precision the theory of the patriots. "He who would be in truth a king, he is a 'free king' indeed if he rightly rule himself and his realm. All things are lawful to him for the government of his kingdom, but nothing for its destruction. It is one thing to rule according to a king's duty, another to destroy a kingdom by resisting the law." "Let the community of the realm advise, and let it be known what the generality, to whom their own laws are best known, think on the matter. They who are ruled by the laws know those laws best,

LEVES, FROM THE DOWNS NEAR MOUNT HARRY.

SEC. VII

THE BARONS'
WAR 1258
TO 1265

they who make daily trial of them are best acquainted with them ; and since it is their own affairs which are at stake, they will take more care, and will act with an eye to their own peace." " It concerns the community to see what sort of men ought justly to be chosen for the weal of the realm." The constitutional restrictions on the royal authority, the right of the whole nation to deliberate and decide on its own affairs, and to have a voice in the selection of the administrators of government, had never been so clearly stated before. But the moderation of the terms agreed upon in the Mise of Lewes, a convention between the King and his captors, shows Simon's sense of the difficulties of his position. The question of the Provisions was again to be submitted to arbitration ; and a parliament in June, to which four knights were summoned from every county, placed the administration till this arbitration was complete in the hands of a new council of nine, to be nominated by the Earls of Leicester and Gloucester and the patriotic Bishop of Chichester. Responsibility to the community was provided for by the declaration of a right in the body of barons and prelates to remove either of the Three Electors, who in turn could displace or appoint the members of the Council. Such a constitution was of a different order from the cumbrous and oligarchical Committees of 1258. But the plans for arbitration broke down, Lewis refused to review his decision, and the Pope formally condemned the barons' cause. The Earl's difficulties thickened every day. The Queen gathered an army in France for an invasion, and the barons on the Welsh border were still in arms. It was impossible to make binding terms with an imprisoned King, yet to release Henry without terms was to renew the war. A new parliament was summoned in January, 1265, to Westminster, but the weakness of the patriotic party among the baronage was shown in the fact that only twenty-three earls and barons could be found to sit beside the hundred and twenty ecclesiastics. But it was just this sense of his weakness that drove Earl Simon to a constitutional change of mighty issue in our history. As before, he summoned two knights from every county. But he created a new force in English politics when he summoned to sit beside them two citizens from every borough. The attendance of delegates from the towns had long been usual

*Summons
of the Commons to Parliament*

in the county courts when any matter respecting their interests was in question ; but it was the writ issued by Earl Simon that first summoned the merchant and the trader to sit beside the knight of the shire, the baron, and the bishop in the parliament of the realm.

SEC. VII

THE BARONS'
WAR 1258
TO 1265

It is only this great event however which enables us to understand the large and prescient nature of Earl Simon's designs. Hardly a few months had passed since the victory of Lewes, and already, when the burghers took their seats at Westminster, his government was tottering to its fall. Dangers from without the Earl had met with complete success ; a general muster of the national forces on Barham Down put an end to the projects of invasion entertained by the mercenaries whom the Queen had collected in Flanders ; the threats of France died away into negotiations ; the Papal Legate was forbidden to cross the Channel, and his bulls of excommunication were flung into the sea. But the difficulties at home grew more formidable every day. The restraint upon Henry and Edward jarred against the national feeling of loyalty, and estranged the mass of Englishmen who always side with the weak. Small as the patriotic party among the barons had always been, it grew smaller as dissensions broke out over the spoils of victory. The Earl's justice and resolve to secure the public peace told heavily against him. John Giffard left him because he refused to allow him to exact ransom from a prisoner contrary to the agreement made after Lewes. The young Earl Gilbert of Gloucester, though enriched with the estates of the foreigners, resented Leicester's prohibition of a tournament, his naming the wardens of the royal castles by his own authority, and his holding Edward's fortresses on the Welsh marches by his own garrisons. Gloucester's later conduct proves the wisdom of Leicester's precautions. In the spring Parliament of 1265 he openly charged the Earl with violating the Mise of Lewes with tyranny, and with aiming at the crown. Before its close he withdrew to his own lands in the west, and secretly allied himself with Roger Mortimer and the Marcher barons. Earl Simon soon followed him to the west, taking with him the King and Edward. He moved along the Severn, securing its towns, advanced westward to Hereford, and was marching at the end of

The Fall of Earl Simon

1264

SEC. VII

THE BARONS'
WAR 1258
TO 1265

June along bad roads into the heart of South Wales to attack the fortresses of Earl Gilbert in Glamorgan when Edward suddenly made his escape from Hereford and joined Gloucester at Ludlow. The moment had been skilfully chosen, and Edward showed a rare ability in the movements by which he took advantage of the Earl's position. Moving rapidly along the Severn he seized Gloucester and the bridges across the river, destroyed the ships by which Leicester strove to escape across the Channel to Bristol, and cut him off altogether from England. By this movement too he placed himself between the Earl and his son Simon, who was advancing from the east to his father's relief. Turning rapidly on this second force Edward surprised it at Kenilworth and drove it with heavy loss within the walls of the castle. But the success was more than compensated by the opportunity which his absence gave to the Earl of breaking the line of the Severn. Taken by surprise and isolated as he was, Simon had been forced to seek for aid and troops in an avowed alliance with Llewelyn, and it was with Welsh reinforcements that he turned to the east. But the seizure of his ships and of the bridges of the Severn held him a prisoner in Edward's grasp, and a fierce attack drove him back, with broken and starving forces, into the Welsh hills. In utter despair he struck northward to Hereford; but the absence of Edward now enabled him on the 2nd of August to throw his troops in boats across the Severn below Worcester. The news drew Edward quickly back in a fruitless counter-march to the river, for the Earl had already reached Evesham by a long night march on the morning of the 4th, while his son, relieved in turn by Edward's counter-march, had pushed in the same night to the little town of Alcester. The two armies were now but ten miles apart, and their junction seemed secured. But both were spent with long marching, and while the Earl, listening reluctantly to the request of the King, who accompanied him, halted at Evesham for mass and dinner, the army of the younger Simon halted for the same purpose at Alcester.

Battle of Evesham 1265

"Those two dinners doleful were, alas!" sings Robert of Gloucester; for through the same memorable night Edward was hurrying back from the Severn by country cross-lanes to seize the fatal gap that lay between them. As morning broke his army lay across the road that led northward from Evesham to Alcester. Evesham lies in the loop of the river Avon where it bends to the south ; and a height on which Edward ranged his troops closed the one outlet from it save across the river. But a force

SEC. VII
 THE BARONS'
 WAR 1258
 TO 1265

KNIGHT IN ARMOUR.
MS. Roy. 2 A. xxii.
 Late Thirteenth Century.

had been thrown over the river under Mortimer to seize the bridges, and all retreat was thus finally cut off. The approach of Edward's army called Simon to the front, and for the moment he took it for his son's. Though the hope soon died away a touch of soldierly pride moved him as he recognized in the orderly advance

SEC. VII

—
THE BARONS'
WAR 1258
TO 1265
—

of his enemies a proof of his own training. "By the arm of St. James," he cried, "they come on in wise fashion, but it was from me that they learnt it." A glance however satisfied him of the hopelessness of a struggle; it was impossible for a handful of horsemen with a mob of half-armed Welshmen to resist the disciplined knighthood of the royal army. "Let us commend our souls to God," Simon said to the little group around him, "for our bodies are the foe's." He bade Hugh Despenser and the rest of his comrades fly from the field. "If he died," was the noble answer, "they had no will to live." In three hours the butchery was over. The Welsh fled at the first onset like sheep, and were cut ruthlessly down in the cornfields and gardens where they sought refuge. The little group of knights around Simon fought desperately, falling one by one till the Earl was left alone. So terrible were his sword-strokes that he had all but gained the hill-top when a lance-thrust brought his horse to the ground, but Simon still rejected the summons to yield, till a blow from behind felled him, mortally wounded, to the ground. Then with a last cry of "It is God's grace" the soul of the great patriot passed away.

THE VIRGIN AND CHILD

From MS. Roy. 2 A. XXII. 13th Century

CHAPTER IV

THE THREE EDWARDS

1265—1360

Section I.—The Conquest of Wales, 1265—1284

[Authorities.—For the general state of Wales, see the “Itinerarium Cambriæ” of Giraldus Cambrensis: for its general history, the “Brut y Tywysogion,” and “Annales Cambriæ,” published by the Master of the Rolls; the Chronicle of Caradoc of Lancarvan, as given in the translation by Powel; and Warrington’s “History of Wales.” Stephen’s “Literature of the Cymry” affords a general view of Welsh poetry; the “Mabinogion” have been published by Lady Charlotte Guest. In his essays on “The Study of Celtic Literature,” Mr. Matthew Arnold has admirably illustrated the characteristics of the Welsh Poetry. For English affairs the monastic annals we have before mentioned are supplemented by the jejune entries of Trivet and Murimuth.] (A new edition of the “Brut,” and the “Mabinogion,” has been issued by Professor Rhys and Mr. J. Gwenogvryn Evans in their series of Welsh Texts, 1887, 1890. A.S.G.)

WHILE literature and science after a brief outburst were crushed in England by the turmoil of the Barons’ War, a poetic revival had brought into sharp contrast the social and intellectual condition of Wales.

The Welsh Literature

To all outer seeming Wales had in the thirteenth century become utterly barbarous. Stripped of every vestige of the older Roman civilization by ages of bitter warfare, of civil strife, of estrangement from the general culture of Christendom, the unconquered Britons had sunk into a mass of savage herdsmen, clad in the skins and fed by the milk of the cattle they tended, faithless, greedy, and revengeful, retaining no higher political organization than that of the clan, broken by ruthless feuds, united only in battle or in raid against the stranger. But in the heart of the wild people there still lingered a spark of the poetic fire which had nerved it four hundred years before, through Aneurin and Llywarch Hen, to its struggle with the Saxon. At the hour of its

SEC. I
 THE CONQUEST
 OF WALES
 1265
 TO 1284 lowest degradation the silence of Wales was suddenly broken by a crowd of singers. The song of the twelfth century burst forth, not from one bard or another, but from the nation at large. "In every house," says the shrewd Gerald de Barri, "strangers who arrived in the morning were entertained till eventide with the talk of maidens and the music of the harp." The romantic literature of the race found an admirable means of utterance in its tongue, as real a development of the old Celtic language heard by Cæsar as the Romance tongues are developments of Cæsar's Latin, but which at a far earlier date than any other language of modern Europe had attained to definite structure and to settled literary form. No other mediæval literature shows at its outset the same elaborate and completed organization as that of the Welsh. But within these settled forms the Celtic fancy plays with a startling freedom. In one of the later poems Gwion the Little transforms himself into a hare, a fish, a bird, a grain of wheat; but he is only the symbol of the strange shapes in which the Celtic fancy embodies itself in the tales or "Mabinogion" which reached their highest perfection in the legends of Arthur. Its gay extravagance flings defiance to all fact, tradition, probability, and revels in the impossible and unreal. When Arthur sails into the unknown world, it is in a ship of glass. The "descent into hell," as a Celtic poet paints it, shakes off the mediæval horror with the mediæval reverence, and the knight who achieves the quest spends his years of infernal durance in hunting and minstrelsy, and in converse with fair women. The world of the Mabinogion is a world of pure phantasy, a new earth of marvels and enchantments, of dark forests whose silence is broken by the hermit's bell, and sunny glades where the light plays on the hero's armour. Each figure as it moves across the poet's canvas is bright with glancing colour. "The maiden was clothed in a robe of flame-coloured silk, and about her neck was a collar of ruddy gold in which were precious emeralds and rubies. Her head was of brighter gold than the flower of the broom, her skin was whiter than the foam of the wave, and fairer were her hands and her fingers than the blossoms of the wood-anemone amidst the spray of the meadow fountain. The eye of the trained hawk, the glance of the falcon, was not brighter than hers. Her bosom was more snowy than the breast hynia. mal ytreystbil. oystoz a gerent. uab erbit.

Athur aduodys adalhs ygbacr lion arbyc. ac ydelis aruntu teth yntre pasc. apthmy uad
 lic. Ar llythryn drey yllweth adalhs aoruc yno. kanyis hugwchaf. Ue yny gy uoeth oed gaei lion. yar uoz ac yar on.
 Adygnuoz aoruc. atthi nab breithm arona bc. aedoynt hys uab hys. Ac ystt a hynny seyll abarduet. kanyis uab hys uab uoer yrei hynny yny. ac ystt onybel uab. aghenyon yn eu llythryn.
 Ahanbet ef ygbacr lion yntre pasc.
 egllys arde aachubir yrth yoffereim.
 Gof uab ydachubir. egllys yarthur. ae de yned ae llythryn. Ar ail y dychyuar. ac rianed. Ar dymys a yny. hz dntem arde eu eit. Ar beduared. hz. franc ar sbyoo gyon ereill. A uab egllys ereill au yoi or nab pemteulu. ac ylsalchmei yndemat.
 Kanyis ef ydard. a yoyw dde. mlyow aeth ac urdis boyed yd. beimgaf ar y nab pemteulu.
 ac nyf angles yny un oz egllystion mlyow. noc aoyw ead. hz. m. llythryn. Gied. llythryn. gamed. na hz. oed uab. yntre pasc. 1040. Ac nyf yntre pasc.

FACSIMILE OF PART OF MABINOGION.

"Red Book of Hergest," Welsh MS. Fourteenth Century; now belonging to Jesus College, Oxford; exhibited in Bodleian Library.

SEC. I
 THE CONQUEST
 OF WALES
 1265
 TO 1284 of the white swan, her cheek was redder than the reddest roses." Everywhere there is an Oriental profusion of gorgeous imagery, but the gorgeousness is seldom oppressive. The sensibility of the Celtic temper, so quick to perceive beauty, so eager in its thirst for life, its emotions, its adventures, its sorrows, its joys, is tempered by a passionate melancholy that expresses its revolt against the impossible, by an instinct of what is noble, by a sentiment that discovers the weird charm of nature. Some graceful play of pure fancy, some tender note of feeling, some magical touch of beauty, relieves its wildest extravagance. As Kulhwch's greyhounds bound from side to side of their master's steed, they "sport round him like two sea-swallows." His spear is "swifter than the fall of the dewdrop from the blade of reed-grass upon the earth when the dew of June is at the heaviest." A subtle, observant love of nature and natural beauty takes fresh colour from the passionate human sentiment with which it is imbued, sentiment which breaks out in Gwalchmai's cry of nature-love, "I love the birds and their sweet voices in the lulling songs of the wood," in his watches at night beside the fords "among the untrodden grass" to hear the nightingale and watch the play of the sea-mew. Even patriotism takes the same picturesque form; the Welsh poet hates the flat and sluggish land of the Saxon; as he dwells on his own, he tells of "its sea-coast and its mountains, its towns on the forest border, its fair landscape, its dales, its waters, and its valleys, its white sea-mews, its beauteous women." But the song passes swiftly and subtly into a world of romantic sentiment: "I love its fields clothed with tender trefoil, I love the marches of Merioneth where my head was pillowed on a snow-white arm." In the Celtic love of woman there is little of the Teutonic depth and earnestness, but in its stead a childlike spirit of delicate enjoyment, a faint distant flush of passion like the rose-light of dawn on a snowy mountain peak, a playful delight in beauty. "White is my love as the apple blossom, as the ocean's spray; her face shines like the pearly dew on Eryri; the glow of her cheeks is like the light of sunset." The buoyant and elastic temper of the French trouvère was spiritualized in the Welsh singers by a more refined poetic feeling. "Whoso beheld her was filled with her love. Four white trefoils sprang up wherever she trod." The touch of pure fancy removes its object out of the sphere of passion into one of delight and reverence.

It is strange, as we have said, to pass from the world of actual Welsh history into such a world as this. But side by side with this wayward, fanciful stream of poesy and romance ran a torrent of intenser song. The old spirit of the earlier bards, their joy in battle, their love for freedom, their hatred of the Saxon, broke out in ode after ode, in songs extravagant, monotonous, often prosaic, but fused into poetry by the intense fire of patriotism which glowed within them. The rise of the new poetic feeling indeed marked the appearance of a new energy in the long struggle with the English conqueror.

Of the three Welsh states into which all that remained unconquered of Britain had been broken by the victories of Deorham and Chester, two had long ceased to exist. The country between the Clyde and the Dee had been gradually absorbed by the conquests of Northumbria and the growth of the Scot monarchy. West Wales, between the British Channel and the estuary of the Severn, had yielded to the sword of Egberht. But a fiercer resistance prolonged the independence of the great central portion which alone in modern language preserves the name of Wales. In itself the largest and most powerful of the British states, it was aided in its struggle against Mercia by the weakness of its assailant, the youngest and least powerful of the English states, as well as by the internal warfare which distracted the energies of the invaders. But Mercia had no sooner risen to supremacy among the English kingdoms than it took the work of conquest vigorously in hand. Offa tore from Wales the border land between the Severn and the Wye; the raids of his successors carried fire and sword into the heart of the country; and an acknowledgement of the Mercian over-lordship was wrested from the Welsh princes. On the fall of Mercia this passed to the West-Saxon kings. The Laws of Howel Dda own the payment of a yearly tribute by "the prince of Aberffraw" to "the King of London." The weakness of England during her long struggle with the Danes revived the hopes of British independence. But with the fall of the Danelaw the Welsh princes were again brought to submission, and when in the midst of the Confessor's reign the Welsh seized on a quarrel

SEC. I
—
THE CONQUEST OF WALES
1265
TO 1284
—

England
and the Welsh

after Freeman's William Rufus.

Walker & Routall sc.

MAP ILLUSTRATING THE WELSH WARS OF WILLIAM RUFUS AND HENRY I.
Freeman's "William Rufus."

between the houses of Leofric and Godwine to cross the border and carry their attacks into England itself, the victories of Harold re-asserted the English supremacy. His light-armed troops disembarking on the coast penetrated to the heart of the mountains, and the successors of the Welsh prince Gruffydd, whose head was the trophy of the campaign, swore to observe the old fealty and render the old tribute to the English Crown.

SEC. I
 —
 THE CONQUEST OF WALES
 1265
 TO 1284
 —

A far more desperate struggle began when the wave of Norman conquest broke on the Welsh frontier. A chain of great earldoms, settled by William along the border-land, at once bridled the old

The Conquest of South Wales

KEEP OF BRIDGENORTH CASTLE, Built by Robert of Belesme.

marauding forays. From his county palatine of Chester, Hugh the Wolf harried Flintshire into a desert ; Robert of Belesme, in his earldom of Shrewsbury, "slew the Welsh," says a chronicler, "like sheep, conquered them, enslaved them, and flayed them with nails of iron." Backed by these greater baronies a horde of lesser adventurers obtained the royal "licence to make conquest on the Welsh." Monmouth and Abergavenny were seized and guarded by Norman castellans ; Bernard of Neufmarché won the lordship of Brecknock ; Roger of Montgomery raised the town and fortress

SEC. I
 THE CONQUEST
 OF WALES
 1265
 TO 1284 in Powysland which still preserves his name. A great rising of the whole people in the days of the second William at last recovered some of this Norman spoil. The new castle of Montgomery was burned, Brecknock and Cardigan were cleared of the invaders, and the Welsh poured ravaging over the English border. Twice the Red King carried his arms fruitlessly among the mountains, against enemies who took refuge in their fastnesses till famine and hardship had driven his broken host into retreat. The wiser policy of Henry the First fell back on his father's system of gradual conquest, and a new tide of invasion flowed along the coast, where the land was level and open and accessible from the sea. The attack was aided by internal strife. Robert Fitz-Hamo, the lord of Gloucester, was summoned to his aid by a Welsh chieftain ; and the defeat of Rhys ap Tewdor, the last prince under whom Southern Wales was united, produced an anarchy which enabled Robert to land safely on the coast of Glamorgan, to conquer the country round, and to divide it among his soldiers. A force of Flemings and Englishmen followed the Earl of Clare as he landed near Milford Haven, and pushing back the British inhabitants settled a "Little England" in the present Pembrokeshire. A few daring adventurers accompanied the Norman Lord of Kemeys into Cardigan, where land might be had for the winning by any one who would "wage war on the Welsh."

CARDIFF CASTLE.
 The Keep built by Robert FitzHamo's Son-in-law, Earl Robert of Gloucester.

It was at this moment, when the utter subjugation of the British race seemed at hand, that a new outburst of energy rolled back the tide of invasion and changed the fitful resistance of the separate Welsh provinces into a national effort to regain independence. A new poetic fire, as we have seen, sprang into life. Every fight, every hero, had suddenly its verse. The names of the older bards were revived in bold forgeries to animate the national resistance and to prophesy victory. It was in North Wales that the new spirit of patriotism received its strongest inspiration from this burst of song. Again and again Henry the Second was driven to retreat from the impregnable fastnesses where the "Lords of Snowdon," the princes of the house of Gruffydd ap Conan, claimed supremacy over Wales. Once a cry arose that the King was slain, Henry of Essex flung down the royal standard, and the King's desperate efforts could hardly save his army from utter rout. In a later campaign the invaders were met by storms of rain, and forced to abandon their baggage in a headlong flight to Chester. The greatest of the Welsh odes, that known to English readers in Gray's translation as "The Triumph of Owen," is Gwalchmai's song of victory over the repulse of an English fleet from Abermenai. The long reigns of the two Llewelyns, the sons of Jorwerth and of Gruffydd, which all but cover the last century of Welsh independence, seemed destined to realize the hopes of their countrymen. The homage which the first succeeded in extorting from the whole of the Welsh chieftains placed him openly at the head of his race, and gave a new character to his struggle with the English King. In consolidating his authority within his own domains, and in the assertion of his lordship over the princes of the south, Llewelyn ap Jorwerth aimed steadily at securing the means of striking off the yoke of the Saxon. It was in vain that John strove to buy his friendship by the hand of his daughter Johanna. Fresh raids on the Marches forced the King to enter Wales; but though his army reached Snowdon it fell back like its predecessors, starved and broken before an enemy it could never reach. A second attack had better success. The chieftains

SEC. I
 THE CONQUEST
 OF WALES
 1265
 TO 1284
 —
 The Welsh Revival

1157

1194-1283

*Llewelyn
 ap Jorwerth*
 1194-1246

1211

SEC. I
 THE CONQUEST
 OF WALES
 1265
 TO 1284 of South Wales were drawn from their new allegiance to join the English forces, and Llewelyn, prisoned in his fastnesses, was at last driven to submit. But the ink of the treaty was hardly dry before Wales was again on fire; the common fear of the English once more united its chieftains, and the war between John and his barons removed all dread of a new invasion. Absolved from his allegiance to an excommunicated King, and allied with the barons under Fitz-Walter—too glad to enlist in their cause a prince who could hold in check the nobles of

PEMBROKE CASTLE.
 Early Thirteenth Century.

the border country, where the royalist cause was strongest—Llewelyn seized his opportunity to reduce Shrewsbury, to annex Powys, where the English influence had always been powerful, to clear the royal garrisons from Caermarthen and Cardigan, and to force even the Flemings of Pembroke to do him homage.

Llewelyn
 ap Jorwerth
 and the Bards

The hopes of Wales rose higher and higher with each triumph of the Lord of Snowdon. The court of Llewelyn was crowded with bardic singers. "He pours," sings one of them, "his gold into the lap of the bard as the ripe fruit falls from the trees."

But gold was hardly needed to wake their enthusiasm. Poet after poet sang of "the Devastator of England," the "Eagle of

SEC. I
THE CONQUEST
OF WALES
1265
TO 1284

WELSH SOLDIERS.

Thirteenth Century.

Chapter House Liber A, Public Record Office.

men that loves not to lie nor sleep," "towering above the rest of men with his long red lance," his "red helmet of battle crested with a fierce wolf." "The sound of his coming is like the roar of the wave as it rushes to the shore, that can neither be stayed nor appeased." Lesser bards strung together his victories in rough jingle of rime and hounded him on to the slaughter. "Be of good courage in the slaughter," sings Elidir, "cling to thy work, destroy England, and plunder its multitudes." A fierce thirst for blood runs through the abrupt, passionate verses of the court singers. "Swansea, that tranquil town, was broken in heaps," bursts out a triumphant poet; "St. Clears, with its bright white lands, it is not Saxons who hold it now!"

WELSH ARCHER.

Thirteenth Century.

Chapter House Liber A, Public Record Office.

"In Swansea, the key of Lloegria, we made widows of all the

SEC. I
 THE CONQUEST
 OF WALES
 1265
 TO 1284 wives." "The dread Eagle is wont to lay corpses in rows, and to feast with the leader of wolves and with hovering ravens glutted with flesh, butchers with keen scent of carcasses." "Better," closes the song, "is the grave than the life of man who sighs when the horns call him forth to the squares of battle." But even in bardic verse Llewelyn rises high out of the mere mob of chieftains who live by rapine, and boast as the Hirlas-horn passes from hand to hand through the hall that "they take and give no quarter." "Tender-hearted, wise, witty, ingenious,"

LADY CHAPEL, GLASTONBURY.
 Built 1184—1189.

he was "the great Cæsar" who was to gather beneath his sway the broken fragments of the Celtic race. Mysterious prophecies, the prophecies of Merlin the Wise, floated from lip to lip, to nerve Wales to its last struggle with the invaders. Medrawd and Arthur would appear once more on earth to fight over again the fatal battle of Camlan. The last conqueror of the Celtic race, Cadwallon, still lived to combat for his people. The supposed verses of Taliesin expressed the undying hope of a restoration of the Cymry. "In their hands shall be all the land from Brittany to Man: . . . a rumour shall arise that the Germans are moving out of Britain back again to their fatherland." Gathered up in the strange work of Geoffry of Monmouth, these predictions made a deep impression, not on Wales only, but on its conquerors. It was to meet indeed the dreams of a yet living Arthur that the grave of the legendary hero-king at Glastonbury was found and visited by Henry the Second. But neither trick nor conquest could shake the firm faith of the Celt in the ultimate victory of his race. "Think you," said Henry to a Welsh

SEC. I
 —
 • THE CONQUEST OF WALES
 1265
 TO 1284
 —

LLANTHONY PRIORY, NEAR ABERGAVENNY.
 Built 1200—1220.

chieftain who had joined his host, "that your people of rebels can withstand my army?" "My people," replied the chieftain, "may be weakened by your might, and even in great part destroyed, but unless the wrath of God be on the side of its foe it will not perish utterly. Nor deem I that other race or other tongue will answer for this corner of the world before the Judge of all at the last day save this people and tongue of Wales." So ran the popular rime, "Their Lord they will praise, their speech they shall keep, their land they shall lose—except wild Wales." Faith and prophecy seemed justified by the growing

SEC. I
 THE CONQUEST
 OF WALES
 1265
 TO 1284

*Llewelyn
 ap Gruffydd*
 1246-1283

1267

The Conquest
 of Wales

strength of the British people. The weakness and dissensions which characterized the reign of Henry the Third enabled Llewelyn ap Jorwerth to preserve a practical independence till the close of his life, when a fresh acknowledgement of the English supremacy was wrested from him by Archbishop Edmund. But the triumphs of his arms were renewed by Llewelyn the son of Gruffydd, whose ravages swept the border to the very gates of Chester, while his conquest of Glamorgan seemed to bind the whole people together in a power strong enough to meet any attack from the stranger. Throughout the Barons' war Llewelyn remained master of Wales. Even at its close the threat of an attack from the now united kingdom only forced him to submission on a practical acknowledgement of his sovereignty. The chieftain whom the English kings had till then scrupulously designated as "Prince of Aberffraw," was now allowed the title of "Prince of Wales," and his right to receive homage from the other nobles of his principality was allowed.

Near, however, as Llewelyn seemed to the final realization of his aims, he was still a vassal of the English crown, and the accession of a new sovereign to the throne was at once followed by the demand of his homage. The youth of Edward the First had already given promise of the high qualities which distinguished him as an English ruler. The passion for law, the instinct of good government, which were to make his reign so memorable in our history, had declared themselves from the first. He had sided with the barons at the outset of their struggle with Henry; he had striven to keep his father true to the Provisions of Oxford.

GRUFFYDD, SON OF LLEWELYN, TRYING TO ESCAPE FROM THE TOWER, 1243.

Drawn by Matthew Paris.
MS. C.C.C. Camb. xvi.

SEC. I
 —
 THE CONQUEST OF WALES
 1265
 TO 1284
 —

It was only when the Crown seemed falling into bondage that Edward passed to the royal side; and when the danger he dreaded was over he returned to his older attitude. In the first flush of victory, while the doom of Simon was yet unknown, Edward stood alone in desiring his captivity against the cry of the Marcher lords for his death. When all was over he wept over the corpse of his cousin, Henry de Montfort, and followed the Earl's body to the tomb. It was from Earl Simon, as the Earl owned with a proud bitterness ere his death, that Edward had learned the skill in warfare which distinguished him among the princes of his time. But he had learned the far nobler lesson of a self-government which lifted him high above them as a ruler among men. Severing himself from the brutal triumph of the royalist party, he secured fair terms to the conquered, and after crushing the last traces of resistance, he won the adoption by the Crown of the constitutional system of government for which the barons had fought. So utterly was the land at rest that he felt free to join a crusade in Palestine. His father's death recalled him home to meet at once the difficulty of Wales. During two years Llewelyn rejected the King's 1267

BISHOP'S PALACE, S. DAVID'S.

Death of Henry III
 1272

SEC. I
 THE CONQUEST
 OF WALES
 1265
 TO 1284
 1277

1282 repeated summons to him to perform his homage, till Edward's patience was exhausted, and the royal army marched into North Wales. The fabric of Welsh greatness fell at a single blow; the chieftains of the south and centre who had so lately sworn fealty to Llewelyn deserted him to join his English enemies; an English fleet reduced Anglesea, and the Prince, cooped up in his fastnesses, was forced to throw himself on the royal mercy. With characteristic moderation his conqueror contented himself with adding to the English dominions the coast-district as far as Conway, and providing that the title of Prince of Wales should cease at Llewelyn's death. A heavy fine which he had incurred was remitted, and Eleanor the daughter of Simon of Montfort, who had been arrested on her way to join him as his wife, was wedded to him at the English court. For four years all was quiet, but the persuasions of his brother David, who had deserted him in the previous war, and whose desertion had been rewarded with an English lordship, roused Llewelyn to a fresh revolt. A prophecy of Merlin had announced that when English money became round the Prince of Wales should be crowned at London; and a new coinage of copper money, coupled with the prohibition to break the silver penny into halves and quarters, as had been usual, was supposed to have fulfilled the prediction. In the campaign which followed the Prince held out in Snowdon with the stubbornness of despair, and the rout of an English detachment which had thrown a bridge across the Menai Straits into Anglesea prolonged the contest into the winter. Terrible however as were the sufferings of the English army, Edward's firmness remained unbroken, and rejecting all proposals of retreat he issued orders for the formation of a new army at Caermarthen to complete the circle of investment round Llewelyn. The Prince sallied from his mountain-hold for a raid upon Radnorshire, and fell in a petty skirmish on the banks of the Wye. With him died the independence of his race. After six months of flight his brother David was arrested and sentenced in full Parliament to a traitor's death. The submission of the lesser chieftains was followed by the building of strong castles at Conway and Caernarvon, and the settlement of English barons on the confiscated soil. A wiser instinct of government led

SEC. II
 —
 THE CONQUEST OF WALES
 1265
 TO 1284
 —

CONWAY CASTLE.

Edward to introduce by the "Statute of Wales" English law and the English administration of justice into Wales. But little came of the attempt; and it was not till the time of Henry the Eighth that the country was actually incorporated in England. What Edward had really done was to break the Welsh resistance. His policy of justice (for the "massacre of the bards" is a mere fable) accomplished its end, and in spite of two later rebellions Wales ceased to be any serious danger to England for a hundred years.

CAERNARVON CASTLE.

Section II.—The English Parliament, 1283—1295

[Authorities.—The short treatise on the Constitution of Parliament called "Modus tenendi Parliamenta" may be taken as a fair account of its actual state and powers in the fourteenth century. It has been reprinted by Dr. Stubbs, in the invaluable collection of Documents which serves as the base of the present section. Sir Francis Palgrave has illustrated the remedial side of our parliamentary institutions with much vigour and picturesqueness in his "History of the English Commonwealth," but his conclusions are often hasty and prejudiced. On all constitutional points from the reign of Edward the First we can now rely on the judgment and research of Mr. Hallam ("Middle Ages").]

[The second volume of Dr. Stubbs's "Constitutional History" which deals with this period was published after this History was written and the list of authorities prepared.—ED.]

The New England

The conquest of Wales marked the adoption of a new attitude and policy on the part of the crown. From the earliest moment of his reign Edward the First definitely abandoned all dreams of recovering the foreign dominions which his grandfather had lost. He concentrated himself on the consolidation and good government of England itself. We can only fairly judge his annexation of Wales, or his attempt to annex Scotland, if we regard them as parts of the same scheme of national administration to which we owe his final establishment of our judicature, our legislation, our Parliament. The King's English policy, like his English name, was the sign of a new epoch. The long period of national formation had come practically to an end. With the reign of Edward begins modern England, the constitutional England in which we live. It is not that any chasm separates our history before it from our history after it, as the chasm of the Revolution divides the history of France, for we have traced the rudiments of our constitution to the first moment of the English settlement in Britain. But it is with these as with our language. The tongue of Ælfred is the very tongue we speak, but in spite of its identity with modern English it has to be learned like the tongue of a stranger. On the other hand, the English of Chaucer is almost as intelligible as our own. In the first the historian and philologist can study the origin and development of our national speech, in the last a school-boy can enjoy the story of Troilus and Cressida, or listen to the gay chat of the Canterbury Pilgrims. In precisely the same way

SEC. 11
 THE ENGLISH PARLIAM-ENT 1283
 TO 1295

GREAT SEAL OF EDWARD I.

a knowledge of our earliest laws is indispensable for the right understanding of later legislation, its origin and its development, while the principles of our Parliamentary system must necessarily be studied in the Meetings of Wise Men before the Conquest or the Great Council of barons after it. But the Parliaments which Edward gathered at the close of his reign are not merely illustrative of the history of later Parliaments, they are absolutely identical with those which still sit at St. Stephen's; and a statute of Edward, if unrepealed, can be pleaded in our courts as formally as

SEC. II
 THE ENGLISH
 PARLIA-MENT 1283
 TO 1295

a statute of Victoria. In a word, the long struggle of the constitution for actual existence has come to an end. The contests which follow are not contests which tell, like those which preceded them, on the actual fabric of our political institutions; they are simply stages in the rough discipline by which England has learned, and is still learning, how best to use and how wisely to develop the latent powers of its national life, how to adjust the balance of its social and political forces, and to adapt its constitutional forms to the varying conditions of the time. From the reign of Edward, in fact, we are face to face with modern England. King, Lords, Commons, the Courts of Justice, the forms of public administration, our local divisions and provincial jurisdictions, the relations of Church and State, in great measure the framework of society itself, have all taken the shape which they still essentially retain.

Judicial Reforms

Much of this great change is doubtless attributable to the general temper of the age, whose special task and object seemed to be that of reducing to distinct form the great principles which had sprung into a new and vigorous life during the century that preceded it. As the opening of the thirteenth century had been an age of founders, creators, discoverers, so its close was an age of lawyers; the most illustrious men of the time were no longer such as Bacon, or Earl Simon, or Francis of Assisi, but men such as St. Lewis of France or Alfonso the Wise, organizers, administrators, framers of laws and institutions. It was to this class that Edward himself belonged. He had little of creative genius or political originality in his character, but he possessed in a high degree the faculty of organization, and his passionate love of law broke out even in the legal chicanery to which he sometimes stooped. In the judicial reforms to which so much of his attention was directed, he showed himself, if not an "English Justinian," at any rate a clear-sighted man of business, developing, reforming, bringing into a lasting shape the institutions of his predecessors. One of his first cares was to complete the judicial reforms begun by Henry II. The most important court of civil jurisdiction, the Sheriff's or County Court, remained unchanged, both in the extent of its jurisdiction, and the character of the Sheriff as a royal officer. But the superior courts into which the King's Court had since the Great Charter divided itself, those of the King's Bench, Exchequer, and Common Pleas,

The three Common Law Courts

now received a distinct staff of judges for each court. Of far greater importance than this change, which was in effect but the completion of a process of severance that had long been going on, was the establishment of an equitable jurisdiction side by side with that of the common law. In his reform of 1178 Henry the Second had broken up the older King's Court, which had till then served as the final Court of Appeal, by the severance of the purely legal judges who had been gradually added to it from the general body of his councillors. The judges thus severed from the Council retained the name and the ordinary jurisdiction of "the King's Court," while all cases in which they failed to do justice were reserved for the special cognizance of the royal Council itself. To this final jurisdiction of the King in Council Edward gave a wide developement. His assembly of the ministers, the higher permanent officials, and the law officers of the Crown, for the first time reserved to itself in its judicial capacity the correction of all breaches of the law which the lower courts had failed to repress, whether from weakness, partiality, or corruption, and especially of those lawless outbreaks of the more powerful baronage which

SEC. 11
—
THE ENGLISH
PARLIA-MENT 1283
TO 1295
—

The King in Council

CHANCELLOR'S SEAL BAG.

Carved on Tomb of Walter de Merton, Rochester Cathedral.

Journal of Archaeological Association.

defied the common authority of the judges. Though regarded with jealousy by Parliament, the jurisdiction of the Council seems to have been steadily put in force through the two centuries which followed; in the reign of Henry the Seventh it took legal and statutory form in the shape of the Court of Star Chamber, and its powers are still exercised in our own day by the Judicial Committee of the Privy Council. But the same duty of the Crown to do justice where its courts fell short of giving due redress for wrong

*The Court
of Chancery*

expressed itself in the jurisdiction of the Chancellor. This great officer of State, who had perhaps originally acted only as President of the Council when discharging its judicial functions, acquired at

SEC. II

THE ENGLISH PARLIAM-ENT1283
TO 1295

a very early date an independent judicial position of the same nature. It is by remembering the origin of the Court of Chancery that we understand the nature of the powers it gradually acquired. All grievances of the subject, especially those which sprang from the misconduct of government officials or of powerful oppressors, fell within its cognizance, as they fell within that of the Royal Council, and to these were added disputes respecting the wardship of infants, dower, rent-charges, or tithes. Its equitable jurisdiction sprang from the defective nature and the technical and unbending rules of the common law. As the Council had given redress in cases where law became injustice, so the Court of Chancery interfered without regard to the rules of procedure adopted by the common law courts, on the petition of a party for whose grievance the common law provided no adequate remedy. An analogous extension of his powers enabled the Chancellor to afford relief in cases of fraud, accident, or abuse of trust, and this side of his jurisdiction was largely extended at a later time through the results of legislation on the tenure of land by ecclesiastical bodies. The separate powers of the Chancellor, whatever was the original date at which they were first exercised, seem to have been thoroughly established under Edward the First.

Edward's Legislation

1279

In legislation, as in his judicial reforms, Edward renewed and consolidated the principles which had been already brought into practical working by Henry the Second. Significant acts announced his determination to carry out Henry's policy of limiting the independent jurisdiction of the Church. He was resolute to force it to become thoroughly national by bearing its due part of the common national burthens, and to break its growing dependence upon Rome. The defiant resistance of the ecclesiastical body was answered in an emphatic way. By falling into the "dead hand" or "mortmain" of the Church land ceased to render its feudal services; and the Statute "of Mortmain" now forbade the alienation of land to religious bodies in such wise that it should cease to render its due service to the King. The restriction was probably no beneficial one to the country at large, for Churchmen were the best landlords, and it was soon evaded by the ingenuity of the clerical lawyers; but it marked the growing jealousy of any attempt to set aside what was national from serving the general need and profit of the nation. Its immediate effect was to stir the clergy to a bitter resentment: But Edward remained firm, and when the bishops proposed to restrict the royal courts from dealing with cases of patronage or causes which touched the chattels of Churchmen he met their proposals by an instant prohibition. His care for the trading classes was seen in the Statute of Merchants,

SEC. II

THE ENGLISH
PARLIA-MENT

1283

TO 1295

1283

SEAL OF STATUTE MERCHANT, GLOUCESTER.
1307—1327.

Collection of the Society of Antiquaries.

which provided for the registration of the debts of traders, and for their recovery by distraint of the debtor's goods and the imprisonment of his person. The Statute of Winchester, the greatest of Edward's measures for the enforcement of public order, revived and reorganized the old institutions of national police and national defence. It regulated the action of the hundred, the duty of watch and ward, and the gathering of the fyrd or militia of the realm as 1285

Henry the Second had moulded it into form in his Assize of Arms. Every man was bound to hold himself in readiness, duly armed, for the King's service in case of invasion or revolt, or to pursue felons when hue and cry was raised after them. Every district was made responsible for crimes committed within its bounds; the gates of each town were required to be closed at nightfall, and all strangers to give an account of themselves to its magistrates. As a security for travellers against sudden attacks from robbers, all brushwood was to be destroyed for a space of two hundred feet on either side the public highway, a provision which illustrates at once the social and physical condition of the country at the time. To enforce the observance of this act knights were appointed in every shire under the name of Conservators of the Peace, a name which, as the convenience of these local magistrates was more sensibly felt and their powers more largely extended, was changed for that which they still retain of "Justices of the Peace." The great measure which is commonly known as the Statute "Quia

Justices of the Peace
1285

SEC. 11
 THE ENGLISH
 PARLIA-MENT 1283
 TO 1295
 1290

Emptores" is one of those legislative efforts which mark the progress of a wide social revolution in the country at large. The number of the greater barons was diminishing every day, while the number of the country gentry and of the more substantial yeomanry was increasing with the increase of the national wealth. This increase showed itself in the growing desire to become proprietors of land. Tenants of the greater barons received under-tenants on condition of their rendering them similar services to those which they themselves rendered to their lords; and the baronage, while duly receiving the services in compensation for which they had originally granted their lands in fee, saw with jealousy the feudal profits of these new under-tenants, the profits of wardship or of reliefs and the like, in a word the whole increase in the value of

SEAL OF WILLIAM MORAUNT, REPRESENTING A KENTISH
 MANOR-HOUSE, A.D. 1272.
Archaeological Journal.

MANOR-HOUSE, ACTON BURNELL.
 Built 1283—1292.
Archaeological Journal.

the estate consequent on its subdivision and higher cultivation, passing into other hands than their own. The purpose of the statute was to check this process by providing that in any case of alienation the sub-tenant should henceforth hold, not of the tenant, but directly of the superior lord. But its result was to promote instead of hindering the transfer and subdivision of land. The tenant who was before compelled to retain in any case so much of the estate as enabled him to discharge his feudal services to the over-lord of whom he held it, was now enabled by a process analogous to the modern sale of "tenant-right," to transfer both land and services to new holders. However small the estates thus created might be, the bulk were held directly of the Crown; and this class of lesser gentry and freeholders grew steadily from this time in numbers and importance.

It is to the same social revolution as well as to the large statesmanship of Edward the First that we owe our Parliament. Neither the Meeting of the Wise Men before the Conquest, nor the Great Council of the Barons after it, had been in any way representative bodies. The first theoretically included all free holders of land, but it shrank at an early time into a gathering of earls, higher nobles, and bishops, with the officers and thegns of the royal household. Little change was made in the composition of this assembly by the Conquest, for the Great Council of the Norman kings was held to include all tenants who held directly of the Crown, the bishops and greater abbots (whose character as independent spiritual members tended more and more to merge in their position as barons), and the great officers of the Court. But though its composition remained the same, the character of the assembly was essentially altered. From a free gathering of "Wise Men" it sank to a Royal Court of feudal vassals. Its functions seem to have become almost nominal, and its powers to have been restricted to the sanctioning, without debate or possibility of refusal, all grants demanded from it by the Crown. Its "counsel and consent," however, remained necessary for the legal validity of every great fiscal or political measure, and its very existence was an effectual protest against the imperial theories advanced by the lawyers of Henry the Second, theories which declared all legislative power to reside wholly in the sovereign. It was in fact under Henry that these assemblies became more regular, and their functions more important. The reforms which marked his reign were issued in the Great Council, and even financial matters were

SEC. II
 THE ENGLISH
 PARLIA-MENT 1283
 TO 1295

The Great Council
 of the Realm

SEC. II
 THE ENGLISH
 PARLIA-MENT 1283
 TO 1295

suffered to be debated there. But it was not till the grant of the Great Charter that its powers over taxation were formally recognized, and the principle established that no burthen beyond the customary feudal aids might be imposed "save by the Common Council of the Realm." The same great document first expressly regulated its form. In theory, as we have seen, the assembly consisted of all who held land directly of the Crown. But the same causes which restricted attendance at the Witenagemot to the greater nobles told on the actual composition of the Council of Barons. While the attendance of the ordinary tenants in chief, the Knights or "Lesser Barons," was burthensome from its expense to themselves, their numbers and their dependence on the higher nobles made their assembly dangerous to the Crown. As early, therefore, as the time of Henry the First we find a distinction recognized between the "Greater Barons," of whom the Council was usually composed, and the "Lesser Barons" who formed the bulk of the tenants of the Crown. But though the attendance of the latter had become rare, their right of attendance remained intact. While enacting that the prelates and greater barons should be summoned by special writs to each gathering of the Council, a remarkable provision of the Great Charter orders a general summons to be issued through the Sheriff to all direct tenants of the Crown. The provision was probably intended to rouse the lesser baronage to the exercise of rights which had practically passed into desuetude, but as the clause is omitted in later issues of the Charter we may doubt whether the principle it embodied ever received more than a very limited application. There are traces of the attendance of a few of the lesser knight-hood, gentry perhaps of the neighbourhood where the assembly was held, in some of its meetings under Henry the Third, but till a late period in the reign of his successor the Great Council practically remained a gathering of the greater barons, the prelates, and the officers of the Crown. The change which the Great Charter had failed to accomplish was now, however, brought about by the social circumstances of the time. One of the most remarkable of these was the steady decrease in the number of the greater nobles. The bulk of the earldoms had already lapsed to the Crown through the extinction of the families of their possessors ; of the greater baronies, many had practically ceased to exist by their division among co-heiresses, many through the constant struggle of the poorer barons to rid themselves of their rank by a disclaimer, so as to escape the burthen of higher taxation and attendance in Parliament which it involved. How far this diminution had gone we may see from the fact that hardly more than a hundred barons sat in the earlier Councils of Edward's reign. But while the number of those who actually possessed the privilege of assisting in Parliament was rapidly diminishing, the numbers and wealth of the "lesser baronage," whose right of attendance had become a mere constitutional tradition, was as rapidly increasing. The long peace and prosperity of the realm, the extension of its commerce, and the increased export of wool, were swelling the ranks and incomes of the country gentry as well as of the freeholders and substantial yeomanry. We have already noticed the growing passion for the possession of land which makes this reign so critical a moment in the history of the English freeholder ; but the same tendency had to some extent existed in the preceding century, and it was a consciousness of the growing importance of this class of rural proprietors which induced the barons at the time of the Charter to make their fruitless attempt to induce them to take part in the deliberations of the Great Council. But while the barons desired their presence as an aid against the Crown, the Crown itself desired it as a means of rendering taxation more efficient. So long as the Great Council remained a mere assembly of magnates it was necessary for the King's ministers to treat separately with the other orders of the state as to the amount and assessment of their contributions. The grant made in the Great Council was binding only on the barons and prelates who made it ; but before the aids of the boroughs, the Church, or the shires could reach the royal treasury, a separate negotiation had to be conducted by the officers of the Exchequer with the reeves of each town, the sheriff and shire-court of each county, and the archdeacons of each diocese. Bargains of this sort would be the more tedious and disappointing as the necessities of the Crown increased in the later years of Edward, and it became a matter of fiscal expediency to obtain the sanction of any proposed taxation through the presence of these classes in the Great Council itself.

SEC. 11
 THE ENGLISH
 PARLIA-MENT 1283
 TO 1295
 Knights
 of the Shire

The effort, however, to revive the old personal attendance of the lesser baronage, which had broken down half a century before, could hardly be renewed at a time when the increase of their numbers made it more impracticable than ever; but a means of escape from this difficulty was fortunately suggested by the very nature of the court through which alone a summons could be addressed to the landed knighthood. Amidst the many judicial reforms of Henry or Edward the Shire Court remained unchanged. The haunted mound or the immemorial oak round which the assembly gathered (for the court was often held in the open air) were the relics of a time before the free kingdom had sunk into a shire, and its folk-moot into a County Court. But save that the King's reeve had taken the place of the King, and that the Norman legislation had displaced the Bishop and set four Coroners by the Sheriff's side, the gathering of the freeholders remained much as of old. The local knighthood, the yeomanry, the husbandmen of the county, were all represented in the crowd that gathered round the Sheriff, as, guarded by his liveried followers, he published the King's writs, announced his demand of aids, received the presentment of criminals and the inquest of the local jurors, assessed the taxation of each district, or listened solemnly to appeals for justice, civil and criminal, from all who held themselves oppressed in the lesser courts of the hundred or the soke. It was in the County Court alone that the Sheriff could legally summon the lesser baronage to attend the Great Council, and it was in the actual constitution of this assembly that the Crown found a solution of the difficulty which we have already stated.

BRASS OF SIR JOHN
 D'ABERNON, 1277.
 Macklin, "Monumental Brasses."

For the principle of representation by which it was finally solved was coeval with the Shire Court itself. In all cases of civil or criminal justice the twelve sworn assessors of the Sheriff, as members of a class, though not formally deputed for that purpose, practically represented the judicial opinion of the county at large. From every hundred came groups of twelve sworn deputies, the "jurors," through whom the presentments of the district were made to the royal officer, and with whom the assessment of its share in the general taxation was arranged. The husbandmen on the outskirts of the crowd, clad in the brown smock frock which still

SEC. 11
 THE ENGLISH
 PARLIA-MENT 1283
 TO 1295

MAN WITH BOW AND ARROWS. WOMAN WITH DISTAFF.
 Early Fourteenth Century.
MS. Roy. 2 B. vii.

lingers in the garb of our carters and ploughmen, were broken up into little knots of five, a reeve and four assistants, who formed the representatives of the rural townships. If, in fact, we regard the Shire Courts as lineally the descendants of our earliest English folk-moots, we may justly claim the principle of parliamentary representation as among the oldest of our institutions. But it was only slowly and tentatively that this principle was applied to the reconstitution of the Great Council. As early as the close of John's reign there are indications of the approaching change in the summons of "four discreet knights" from every county. Fresh need of local support was felt by both parties in the conflict of the

SEC. II
THE ENGLISH PARLIAM-ENT 1283
TO 1295 succeeding reign, and Henry and his barons alike summoned knights from each shire "to meet on the common business of the realm." It was no doubt with the same purpose that the writs of BOB-APPLE.

Early Fourteenth Century.
MS. Roy. 2 B. vii.

Earl Simon ordered the choice of knights in each shire for his famous parliament of 1265. Something like a continuous attendance may be dated from the accession of Edward, but it was long before the knights were regarded as more than local deputies for the assessment of taxation, or admitted to a share in the general business of the Great Council. The statute "Quia Emptores," for instance, was passed in it before the knights who had been summoned could attend. Their participation in the deliberative power of Parliament, as well as their regular and continuous attendance, dates only from the Parliament of 1295. But a far greater constitutional change in their position had already taken place through the extension of electoral rights to the freeholders at large. The one class entitled to a seat in the Great Council was, as we have seen, that of the lesser baronage; and of the lesser baronage alone the knights were in theory the representatives. But the necessity of holding their election in the County Court rendered any restriction of the electoral body physically impossible. The court was composed of the whole body of freeholders, and no sheriff could distinguish the "aye, aye" of the yeoman from the "aye, aye" of the lesser baron. From the first moment therefore of their attendance we find the knights regarded not as mere representatives of the baronage, but as knights of the shire, and by this silent revolution the whole body of the rural freeholders were admitted to a share in the government of the realm.

CLUB-BALL.
Early Fourteenth Century.
MS. Roy. 10 E. iv.

The financial difficulties of the Crown led to a far more radical revolution in the admission into the Great Council of representatives from the boroughs. The presence of knights from each shire

SEC. II
THE ENGLISH PARLIAM-ENT 1283
TO 1295

Representation of Boroughs

TOLL-HOUSE, GREAT YARMOUTH.
Thirteenth Century.
Journal of Archæological Association.

was, as we have seen, the recognition of an older right, but no right of attendance or share in the national "counsel and consent" could be pleaded for the burgesses of the towns. On the other hand, the rapid developement of their wealth made them every day more important as elements in the national taxation. The towns had long since freed themselves from all payment of the dues or fines exacted by the King, as the original lord of the soil on which

SEC. II
 THE ENGLISH
 PARLIA-MENT 1283
 TO 1295

they had in most cases grown up, by what was called the purchase of the "farm of the borough"; in other words, by the commutation of these uncertain dues for a fixed sum paid annually to the Crown, and apportioned by their own magistrates among the general body of the burghers. All that the King legally retained was the right enjoyed by every great proprietor of levying a corresponding taxation on his tenants in demesne under the name of "a free aid," whenever a grant was made for the national necessities by the barons of the Great Council. But the temptation of appropriating the growing wealth of the mercantile class proved stronger than legal restrictions, and we find both Henry the TOWN WALL AND TOWER, LYNN.

 Thirteenth Century.
Taylor, "History of King's Lynn."

Third and his son assuming a right of imposing taxes at pleasure and without any authority from the Council even over London itself. The burgesses could refuse indeed the invitation to contribute to the "free aid" demanded by the royal officers but the suspension of their markets or trading privileges brought them in the end to submission. Each of these "free aids," however, had to be extorted after a long wrangle between the borough and the officers of the Exchequer; and if the towns were driven to comply with what they considered an extortion, they could generally force the Crown by evasions and delays to a compromise and abatement of its original demands. The same financial reasons, therefore,

SEAL OF ROCHESTER, c. 1300.
(Obverse.)

SEAL OF ROCHESTER, c. 1300.
(Reverse.)

Collection of Society of Antiquaries.

SEC. II
 THE ENGLISH
 PARLIA-MENT 1283
 TO 1295 existed for desiring the presence of their representatives in the Great Council as existed in the case of the shires ; but it was the genius of Earl Simon which first broke through the older constitutional tradition, and dared to summon two burgesses from each town to the Parliament of 1265. Time had, indeed, to pass before the large and statesmanlike conception of the great patriot could meet with full acceptance. Through the earlier part of

OLD BRISTOL BRIDGE.
 Thirteenth Century.
Seyer, "Memorials of Bristol."

Edward's reign we find a few instances of the presence of representatives from the towns, but their scanty numbers and the irregularity of their attendance show that they were summoned rather to afford financial information to the Great Council than as representatives in it of an Estate of the Realm. But every year pleaded stronger and stronger for their inclusion, and in the Parliament of 1295 that of 1265 found itself at last reproduced. "It was from me that he learnt it," Earl Simon had cried, as he recognized the military skill of Edward's onset at Evesham ; "It

SEAL OF DOVER, A.D. 1305.
(Obverse.)

SEAL OF DOVER, A.D. 1305.
(Reverse.)
Collection of Society of Antiquaries.

SEC. II.
 —
 THE ENGLISH
 PARLIA-MENT 1283
 TO 1295

was from me that he learnt it," his spirit might have exclaimed, as he saw the King gathering at last two burgesses "from every city, borough, and leading town" within his realm to sit side by side with the knights, nobles, and barons of the Great Council. To the Crown the change was from the first an advantageous one. The grants of subsidies by the burgesses in Parliament proved more profitable than the previous extortions of the Exchequer.

The proportion of their grant generally exceeded that of the other estates by a tenth. Their representatives too proved far more compliant with the royal will than the barons or knights of the shire; only on one occasion during Edward's reign did the burgesses waver from their general support of the Crown. It was easy indeed to control them, for the selection of boroughs to be represented remained wholly in the King's hands, and their numbers could be increased or diminished at the King's pleasure. The determination was left to the sheriff, and at a hint from the royal Council a sheriff of Wilts would cut down the number of represented boroughs in his shire from eleven to three, or a sheriff of Bucks declare he could find but a single borough, that of Wycombe, within the bounds of the county. Nor was this exercise of the prerogative hampered by any anxiety on the part of the towns to claim representative privileges.

It was difficult to suspect that a power

SCEPTRE OF THE LORD MAYOR OF LONDON.

Jewitt and Hope, "Corporation Plate."

before which the Crown would have to bow lay in the ranks of soberly clad traders, summoned only to assess the contributions of their boroughs, and whose attendance was as difficult to secure as it seemed burthensome to themselves and the towns who sent them. The mass of citizens took little or no part in their choice, for they were elected in the county court by a few of the principal burghers deputed for the purpose; but the cost of their maintenance, the two shillings a day paid to the burgess by his town, as four were paid to the knight by his county, was a burthen from which the boroughs made desperate efforts to escape. Some persisted in

SEC. II
 THE ENGLISH
 PARLIA-MENT 1283
 TO 1295

FAVERSHAM MOOT HORN.
 Early Fourteenth Century.

making no return to the sheriff. Some bought charters of exemption from the troublesome privilege. Of the 165 who were summoned by Edward the First more than a third ceased to send representatives after a single compliance with the royal summons. During the whole time from the reign of Edward the Third to the reign of Henry the Sixth the sheriff of Lancashire declined to return the names of any boroughs at all within that county, "on account of their poverty." Nor were the representatives themselves more anxious to appear than their boroughs to send them. The busy country squire and the thrifty trader were equally reluctant to undergo the trouble and expense of a journey

SEC. II
 THE ENGLISH
 PARLIA-MENT 1283
 TO 1295

to Westminster. Legal measures were often necessary to ensure their presence. Writs still exist in abundance such as that by which Walter le Rous is "held to bail in eight oxen and four cart-horses to come before the King on the day specified" for attendance in Parliament. But in spite of obstacles such as these the presence of representatives from the boroughs may be regarded as continuous from the Parliament of 1295. As the representation of the lesser barons had widened through a silent change into that of the shire, so that of the boroughs—restricted in theory to those in royal demesne—seems practically from Edward's time to have been extended to all who were in a condition to pay the cost of their representatives' support. By a change as silent within the Parliament itself the burgess, originally summoned to take part only in matters of taxation, was at last admitted to a full share in the deliberations and authority of the other orders of the State.

The Early Parliaments

The admission of the burgesses and knights of the shire to the assembly of 1295 completed the fabric of our representative constitution. The Great Council of the Barons had become the Parliament of the Realm, a parliament in which every order of the state found itself represented, and took part in the grant of supplies, the work of legislation, and in the end the control of government. But though in all essential points the character of Parliament has remained the same from that time to this, there were some remarkable particulars in which this assembly of 1295 differed widely from the present Parliament at St. Stephen's. Some of these differences, such as those which sprang from the increased powers and changed relations of the different orders among themselves, we shall have occasion to consider at a later time. But a difference of a far more startling kind than these lay in the presence of the clergy. If there is any part in the Parliamentary scheme of Edward the First which can be regarded as especially his own, it is his project for the representation of the ecclesiastical order. The King had twice at least summoned its "proctors" to Great Councils before 1295, but it was then only that the complete representation of the Church was definitely organized by the insertion of a clause in the writ which summoned a bishop to Parliament requiring the personal attendance of all archdeacons, deans, or priors of cathedral churches, of a proctor for each cathedral chapter, and

Representation of the Clergy

two for the clergy within his diocese. The clause is repeated in the writs of the present day, but its practical effect was foiled almost from the first by the resolute opposition of those to whom it was addressed. What the towns failed in doing the clergy actually

SEC. II
 THE ENGLISH
 PARLIA-MENT 1283
 TO 1295

S. ETHELBERT'S GATE, NORWICH.

did. Even when forced to comply with the royal summons, as they seem to have been forced during Edward's reign, they sat jealously by themselves, and their refusal to vote supplies in any but their own provincial assemblies, or convocations, of Canterbury

SEC. II

THE ENGLISH
PARLIA-
MENT1283
TO 1295*Restriction of Parliament to WestminsterParliament the Court of Appeal*

and York left the Crown without a motive for insisting on their continued attendance. Their presence indeed, though still occasionally granted on some solemn occasions, became so pure a formality that by the end of the fifteenth century it had sunk wholly into desuetude. In their anxiety to preserve their existence as an isolated and privileged order the clergy flung away a power which, had they retained it, would have ruinously hampered the healthy development of the state. To take a single instance, it is difficult to see how the great changes of the Reformation could have been brought about had a good half of the House of Commons consisted purely of churchmen, whose numbers would have been backed by the weight of property as possessors of a third of the landed estates of the realm. A hardly less important difference may be found in the gradual restriction of the meetings of Parliament to Westminster. The names of the early statutes remind us of its convocation at the most various quarters, at Winchester, Acton Burnell, or Northampton. It was at a later time that Parliament became settled in the straggling village which had grown up in the marshy swamp of the Isle of Thorns, beside the palace whose embattled pile towered over the Thames and the great minster which was still rising in Edward's day on the site of the older church of the Confessor. It is possible that, while contributing greatly to its constitutional importance, this settlement of the Parliament may have helped to throw into the background its character as a supreme court of appeal. The proclamation by which it was called together invited "all who had any grace to demand of the King in Parliament, or any plaint to make of matters which could not be redressed or determined by ordinary course of law, or who had been in any way aggrieved by any of the King's ministers or justices or sheriffs, or their bailiffs, or any other officer, or have been unduly assessed, rated, charged, or surcharged to aids, subsidies, or taxes," to deliver their petitions to receivers who sat in the Great Hall of the Palace of Westminster. The petitions were forwarded to the King's Council, and it was probably the extension of the jurisdiction of that body, and the subsequent rise of the Court of Chancery, which reduced this ancient right of the subject to the formal election of "Triers of Petitions" at the opening of every new Parliament by the House of Lords, a usage which is still continued. But it must have been owing to some memory of the older custom that the subject always looked for redress against injuries from the Crown or its ministers to the Parliament of the realm.

SEC. III
THE CON-
QUEST OF SCOTLAND
1290
TO 1305

Section III.—The Conquest of Scotland, 1290—1305

[Authorities.—Scotland itself has no contemporary chronicles for this period: the jingling rimes of Blind Harry are two hundred years later than the death of his hero, Wallace. Those of England are meagre and inaccurate; the most important are the “Annales Angliæ et Scotiæ” and “Annales Regni Scotiæ,” Rishanger’s Chronicle, his “Gesta Edwardi Primi,” and three fragments of annals (all published in the Rolls Series). The portion of the so-called Walsingham’s History which relates to this time is now attributed by its latest editor, Mr. Riley, to Rishanger’s hand. But the main source of our information lies in the copious collection of state papers preserved in Rymer’s “Fœdera,” in the “Rotuli Scotiæ,” and in the “Documents and Records illustrative of the History of Scotland,” edited by Sir F. Palgrave. Mr. Robertson, in his “Scotland under her Early Kings,” has admirably illustrated the ages before the quarrel, and Mr. Burton in his History of Scotland has stated the quarrel itself with great accuracy and fairness. For Edward’s side see the preface of Sir F. Palgrave to the work above, and Mr. Freeman’s essay on “The Relations between the Crowns of England and Scotland.”]

The personal character of Edward the First had borne a large part in the constitutional changes which we have described, but it becomes of the highest moment during the war with Scotland which covers the latter half of his reign.

Edward
the First 1272-1307

In his own time, and amongst his own subjects, Edward was the object of almost boundless admiration. He was in the truest sense a national King. At the moment when the last trace of foreign conquest passed away, when the descendants of those who won and those who lost at Senlac blended for ever into an English people, England saw in her ruler no stranger, but an Englishman. The national tradition returned in more than the golden hair or the English name which linked him to our earlier Kings. Edward’s very temper was English to the core. In good as in evil he stands out as the typical representative of the race he ruled, like them wilful and imperious, tenacious of his rights, indomitable in his pride, dogged, stubborn, slow of apprehension, narrow in sympathy,

SEC. III
 THE CON-QUEST OF SCOTLAND
 1290
 TO 1305

but like them, too, just in the main, unselfish, laborious, conscientious, haughtily observant of truth and self-respect, temperate, reverent of duty, religious. He inherited indeed from the Angevins their fierce and passionate wrath; his punishments, when he punished in anger, were without pity; and a priest who ventured at a moment of storm into his presence with a remonstrance dropped dead from sheer fright at his feet. But for the most part his impulses were generous, trustful, averse from cruelty, prone to forgiveness. "No man ever asked mercy of me," he said in his old age, "and was refused." The rough soldierly nobleness of his nature breaks out at Falkirk, where he lay on the bare ground among his men, or in his refusal during a Welsh campaign to drink of the one cask of wine which had been saved from marauders: "It is I who have brought you into this strait," he said to his thirsty fellow-soldiers, "and I will have no advantage of you in meat or drink." A strange tenderness and sensitiveness to affection lay in fact beneath the stern imperiousness of his outer bearing. Every subject throughout his realm was drawn closer to the King who wept bitterly at the news of his father's death, though it gave him a crown; whose fiercest burst of vengeance was called out by an insult to his mother; whose crosses rose as memorials of his love and sorrow at every spot where his wife's bier rested.

ELEANOR OF CASTILE.
 From her Tomb in Westminster Abbey.

"I loved her tenderly in her lifetime," wrote Edward to Eleanor's friend, the Abbot of Cluny; "I do not cease to love her now she is dead." And as it was with mother and wife, so it was with his people at large. All the self-concentrated isolation of the earlier Angevins disappears in Edward. He was the first English king since the Conquest who loved his people with a personal love, and craved for their love back again. To his trust in them we owe our Parliament, to his care for them the great statutes which stand in the forefront of our laws. Even in his struggles with her England understood a temper which was so perfectly her own, and the quarrels between King and people during his reign are quarrels where, doggedly as they fought, neither disputant doubted for a moment the worth or affection of the other. Few scenes in our history are more touching than that which closes the long contest over the Charter, when Edward stood face to face with his people in Westminster Hall, and with a sudden burst of tears owned himself frankly in the wrong.

SEC. III
 THE CON-QUEST OF SCOTLAND
 1290
 TO 1305

But it was just this sensitiveness, this openness to outer impressions and outer influences, that led to the strange contradictions which meet us in Edward's career. Under the first king whose temper was distinctly English a foreign influence told most fatally on our manners, our literature, our national spirit. The rise of France into a compact and organized monarchy from the time of Philip Augustus was now making its influence dominant in Western Europe. The "chivalry" so familiar in Froissart, that picturesque mimicry of high sentiment, of heroism, love, and courtesy, before which all depth and reality of nobleness disappeared to make room for the coarsest profligacy, the narrowest caste-spirit, and a brutal indifference to human suffering, was specially of French creation. There was a nobleness in Edward's nature from which the baser influences of this chivalry fell away. His life was pure, his piety, save when it stooped to the superstition of the time, manly and sincere, while his high sense of duty saved him from the frivolous self-indulgence of his successors. But he was far from being wholly free from the taint of his age. His passionate desire was to be a model of the fashionable chivalry of his day. He had been famous from his very youth as a consummate general; Earl Simon had admired the skill of his advance at Evesham, and in his Welsh campaign he had shown a tenacity and force of will which wrested victory out of the midst of defeat. He could head a furious charge of horse at Lewes, or organize a commissariat which enabled him to move army after army across the harried Lowlands. In his old age he was quick to Influence of Chivalry

SEC. III
 THE CON-
 QUEST OF SCOTLAND
 1290
 TO 1305 discover the value of the English archery, and to employ it as a means of victory at Falkirk. But his fame as a general seemed a small thing to Edward when compared with his fame as a knight. He shared to the full his people's love of hard fighting. His frame, TILTING.

 Early Fourteenth Century.
MS. Roy. 10 E. iv.

indeed, was that of a born soldier—tall, deep-chested, long of limb, capable alike of endurance or action. When he encountered Adam Gurdon, a knight of gigantic size and renowned prowess, after Evesham he forced him single-handed to beg for mercy. At the opening of his reign he saved his life by sheer fighting in a tournament at Challon. It was this love of adventure which lent itself to the frivolous unreality of the new chivalry. At his "Round Table

A ROYAL BANQUET, A.D. 1338—1344.
MS. Bodl. Misc. 264.

SIR GEOFFREY LOUTRELL, HIS WIFE, AND DAUGHTER-IN-LAW.
Loutrell Psalter, c. A.D. 1340.

SEC. III
 THE CON-
 QUEST OF SCOTLAND
 1290
 TO 1305 of Kenilworth" a hundred lords and ladies, "clad all in silk," renewed the faded glories of Arthur's Court. The false air of romance which was soon to turn the gravest political resolutions into outbursts of sentimental feeling appeared in his "Vow of the Swan," when rising at the royal board he swore on the dish before him to avenge on Scotland the murder of Comyn. Chivalry exerted on him a yet more fatal influence in its narrowing of his sympathy to the noble class, and in its exclusion of the peasant and the craftsman from all claim to pity. "Knight without reproach" as he was, he looked calmly on at the massacre of the burghers of Berwick, and saw in William Wallace nothing but a common robber.

Influence
 of Legality

Hardly less powerful than the French notion of chivalry in its influence on Edward's mind was the new French conception of kingship, feudality, and law. The rise of a lawyer class was everywhere hardening customary into written rights, allegiance into subjection, loose ties such as commendation into a definite vassalage. But it was specially through French influence, the influence of St. Lewis and his successors, that the imperial theories of the Roman Law were brought to bear upon this natural tendency of the time. When the "sacred majesty" of the Cæsars was transferred by a legal fiction to the royal head of a feudal baronage, every constitutional relation was changed. The "defiance" by which a vassal renounced service to his lord became treason, his after resistance "sacrilege." That Edward could appreciate what was sound and noble in the legal spirit around him was shown in his reforms of our judicature and our Parliament; but there was something as congenial to his mind in its definiteness, its rigidity, its narrow technicalities. He was never wilfully unjust, but he was too often captious in his justice, fond of legal chicanery, prompt to take advantage of the letter of the law. The high conception of royalty which he had borrowed from St. Lewis united with this legal turn of mind in the worst acts of his reign. Of rights or liberties unregistered in charter or roll Edward would know nothing, while his own good sense was overpowered by the majesty of his crown. It was incredible to him that Scotland should revolt against a legal bargain which made her national independence conditional on the terms extorted from a claimant of her throne; nor could he view

London; Macmillan & Co. Ltd.

Stanford's Geog. Estab.

in any other light but as treason the resistance of his own baronage to an arbitrary taxation which their fathers had borne. It is in the very anomalies of such a character, in its strange union of justice and wrong-doing, of nobleness and meanness, that we must look for any fair explanation of much that has since been bitterly blamed in Edward's conduct and policy.

SEC. III
 THE CON-
 QUEST OF SCOTLAND
 1290
 TO 1305

Fairly to understand his quarrel with the Scots, we must clear our minds of the ideas which we now associate with the words 'Scotland,' or the "Scotch people." At the opening of the fourteenth century the kingdom of the Scots was composed of four districts, each of which had originally its different people, its different speech, or at least dialect, and its different history. The first of these was the Lowland district, at one time called Saxony, and which now bears the name of Lothian and the Merse (or border land), the space, roughly speaking, between the Forth and Tweed. We have seen that at the close of the English conquest of Britain the kingdom of Northumbria stretched from the Humber to the Firth of Forth, and of this kingdom the Lowlands formed simply the northern portion. The English conquest and the English colonization were as complete here as over the rest of Britain. Rivers and hills indeed retained their Celtic names, but the "tons" and "hams" scattered over the country told the story of its Teutonic settlement. Livings and Dodings left their names to Livingstone and Duddingstone; Elphinstone, Dolphinstone and Edmundstone preserved the memory of English Elphins, Dolphins, and Edmunds, who had raised their homesteads beyond the Teviot and the Tweed. To the northward and westward of this Northumbrian land lay the kingdoms of the conquered. Over the "Waste" or "Desert"—the range of barren moors which stretches from Derbyshire to the Cheviots—the Briton had sought a refuge in the long strip of coast between the Clyde and the Dee which formed the earlier Cumbria. Against this kingdom the efforts of the Northumbrian rulers had been incessantly directed; the victory of Chester had severed it from the Welsh kingdoms to the south; Lancashire, Westmoreland, and Cumberland were already subdued by the time of Ecgrith; while the fragment which was suffered to remain unconquered between the Firths of Solway and of Clyde, and to which the name of Cumbria is in its later use

Scotland

Saxony

Cumbria

SEC. III
THE CON-
QUEST OF SCOTLAND

1290
TO 1305

Pict-land

confined, owned the English supremacy. At the close of the seventh century it seemed likely that the same supremacy would extend over the Celtic tribes to the north. The district north of the Clyde and Forth was originally inhabited chiefly by the Picts, a Latin name for the people who seem to have called themselves the Cruithne. To these Highlanders the country south of the Forth was a foreign land, and significant entries in their rude chronicles tell us how in their forays "the Picts made a raid upon Saxony." But during the period of Northumbrian greatness they had begun to yield at least on their borders some kind of submission to its kings. Eadwine had built a fort at Dunedin, which became Edinburgh and looked menacingly across the Forth; and at Abercorn beside it was established an English prelate with the title of Bishop of the Picts. Ecgrith, in whose hands the power of Northumbria reached its highest point, marched across the Forth to change this over-lordship into a direct dominion, and to bring the series of English victories to a close. His host poured burning and ravaging across the Tay, and skirted the base of the Grampians as far as the field of Nectansmere, where King Bruidi awaited them at the head of the Picts. The great battle which followed proved a turning-point in the history of the North; the invaders were cut to pieces, Ecgrith himself being among the slain, and the power of Northumbria was broken for ever. On the other hand, the kingdom of the Picts started into new life with its great victory, and pushed its way in the hundred years that followed westward, eastward, and southward, till the whole country north of the Forth and the Clyde acknowledged its supremacy. But the hour of Pictish greatness was marked by the sudden extinction of the Pictish name. Centuries before, when the English invaders were beginning to harry the south coast of Britain, a fleet of coracles had borne a tribe of the Scots, as the inhabitants of Ireland were at that time called, from the black cliff-walls of Antrim to the rocky and indented coast of South Argyle. The little kingdom of Scot-land which these Irishmen founded slumbered in obscurity among the lakes and mountains to the south of Loch Linnhe, now submitting to the over-lordship of Northumbria, now to that of the Picts, till the extinction of the direct Pictish line of sovereigns raised the Scot King, Kenneth Mac-Alpin, who chanced to be their nearest kinsman, to the vacant throne. For fifty years these rulers of Scottish blood still call themselves "Kings of the Picts"; but with the opening of the tenth century the very name passes away, the tribe which had given its chief to the common throne gives its designation to the common realm, and "Pict-land" vanishes from the page of the chronicler or annalist to make way for the "land of the Scots."

EDINBURGH, FROM THE SOUTH.

Slezer, "Theatrum Scotiae," 1693.

SEC. III
 THE CON-
 QUEST OF SCOTLAND
 1290
 TO 1305

Scot-land

It was even longer before the change made way among the people itself, and the real union of the nation with its kings was only effected by the common suffering of the Danish wars. In the north, as in the south of Britain, the invasion of the Danes brought about political unity. Not only were Picts and Scots thoroughly blended into a single people, but by the annexation of Cumbria and the Lowlands, their monarchs became rulers of the territory which we now call Scotland. The annexation was owing to the new policy of the English Kings. Their aim, after the long struggle of England with the northmen, was no longer to crush the kingdom across the Forth, but to raise it into a bulwark against the northmen who were still settled in Caithness and the Orkneys, and for whose aggressions Scotland was the natural highway. On the other hand, it was only in English aid that the Scot

KING.

QUEEN.

BISHOP.

KNIGHT.

PAWN.

BONE CHESS-MEN, OF SCANDINAVIAN DESIGN.
Twelfth or Thirteenth Century.
Found in Isle of Lewis; now in British Museum.

Kings could find a support for their throne against these Norse Jarls of Orkney and Caithness. It was probably this common hostility to a common foe which brought about the "commendation" by which the Scots beyond the Forth, with the Welsh of Strath-clyde, chose the English King, Eadward the Elder, "to father and lord." The choice, whatever weight after events may have given to it, seems to have been little more than the renewal of the loose English supremacy over the tribes of the North which had existed during the times of Northumbrian greatness; it certainly implied at the time nothing save a right on either side to military aid, though the aid then rendered was necessarily placed in the hands of the stronger party to the agreement. Such a connexion naturally ceased in the event of any war between the two contracting parties; it was in fact by no means the feudal vassalage of a later time, but rather a military convention. But loose as was the tie which bound the two countries, a closer tie soon bound the Scot King himself to his English overlord. Strath-clyde, which, after the defeat of Nectansmere, had shaken off the English yoke, and which at a later time had owned the supremacy of the Scots, rose into a temporary independence only to be conquered by the English Eadmund. By him it was granted to Malcolm of Scotland on condition that he should become his "fellow-worker" both by land and sea, and became from that time the appanage of the eldest son of the Scottish king. At a later time, under Eadgar or Cnut, the whole of Northern Northumbria, or what we now call the Lothians, was ceded to the Scottish sovereigns, but whether on the same terms of feudal dependence or on the same loose terms of "commendation" as already existed for lands north of the Forth, we have no means of deciding. The retreat, however, of the bounds of the great English bishopric of the North, the see of St. Cuthbert, as far southward as the Pentland Hills, would seem to imply a greater change in the political character of the ceded district than the first theory would allow.

SEC. III
 THE CON-QUEST OF SCOTLAND
 1290
 TO 1305 924

Grant of Strath-clyde to the Scot King

Grant of Northern Northumbria

Whatever change these cessions may have brought about in the relation of the Scottish to the English Kings, they certainly affected in a very marked way their relation both to England and to their own realm. One result of the acquisition of the Lowlands was the ultimate fixing of the royal residence in their new southern

England
 and the Scot Kings

S. LUKE.

Gospel-Book of S. Margaret, Queen of Scotland; now in the Bodleian Library.

dominion at Edinburgh ; and the English civilization with which they were then surrounded changed the Scot Kings in all but blood into Englishmen. A way soon opened itself to the English crown by the marriage of Malcolm with Margaret, the sister of Eadgar Ætheling. Their children were regarded by a large party within England as representatives of the older royal race and as claimants of the throne, and this danger grew as William's devastation of the North not only drove fresh multitudes of Englishmen to settle in the

SEC. III
 THE CON-
 QUEST OF SCOTLAND
 1290
 TO 1305
 1069

S. MARGARET'S CHAPEL, EDINBURGH CASTLE.

Lowlands, but filled the Scotch court with English nobles, who fled thither for refuge. So formidable, indeed, became the pretensions of the Scot Kings, that they forced the ablest of our Norman sovereigns into a complete change of policy. The Conqueror and William the Red had met the threats of the Scot sovereigns by invasions which ended again and again in an illusory homage ; but the marriage of Henry the First with the Scottish Matilda not only robbed the claims of the Scottish line of much of their force, but enabled him to draw it into far closer relations with the Norman throne. King David not only abandoned the ambitious dreams of 1100

David 1124-1153

SEC. III
—
THE CON-QUEST OF SCOTLAND
1290
TO 1305
—

his predecessors to place himself later at the head of his niece Matilda's party in her contest with Stephen, but as Henry's brother-in-law he figured as the first noble of the English court, and found English models and English support in the work of organization which he attempted within his own dominions. As the marriage with Margaret had changed Malcolm from a Celtic

WEST DOOR OF ABERBROTHOCK ABBEY.
Built by William the Lion.

chieftain into an English King, so that of Matilda converted David into a Norman and feudal sovereign. His court was filled with Norman nobles from the South, such as the Balliols and Bruces, who were destined to play so great a part afterwards but who now for the first time obtained fiefs in the Scottish realm ; and a feudal jurisprudence modelled on that of England was introduced into the Lowlands. A fresh connexion between the countries began with the grant of lordships in England to the Scot Kings or their sons. Homage was sometimes rendered, whether for these lordships, for the Lowlands, or for the whole Scottish realm, but it was the capture of William the Lion during the revolt of the English baronage which suggested to Henry the Second the project of a closer dependence of Scotland on the English Crown. To gain his freedom, William consented to hold his crown of Henry and his heirs, the prelates and lords of the Scotch kingdom did homage to Henry as to their direct lord, and a right of appeal in all Scotch causes was allowed to the superior court of the English suzerain. From this bondage, however, Scotland was soon freed by the prodigality of Richard, who allowed her to buy back the freedom she had forfeited, and from that time the difficulties of the older claim were evaded by a legal compromise. The Scot Kings repeatedly did homage to the English sovereign, but with a reservation of rights which were prudently left unspecified. The English King accepted the homage on the assumption that it was rendered to him as overlord of the Scottish realm, and this assumption was neither granted nor denied. For nearly a hundred years the relations of the two countries were thus kept peaceful and friendly, and the death of Alexander the Third seemed destined to remove even the necessity of protests by a closer union of the two kingdoms. Alexander had wedded his only daughter to the King of Norway, and after long negotiation the Scotch Parliament proposed the marriage of her child Margaret, "the Maid of Norway," with the son of Edward the First. It was, however, carefully provided in the marriage treaty of Brigham that Scotland should remain a separate and free kingdom, and that its laws and customs should be preserved inviolate. No military aid was to be claimed by the English King, no Scotch appeal to be carried to an English court. But this project was abruptly frustrated by the child's death on her voyage to Scotland, and with the rise of claimant after claimant of the vacant throne Edward was drawn into far other relations to the Scottish realm.

SEC. III
 THE CON-QUEST OF SCOTLAND
 1290
 TO 1305 1174

1286

1290

Of the thirteen pretenders to the throne of Scotland, only three could be regarded as serious claimants. By the extinction of the line of William the Lion the right of succession passed to the daughters of his brother David. The claim of John Balliol, Lord

The First
 Conquest
 1290-1296

NEW, OR SWEETHEART ABBEY.
Founded by Dervorgilla de Balliol, 1275.

of Galloway, rested on his descent from the eldest of these ; that of Robert Bruce, Lord of Annandale, on his descent from the second ; that of John Hastings, Lord of Abergavenny, on his descent from the third. At this crisis the Norwegian King, the Primate of St. Andrew's, and seven of the Scotch Earls, had already appealed to Edward before Margaret's death ; and the death itself was followed by the consent both of the claimants and the Council of Regency to refer the question of the succession to his decision in a Parliament at Norham. But the over-lordship which the Scots acknowledged was something far less direct and definite than what Edward claimed at the opening of this conference. His claim was supported by excerpts from English monastic chronicles, and by the slow advance of an English army, while the Scotch lords, taken by surprise, found little help in the delay which was granted them, and at last, in common with nine of the claimants themselves, formally admitted Edward's direct suzerainty. To the nobles, in fact, the concession must have seemed a small one, for like the principal claimants they were for the most part Norman in blood, with estates in both countries and looking for honours and pensions from the English Court. From the Commons who were gathered with the nobles at Norham no admission of Edward's claims could be extorted ; but in Scotland, feudalized as it had been by David, the Commons were as yet of little weight, and their opposition was quietly passed by. All the rights of a feudal suzerain were at once assumed by the English King ; he entered into the possession of the country as into that of a disputed fief to be held by its over-lord till the dispute was settled, his peace was sworn throughout the land, its castles delivered into his charge, while its bishops and nobles swore homage to him directly as their lord superior. Scotland was thus reduced to the subjection which she had experienced under Henry the Second, but the full discussion which followed over the various claims to the throne showed that, while exacting to the full what he believed to be his right, Edward desired to do justice to the country itself. The commissioners whom he named to report on the claims to the throne were mainly Scotch ; a proposal for the partition of the realm among the claimants was rejected as contrary to Scotch law ; and the claim of Balliol as representative of the elder branch was finally preferred to that of his rivals.

SEC. III
 THE CON-QUEST OF SCOTLAND
 1290
 TO 1305

May, 1291

SEC. III
THE CON-
QUEST OF SCOTLAND

1290
TO 1305

The castles were at once delivered to the new monarch, and Balliol did homage to Edward with full acknowledgement of the services due to him from the realm of Scotland. For a time there was peace. Edward in fact seemed to have no desire to push farther the rights of his crown. Even allowing that Scotland was a dependent kingdom, it was far from being an ordinary fief of the English Crown. By feudal custom a distinction had always been held to exist between the relations of a dependent king to a superior lord and those of a vassal noble to his sovereign. At Balliol's homage Edward had disclaimed, in strict accordance with the marriage treaty of Brigham, any right to the ordinary

CAERLAVEROCK CASTLE.

After J. M. W. Turner.

incidents of a fief, those of wardship or marriage; but there were other customs of the realm of Scotland as incontestable as these. The Scot King had never been held bound to attend the council of the English baronage, to do service in English warfare, or to contribute on the part of his Scotch realm to English aids. No express acknowledgement of these rights had been given by Edward, but for a time they were practically observed. The claim of independent justice was more doubtful, as it was of higher import than these. It was certain that no appeal from a Scotch King's court to that of his supposed overlord had been allowed since the days of William the Lion, and the judicial independence of Scotland had been expressly reserved in the marriage treaty. But in feudal jurisprudence the right of ultimate appeal was the test of sovereignty. This right of appeal Edward now determined to enforce, and Balliol at first gave way. It was alleged, however, that the resentment of his baronage and people forced him to resist; and while appearing formally at Westminster he refused to answer an appeal save by advice of his Council. He was in fact looking to France, which, as we shall afterwards see, was jealously watching Edward's proceedings, and ready to force him into war. By a new breach of customary law Edward summoned the Scotch nobles to follow him in arms against this foreign foe. But the summons was disregarded, and a second and formal refusal of aid was followed by a secret alliance with France and by a Papal absolution of Balliol from his oath of fealty.

Edward was still reluctant to begin the war, when all hope of accommodation was ended by the refusal of Balliol to attend his Parliament at Newcastle, the rout of a small body of English troops, and the investment of Carlisle by the Scots. Orders were at once given for an advance upon Berwick. The taunts of its citizens stung the King to the quick. "Kynge Edward, waune thou havest Berwick, pike thee; waune thou havest geten, dike thee," they shouted from behind the wooden stockade, which formed the only rampart of the town. But the stockade was stormed with the loss of a single knight, and nearly eight thousand of the citizens were mown down in a ruthless carnage, while a handful of Flemish traders who held the town-hall stoutly against all assailants were burned alive in it. The massacre only ceased when a procession of priests bore the host to the King's presence, praying for mercy, and Edward with a sudden and characteristic burst of tears called off his troops; but the town was ruined for ever, and the great merchant city of the North sank from that time into a petty seaport. At Berwick Edward received Balliol's defiance. "Has the fool done this folly?" the King cried in haughty scorn. "If he will not come to us, we will come to him." The terrible slaughter, however, had done its work, and his march was a triumphal progress. Edinburgh, Stirling, and Perth opened their gates, Bruce joined the English army, and Balliol himself

SEC. III
 THE CON-QUEST OF SCOTLAND
 1290
 TO 1305
 1293

1296

SEC. III
THE CON-
QUEST OF SCOTLAND

1290
TO 1305 surrendered and passed without a blow from his throne to an English prison. No further punishment, however, was exacted from the prostrate realm. Edward simply treated it as a fief, and declared its forfeiture to be the legal consequence of Balliol's treason. It lapsed in fact to the overlord, and its earls, barons, and gentry swore homage in Parliament at Berwick to Edward as their king. The sacred stone on which its older sovereigns had been installed, an oblong block of sandstone, which legend asserted to have been the pillow of Jacob as angels ascended and descended upon him, was removed from Scone and placed in Westminster by the shrine of the Confessor. It was enclosed by Edward's order in a stately seat, which became from that hour the coronation chair of English kings.

The Second Conquest
1297-1305

To the King himself the whole business must have seemed another and easier conquest of Wales, and the mercy and just government which had followed his first success followed his second also. The government of the new dependency was entrusted to Warenne, Earl of Surrey, at the head of an English Council of Regency. Pardon was freely extended to all who had resisted the invasion, and order and public peace were rigidly enforced. But both the justice and injustice of the new rule proved fatal to it; the wrath of the Scots, already kindled by the intrusion of English priests into Scotch livings, and by the grant of lands across the border to English barons, was fanned to

THE CORONATION-CHAIR, WESTMINSTER ABBEY.

fury by the strict administration of law, and the repression of feuds and cattle-lifting. The disbanding, too, of troops, which was caused by the penury of the royal exchequer, united with the licence of the soldiery who remained to quicken the national sense of wrong. The disgraceful submission of their leaders brought the people themselves to the front. In spite of a hundred years of peace the farmer of the Lowlands and the artisan of the towns remained stout-hearted Northumbrian Englishmen; they had never consented to Edward's supremacy, and their

SEC. III
 THE CON-
 QUEST OF SCOTLAND
 1290
 TO 1305

STIRLING.
 After J. M. W. Turner.

blood rose against the insolent rule of the stranger. The genius of an outlaw knight, William Wallace, saw in their smouldering discontent a hope of freedom for his country, and his daring raids on outlying parties of the English soldiery roused the country at last into revolt. Of Wallace himself, of his life or temper, we know little or nothing; the very traditions of his gigantic stature and enormous strength are dim and unhistorical. But the instinct of the Scotch people has guided it aright in choosing Wallace for its national hero. He was the first to assert freedom as a national birthright, and amidst the despair of nobles and priests to call

SEC. III

THE CON-QUEST OF SCOTLAND

1290

TO 1305

*Battle of Stirling
Sept. 1297*

the people itself to arms. At the head of an army drawn principally from the coast districts north of the Tay, which were inhabited by a population of the same blood as that of the Lowlands, Wallace, in September, 1297, encamped near Stirling, the pass between the north and the south, and awaited the English advance. The offers of John of Warenne were scornfully rejected: "We have come," said the Scottish leader, "not to make peace, but to free our country." The position of Wallace, a rise of hills behind a loop of Forth, was in fact chosen with consummate skill. The one bridge which crossed the river was only broad enough to admit two horsemen abreast; and though the English army had been passing from daybreak, only half its force was across at noon when Wallace closed on it and cut it after a short combat to pieces in the sight of its comrades. The retreat of the Earl of Surrey over the border left Wallace head of the country he had freed, and for a time he acted as "Guardian of the Realm" in Balliol's name, and headed a wild foray into Northumberland.

His reduction of Stirling Castle at last called Edward to the field. The King, who marched northward with a larger host than had ever followed his banner, was enabled by treachery to surprise Wallace, as he fell back to avoid an engagement and to force him to battle near Falkirk. The Scotch force consisted almost wholly of foot, and Wallace drew up his spearmen in four great hollow circles or squares, the outer ranks kneeling, and the whole supported by bowmen within, while a small force of horse were drawn up as a reserve in the rear. It was the formation of Waterloo, the first appearance in our history since the day of Senlac of "that unconquerable British infantry," before which chivalry was destined to go down. For a SCOTTISH FOOT SOLDIER.

Temp. Edward I.

*Chapter House Liber A.
Public Record Office.*

moment it had all Waterloo's success. "I have brought you to the ring, hop (dance) if you can," are words of rough humour that reveal the very soul of the patriot leader, and the serried ranks answered well to his appeal. The Bishop of Durham, who led the English van, shrank wisely from the look of the squares. "Back to your mass, Bishop," shouted the reckless knights behind him, but the body of horse dashed itself vainly on the wall of spears. Terror spread through the English army, and its Welsh auxiliaries drew off in a body from the field. But the generalship of Wallace was met by that of the King. Drawing his bowmen to the front, Edward riddled the Scottish ranks with arrows, and then hurled his cavalry afresh on the wavering line. In a moment all was over, and the maddened knights rode in and out of the broken ranks, slaying without mercy. Thousands fell on the field, and Wallace himself escaped with difficulty, followed by a handful of men. But ruined as the cause of freedom seemed, his work was done. He had roused Scotland into life, and even a defeat like Falkirk left her unconquered. Edward remained master only of the ground he stood on; want of supplies forced him to retreat; and in the following year a regency of Scotch nobles under Bruce and Comyn continued the struggle for independence. Troubles at home and dangers from abroad stayed Edward's hand. The barons were pressing more and more vigorously for redress of their grievances and the heavy taxation brought about by the war. France was still menacing, and a claim advanced by Pope Boniface the Eighth, at its suggestion, to the feudal superiority over Scotland, arrested a fresh advance of the King. A quarrel, however, which broke out between Philippe le Bel and the Papacy removed all obstacles, and enabled Edward to defy Boniface and to wring from France a treaty in which Scotland was abandoned. In 1304 he resumed the work of invasion, and again the nobles flung down their arms as he marched to the North. Comyn, at the head of the Regency, acknowledged his sovereignty, and the surrender of Stirling completed the conquest of Scotland. The triumph of Edward was but the prelude to the full execution of his designs for knitting the two countries together by a clemency and wisdom which reveal the greatness of his statesmanship. A general amnesty was extended to all who had shared in the revolt. Wallace, who refused to avail himself of Edward's mercy, was captured, and condemned to death at Westminster on charges of treason,

SEC. III

THE CON-
QUEST OF SCOTLAND

1290

TO 1305

Battle of FalkirkJuly, 1298

1300

1303 sacrilege, and robbery. The head of the great patriot, crowned in mockery with a circlet of laurel, was placed upon London Bridge. But the execution of Wallace was the one blot on Edward's clemency. With a masterly boldness he entrusted the government of the country to a council of Scotch nobles, many of whom were freshly pardoned for their share in the war, and anticipated the policy of Cromwell by allotting ten representatives to Scotland in the Common Parliament of his realm. A Convocation was summoned at Perth for the election of these representatives, and a great judicial scheme which was promulgated in this assembly adopted the amended laws of King David as the base of a new legislation, and divided the country for judicial purposes into four districts, Lothian, Galloway, the Highlands, and the land between the Highlands and the Forth, at the head of each of which were placed two justiciars, the one English and the other Scotch.

Section IV.—The English Towns

[Authorities.—For the general history of London see its “Liber Albus” and “Liber Custumarum,” in the series of the Master of the Rolls; for its communal revolution, the “Liber de Antiquis Legibus,” edited by Mr. Stapleton for the Camden Society; for the rising of William Longbeard, the story in William of Newburgh. In his “Essay on English Municipal History” (1867), Mr. Thompson has given a useful account of the relations of Leicester with its Earls. A great store of documents will be found in the Charter Rolls published by the Record Commission, in Brady's work on English Boroughs, and (though rather for Parliamentary purposes) in Stephen's and Merewether's “History of Boroughs and Corporations.” But the only full and scientific examination of our early municipal history, at least on one of its sides, is to be found in the Essay prefixed by Dr. Brentano to the “Ordinances of English Gilds,” published by the Early English Text Society.]

From scenes such as we have been describing, from the wrong and bloodshed of foreign conquest, we pass to the peaceful life and progress of England itself.

Through the reign of the three Edwards two revolutions, which have been almost ignored by our historians, were silently changing the whole character of English society. The first of these, the rise of a new class of tenant-farmers, we shall have to notice hereafter in its connection with the great agrarian revolt which bears the name of Wat Tyler. The second, the rise of the craftsmen within our towns, and the struggle by which they won power and privilege from the older burghers, is the most remarkable event in the period of our national history at which we have arrived.

SEC. IV
THE ENGLISH
TOWNS

The English borough was originally a mere township or group of townships whose inhabitants happened, either for purposes of trade or protection, to cluster together more thickly than elsewhere. It is this characteristic of our boroughs which separates them at once from the cities of Italy and Provence, which had preserved the municipal institutions of their Roman past, from the German towns

The Early English Boroughs

founded by Henry the Fowler with the special purpose of sheltering industry from the feudal oppression around them, or from the communes of northern France which sprang into existence in revolt against feudal outrage within their walls. But in England the tradition of Rome had utterly passed away, while feudal oppression was held fairly in check by the Crown. The English town, therefore, was in its beginning simply a piece of the general country, organized and governed precisely in the same manner as the townships around it. The burh or borough was probably a more defensible place than the common village; it may have had a ditch or mound about it instead of the quickset-hedge or "tun" from which the township took its name. But its constitution was simply that of the people at large. The obligations of the dwellers within its bounds were those of the townships round, to keep fence

FELLING A TREE.
Probably drawn by Matthew Paris.
MS. Cott. Nero D. i.

while feudal oppression was held fairly in check by the Crown. The English town, therefore, was in its beginning simply a piece of the general country, organized and governed precisely in the same manner as the townships around it. The burh or borough was probably a more defensible place than the common village; it may have had a ditch or mound about it instead of the quickset-hedge or "tun" from which the township took its name. But its constitution was simply that of the people at large. The obligations of the dwellers within its bounds were those of the townships round, to keep fence

SEC. IV
THE ENGLISH TOWNS

and trench in good repair, to send a contingent to the fyrd, and a reeve and four men to the hundred court and shire court; and the inner rule of the borough lay as in the townships about in the hands of its own freemen, gathered in "boroughmoot" or "portmannimote." But the social change brought about by the Danish wars, the legal requirement that each man should have a lord, affected the towns, as it affected the rest of the country. Some passed into the hands of great thegns near to them; the bulk became known as in the demesne of the king. A new officer, the lord's or king's reeve, was a sign of this revolution. It was the reeve who now summoned the borough-moot and administered justice in it; it was he who collected the lord's dues or annual rent of the town, and who exacted the services it owed to its WINDMILL, A.D. 1338—1344.

MS. Bodl. Misc. 264.

lord. To modern eyes these services would imply almost complete subjection. When Leicester, for instance, passed from the hands of the Conqueror into those of its Earls, its townsmen were bound to reap their lord's corn-crops, to grind at his mill, to redeem their strayed cattle from his pound. The great forest around was the Earl's, and it was only out of his grace that the little borough could drive its swine into the woods or pasture its cattle in the glades. The justice and government of the town lay wholly in its master's hands; he appointed its bailiffs, received the fines and forfeitures of his tenants, and the fees and tolls of their markets and fairs. But when once these dues were paid and these services rendered the English townsman was practically free. His rights were as rigidly defined by custom as those of his lord. Property and person alike were secured against arbitrary seizure. He could demand a fair trial on any charge, and even if justice was administered by his master's reeve it was administered in the presence and with the assent of his fellow-townsmen. The bell which swung out from the town tower gathered the burgesses to a common meeting, where they could exercise rights of free speech and free deliberation on their own affairs. Their merchant-gild over its ale-feast regulated trade, distributed the sums due from the town among the different burgesses, looked to the due repairs of gate and wall, and acted, in fact, pretty much the same part as a town-council of to-day. Not only, too, were these rights secured by custom from the first, but they were constantly widening as time went on. Whenever we get a glimpse of the inner history of an English town, we find the same peaceful revolution in progress, services disappearing through disuse or omission, while privileges and immunities are being purchased in hard cash. The lord of the town, whether he were king, baron, or abbot, was commonly thriftless or poor, and the capture of a noble, or the campaign of a sovereign, or the building of some new minster by a prior, brought about an appeal to the thrifty burghers, who were ready to fill again their master's treasury at the price of the strip of parchment which gave them freedom of trade, of justice, and of government. Sometimes a chance story lights up for us this work of emancipation. At Leicester one of the chief aims of its burgesses was to regain their old English trial by compurgation, the rough predecessor of trial by jury, which had been abolished by the Earls in favour of the foreign trial by battle. "It chanced," says a charter of the place, "that two kinsmen, Nicholas the son of Acon, and Geoffrey the son of Nicholas, waged a duel about a certain piece of land, concerning which a dispute had arisen between them; and they fought from the first to the ninth hour, each conquering by turns. Then one of them fleeing from the other till he came to a certain little pit, as he stood on the brink of the pit, and was about to fall therein, his kinsman said to him 'Take care of the pit, turn back lest thou shouldest fall into it.' Thereat so much clamour and noise was made by the bystanders and those who were sitting around, that the Earl heard these clamours as far off as the castle, and he inquired of some how it was there was such a clamour, and answer was made to him that two kinsmen were fighting about a certain piece of ground, and

SEC. IV
THE ENGLISH TOWNS

that one had fled till he reached a certain little pit, and that as he stood over the pit and was about to fall into it the other warned him. Then the townsmen being moved with pity made a covenant with the Earl that they should give him threepence yearly for each house in the High Street that had a gable, on condition that he should grant to them that the twenty-four jurors who were in Leicester from ancient times should from that time forward discuss and decide all pleas they might have among themselves." For the most part the liberties of our towns were bought in this way, by

TRIAL BY BATTLE.

Assize Roll, temp. Hen. III., in Public Record Office.

sheer hard bargaining. The earliest English charters, save that of London, date from the years when the treasury of Henry the First was drained by his Norman wars; and grants of municipal liberty made professedly by the Angevins are probably the result of their costly employment of mercenary troops. At the close, however, of the thirteenth century, this struggle for emancipation was nearly over. The larger towns had secured the administration of justice in their own borough-courts, the privilege of self-government, and the control of their own trade, and their liberties and charters served as models and incentives to the smaller communities which were struggling into life.

The Frith-Gilds

During the progress of this outer revolution, the inner life of the English town was in the same quiet and hardly conscious way developing itself from the common form of the life around it into a form especially its own. Within as without the ditch or stockade which formed the earliest boundary of the borough, land was from the first the test of freedom, and the possession of land was what constituted the townsman. We may take, perhaps, a foreign instance to illustrate this fundamental point in our municipal history. When Duke Berthold of Zähringen resolved to found Freiburg, his "free town," in the Brisgau, the mode he adopted was to gather a group of traders together, and to give each man a plot of ground for his freehold round what was destined to be the market-place of the new community. In England the landless man who dwelled in a borough had no share in its corporate life; for purposes of government or property the town was simply an association of the landed proprietors within its bounds; nor was there anything in this association, as it originally existed, which could be considered peculiar or exceptional. The constitution of the English town, however different its form may have afterwards become, was at first simply that of the people at large. We have seen that among the German races society rested on the basis of the family, that it was the family who fought and settled side by side, and the kinsfolk who were bound together in ties of mutual responsibility to each other and to the law. As society became more complex and less stationary it necessarily outgrew these simple ties of blood, and in England this dissolution of the family bond seems to have taken place at the very time when Danish incursions and the growth of a feudal temper among the nobles rendered an isolated existence most perilous for the freeman. His only resource was to seek protection among his fellow-freemen, and to replace the older brotherhood of the kinsfolk by a voluntary association of his neighbours for the same purposes of order and self-defence. The tendency to unite in such 'frith-gilds' or peace-clubs became general throughout Europe during the ninth and tenth centuries, but on the Continent it was roughly met and repressed. The successors of Charles the Great enacted penalties of scourging, nose-slitting, and banishment against voluntary unions, and even a league of the poor peasants of Gaul against the inroads of the northmen was suppressed by the swords of the Frankish nobles. In England the attitude of the Kings was utterly different. The system known at a later time as 'frank-pledge,' or free

SEC. IV
 THE ENGLISH TOWNS

engagement of neighbour for neighbour, was accepted after the Danish wars as the base of social order. Ælfred recognized the common responsibility of the members of the 'frith-gild' side by side with that of the kinsfolk, and Æthelstan accepted 'frith-gilds' as a constituent element of borough life in the Dooms of London.

The Merchant Guilds

The frith-gild, then, in the earlier English town, was precisely similar to the frith-gilds which formed the basis of social order in the country at large. An oath of mutual fidelity among its members was substituted for the tie of blood, while the gild-feast, held once a month in the common hall, replaced the gathering of the kinsfolk round their family hearth. But within this new family the aim of the frith-gild was to establish a mutual responsibility as close as that of the old. "Let all share the same lot," ran its law; "if any misdo, let all bear it." A member could look for aid from his gild-brothers in atoning for any guilt incurred by mishap. He could call on them for assistance in case of violence or wrong: if falsely accused, they appeared in court as his compurgators; if poor they supported, and when dead they buried him. On the other hand, he was responsible to them, as they were to the State, for order and obedience to the laws. A wrong of brother against brother was also a wrong against the general body of the gild, and was punished by fine, or in the last resort by expulsion, which left the offender a 'lawless' man and an outcast. The one difference between these gilds in country and town was, that in the SEAL OF EXETER, c. 1170.

 Giving view of Guildhall.
Collection of Society of Antiquaries.

latter case, from their close local neighbourhood, they tended inevitably to coalesce. Under Æthelstan the London gilds united into

HALL OF S. MARY'S GILD, LINCOLN (FRONT).

HALL OF S. MARY'S GILD, LINCOLN (SIDE).
Twelfth Century.

SEC. IV
 THE ENGLISH TOWNS

one for the purpose of carrying out more effectually their common aims, and at a later time we find the gilds of Berwick enacting "that where many bodies are found side by side in one place they may become one, and have one will, and in the dealings of one with another have a strong and hearty love." The process was probably a long and difficult one, for the brotherhoods naturally differed much in social rank, and even after the union was effected we see traces of the separate existence to a certain extent of some one or more of the wealthier or more aristocratic gilds. In London, for instance, the Cnihten-gild, which seems to have stood at the head of its fellows, retained for a long time its separate property, while its Alderman—as the chief officer of each gild was called—became the Alderman of the united gild of the whole city. In Canterbury we find a similar gild of thegns, from which the chief officers of the town seem commonly to have been selected. Imperfect, however, as the union might be, when once it was effected the town passed from a mere collection of brotherhoods into a powerful and organized community, whose character was inevitably determined by the circumstances of its origin. In their beginnings our boroughs seem to have been mainly gatherings of persons engaged in agricultural pursuits; the first Dooms of London provide especially for the recovery of cattle belonging to the citizens. But as the increasing security of the country invited the farmer or the squire to settle apart in his own fields, and the growth of estate and trade told on the towns themselves, the difference between town and country became more sharply defined. London, of course, took the lead in this new development of civic life. Even in Æthelstan's day every

SEAL OF GILD MERCHANT, GLOUCESTER, c. 1200.
Engraving lent by Mr. W. H. St. John Hope.

London merchant who had made three long voyages on his own account ranked as a thegn. Its 'lithsmen,' or shipmen's-gild, were of sufficient importance under Harthacnut to figure in the election of a king, and its principal street still tells of the rapid growth of trade, in the name of 'Cheap-side,' or the bargaining place. But at the Norman Conquest the commercial tendency had become universal. The name given to the united brotherhood is in almost every case no longer that of the 'town-gild,' but of the 'merchant-gild.'

This social change in the character of the townsmen produced important results in the character of their municipal institutions.

A BAKER AT HIS OVEN-DOOR, AND A BAKER DRAWN TO THE PILLORY WITH A SHORT-WEIGHT LOAF TIED TO HIS NECK.

Assisa Panis, 21 Ed. I. (Corporation of London).

In becoming a merchant-gild the body of citizens who formed the 'town' enlarged their powers of civic legislation by applying them

SEC. IV
THE ENGLISH TOWNS

to the control of their internal trade. It became their special business to obtain from the Crown, or from their lords, wider commercial privileges, rights of coinage, grants of fairs, and exemption from tolls; while within the town itself they framed regulations

BAKERS AND COOKS, A.D. 1338—1344.
MS. Bodl. Misc. 264.

as to the sale and quality of goods, the control of markets, and the recovery of debts. A yet more important result sprang from the increase of population which the growth of wealth and industry brought with it. The mass of the new settlers, composed as they TAVERN, A.D. 1338—1344.

MS. Bodl. Misc. 264.

were of escaped serfs, of traders without landed holdings, of families who had lost their original lot in the borough, and generally of the artisans and the poor, had no part in the actual life of the town. The right of trade and of the regulation of trade, in common with all other forms of jurisdiction, lay wholly in the hands of the landed burghers whom we have described. By a natural process, too, their

SEC. IV
—
THE ENGLISH TOWNS
—

VINTNERS, A.D. 1338—1344.
MS. Bodl. Misc. 264.

superiority in wealth produced a fresh division between the 'burghers' of the merchant-gild and the unenfranchised mass around them. The same change which severed at Florence the seven Greater Arts, or trades, from the fourteen Lesser Arts, and which raised the three occupations of banking, the manufacture and the dyeing of cloth, to a position of superiority even within IRON WORKERS, A.D. 1338—1344.

MS. Bodl. Misc. 264.

the privileged circle of the seven, told, though with less force, on the English boroughs. The burghers of the merchant-gild gradually concentrated themselves on the greater operations of commerce, on trades which required a larger capital, while the meaner employments of general traffic were abandoned to their poorer neighbours.

SEC. IV
 THE ENGLISH
 TOWNS

This advance in the division of labour is marked by such severances as we note in the thirteenth century of the cloth merchant from the tailor, or the leather merchant from the butcher. But the result of this severance was all-important in its influence on the ARMOURERS, A.D. 1338—1344.

MS. Bodl. Misc. 264.

constitution of our towns. The members of the trades thus abandoned by the wealthier burghers formed themselves into Craft-gilds, which soon rose into dangerous rivalry with the original Merchant-gild of the town. A seven years' apprenticeship formed the necessary prelude to full membership of any trade-gild. Their regulations were of the minutest character; the quality and value of work was rigidly prescribed, the hours of toil fixed "from day-break to curfew," and strict provision made against competition in labour. At each meeting of these gilds their members gathered WEIGHING AND LADING, A.D. 1338—1344.

MS. Bodl. Misc. 264.

round the Craft-box, which contained the rules of their society, and stood with bared heads as it was opened. The warden and a quorum of gild-brothers formed a court which enforced the ordinances of the gild, inspected all work done by its members, confiscated unlawful tools or unworthy goods; and disobedience to their orders was punished by fines, or in the last resort by expulsion which involved the loss of right to trade. A common fund was raised by contributions among the members, which not only provided for the trade objects of the gild, but sufficed to found chantries and masses, and set up painted windows in the church of their patron saint. Even at the present day the arms of the craft-gild may often be seen blazoned in cathedrals side by side with those of prelates and of kings. But it was only by slow degrees that they rose to such a height as this. The first steps in their existence were the most difficult, for to enable a trade-gild to carry out its objects with any success, it was first necessary that the whole body of craftsmen belonging to the trade should be compelled to belong to it, and secondly, that a legal control over the trade itself should be secured to it. A royal charter was indispensable for these purposes, and over the grant of these charters took place the first struggle with the merchant-gild, which had till then solely exercised jurisdiction over trade within the boroughs. The weavers, who were the first trade-gild to secure royal sanction in the reign of Henry the First, were still engaged in the contest for existence as late as the reign of John, when the citizens of London bought for a time the suppression of their gild. Even under the house of Lancaster, Exeter was engaged in resisting the establishment of a tailors' gild. From the eleventh century, however, the spread of these societies went steadily on, and the control of trade passed from the merchant-gilds to the craft-gilds.

WINDLASS.
 Early Fourteenth Century.
MS. Roy. 10 E. iv.

It is this struggle, to use the technical terms of the time, of the "greater folk" against the "lesser folk," or of the "commune," the

SEC. IV
THE ENGLISH TOWNS

The Greater
and Lesser Folk

general mass of the inhabitants, against the "prudhommes," or "wiser" few, which brought about, as it passed from the regulation of trade to the general government of the town, the great civic revolution of the thirteenth and fourteenth centuries. On the Continent, and especially along the Rhine, the struggle was as fierce as the supremacy of the older burghers had been complete.

MONEY-BOX OF CORDWAINERS OF OXFORD.

Archeological Journal.

In Köln the craftsmen had been reduced to all but serfage, and the merchant of Brussels might box at his will the ears of "the man without heart or honour who lives by his toil." Such social tyranny of class over class brought a century of bloodshed to the cities of Germany; but in England the tyranny of class over class had been restrained by the general tenor of the law, and the revolution took for the most part a milder form. The longest and bitterest strife of all was naturally at London. Nowhere had the territorial constitution struck root so deeply, and nowhere had the landed oligarchy risen to such a height of wealth and influence. The city was divided into wards, each of which was governed by an alderman drawn from the ruling class. In some, indeed, the office seems to have become hereditary. The "magnates," or "barons," of the merchant-gild advised alone on all matters of civic government or trade regulation, and distributed or assessed at their will the revenues or burthens of the town. Such a position afforded an opening for corruption and oppression of the most galling kind; and it seems to have been the general impression of the unfair assessment levied on the poor, and the undue burthens which were thrown on the unenfranchised classes, which provoked the first serious discontent. William of the Long Beard, himself one of the governing body, placed himself at the head of a conspiracy which numbered, in the terrified fancy of the burghers, fifty thousand of the craftsmen. His eloquence, his bold defiance of the aldermen in the town-mote, gained him at any rate a wide popularity, and the crowds who surrounded him hailed him as "the saviour of the poor." One of his addresses is luckily preserved to us by a hearer of the time. In mediæval fashion he began with a text from the Vulgate, "Ye shall draw water with joy from the fountain of the Saviour." "I," he began, "am the saviour of the poor. Ye poor men who have felt the weight of rich men's hands, draw from my fountain waters of wholesome instruction and that with joy, for the time of your visitation is at hand. For I will divide the waters from the waters. It is the people who are the waters, and I will divide the lowly and faithful folk from the proud and faithless folk; I will part the chosen from the reprobate as light from darkness." But it was in vain that by appeals to the King he strove to win royal favour for the popular cause. The support of the moneyed classes was essential to Richard in the costly wars with Philip of France, and the Justiciar, Archbishop Hubert, after a moment of hesitation, issued orders for his arrest. William felled with an axe the first soldier who advanced to seize him, and taking refuge with a few followers in the tower of St. Mary-le-Bow, summoned his adherents to rise. Hubert, however, who had already flooded the city with troops, with bold contempt of the right of sanctuary, set fire to the tower and forced William to surrender. A burgher's son, whose father he had slain, stabbed him as he came forth, and with his death the quarrel slumbered for more than fifty years.

No further movement, in fact, took place till the outbreak of the Barons' war, but the city had all through the interval been seething with discontent; the unenfranchised craftsmen, under pretext of preserving the peace, had united in secret frith-gilds of their own, and mobs rose from time to time to sack the houses of foreigners and the wealthier burghers. But it was not till the civil war began that the open contest recommenced. The craftsmen forced their way into the town-mote, and setting aside the aldermen and magnates, chose Thomas Fitz-Thomas for their mayor. Although dissension still raged during the reign of the second Edward, we may regard this election as marking the final victory of the craft-gilds. Under his successor all contest seems to have ceased: charters had been granted to every trade, their ordinances formally

The Commune

1261

ENTRANCE TO CHOIR OF OLD S. PAUL'S.

CHURCH OF S. FAITH UNDER S. PAUL'S.

Engravings by W. Hollar, 1657.

recognized and enrolled in the mayor's court, and distinctive liveries assumed to which they owed the name of "Livery Companies" which they still retain. The wealthier citizens, who found their old power broken, regained influence by enrolling themselves as members of the trade-gilds, and Edward the Third himself humoured the current of civic feeling by becoming a member of the gild of Armourers. This event marks the time when the government of our towns had become more really popular than it ever again became till the Municipal Reform Act of our own days. It had passed from the hands of an oligarchy into those of the middle classes, and there was nothing as yet to foretell the reactionary revolution by which the trade-gilds themselves became an oligarchy as narrow as that which they had deposed.

SEC. IV
THE ENGLISH TOWNS

WEST FRONT OF S. PAUL'S.
Early Fourteenth Century.
MS. Lambeth, 1106.

Section V.—The King and the Baronage, 1290—1327

[Authorities.—For Edward I. as before. For Edward II. we have three important contemporaries : on the King's side, Thomas de la More (in Camden, "Anglica, Brittanica, etc."); on that of the Barons, Trokelowe's Annals (published by the Master of the Rolls), and the Life by a monk of Malmesbury, printed by Hearne. The short Chronicle by Murimuth is also contemporary in date. Hallam ("Middle Ages") has illustrated the constitutional aspect of the time.]

If we turn again to the constitutional history of England from the accession of Edward the First we find a progress not less real but chequered with darker vicissitudes than the progress of our towns. A great transfer of power had been brought about by the long struggle for the Charter, by the reforms of Earl Simon, and by the earlier legislation of Edward himself. His conception of kingship indeed was that of a just and religious Henry the Second, but his England was as different from the England of Henry as under Edward I

England

SEC. V
 THE KING
 AND THE BARONAGE
 1290
 TO 1327 the Parliament of the one was different from the Great Council of the other. In the rough rimes of Robert of Gloucester we read the simple political creed of the people at large.

“When the land through God’s grace to good peace was brought
 For to have the old laws the high men turned their thought :
 For to have, as we said erst, the good old Law,
 The King made his charter and granted it with sawe.”

OPENING OF THE CONFESSOR'S TOMB,
MS. Camb. Univ. Libr. Ee. iii. 59. c. 1245.

But the power which the Charter had wrested from the Crown fell not to the people but to the Baronage. The farmer and the artisan, though they could fight in some great crisis for freedom, had as yet no wish to interfere in the common task of government. The vast industrial change in both town and country, which had begun during the reign of Henry the Third, and which continued with increasing force during that of his son, absorbed the energy

VENICE A. D. 1338

From a manuscript in the Bodleian Library and attention of the trading classes. In agriculture, the inclosure of common lands and the introduction of the system of leases on the part of the great proprietors, coupled with the subdivision of estates which was facilitated by Edward's legislation, was gradually creating out of the masses of rural bondsmen a new class of tenant farmers, whose whole energy was absorbed in their own great rise to social freedom. The very causes which rendered the growth of municipal liberty so difficult, increased the wealth of the towns. To the trade with Norway and the Hanse towns of North Germany, the wool trade with Flanders, and the wine trade with

SEC. V
 THE KING
 AND THE BARONAGE
 1290
 TO 1327

IRON SCREEN ON TOMB OF ELEANOR OF CASTILE, IN WESTMINSTER ABBEY.
 Wrought by Thomas of Leighton, A.D. 1293.

Gascony, was now added a fast increasing commerce with Italy and Spain. The great Venetian merchant galleys appeared on the English coast, Florentine traders settled in the southern ports, the bankers of Florence and Lucca followed those of Cahors, who had already dealt a death-blow to the usury of the Jews. But the wealth and industrial energy of the country was shown, not only in the rise of a capitalist class, but in a crowd of civil and ecclesiastical buildings which distinguished this period. Christian architecture reached its highest beauty in the opening of Edward's reign, a period marked by the completion of the abbey church of West-

SEC. V
 THE KING
 AND THE BARONAGE
 1290
 TO 1327

minster and the exquisite cathedral church at Salisbury. An English noble was proud to be styled "an incomparable builder," while some traces of the art which was rising across the Alps perhaps flowed in with the Italian ecclesiastics whom the Papacy was forcing on the English Church. In the abbey of Westminster the shrine of the Confessor, the mosaic pavement, and the paintings on the walls of minster and chapter-house, remind us of the schools which were springing up under Giotto and the Pisans.

BRIDGE OVER THE ESK AT DANBY IN CLEVELAND.
 Late in the Fourteenth Century.

The Baronage
 and its Rule

But even had this industrial distraction been wanting the trading classes had no mind to claim any direct part in the actual work of government. It was a work which, in default of the Crown, fell naturally, according to the ideas of the time, to the Baronage. Constitutionally the position of the English nobles had now become established. A King could no longer make laws or levy taxes or even make war without their assent. And in the Baronage the nation reposed an unwavering trust. The nobles of England were no more the brutal foreigners from whose violence the strong hand of a Norman ruler had been needed to protect his subjects ; they were as English as the peasant or the trader. They had won English liberty by their swords, and the tradition of their order bound them to look on themselves as its natural guardians. At the close of the Barons' war, the problem which had so long troubled the realm, the problem of how to ensure its government in accordance with the Charter, was solved by the transfer of the business of administration into the hands of a standing committee of the greater prelates and barons, acting as chief officers of state in conjunction with specially appointed ministers of the Crown. The body thus composed was known as the Continual Council ; and the quiet government of the kingdom by the Council in the long interval between the death of Henry the Third and his son's return shows how effective this rule of the nobles was. It is significant of the new relation which they were to strive to establish between themselves and the Crown that in the brief which announced Edward's accession the Council asserted that the new monarch mounted his throne "by the will of the peers." The very form indeed of the new Parliament, in which the barons were backed by the knights of the shire, elected for the most part under their influence, and by the representatives of the towns, still true to the traditions of the Barons' war ; the increased frequency of these Parliamentary assemblies which gave opportunity for counsel, for party organization, and a distinct political base of action ; above all, the new financial power which their control over taxation enabled them to exert on the throne, ultimately placed the rule of the nobles on a basis too strong to be shaken by the utmost efforts of even Edward himself.

From the first the King struggled fruitlessly against this overpowering influence ; and his sympathies must have been stirred by the revolution on the other side of the Channel, where the French kings were crushing the power of the feudal baronage, and erecting a royal despotism on its ruins. Edward watched jealously over the ground which the Crown had already gained against the nobles. Following the policy of Henry II., at the very outset of his reign he instituted a commission of enquiry into the judicial franchises still existing, and on its report itinerant justices were sent to discover by what right these franchises were held. The

SEC. V
THE KING
AND THE BARONAGE
1290
TO 1327

Law and the Baronage

SEC. V
 THE KING
 AND THE BARONAGE
 1290
 TO 1327

1278

writs of "quo warranto" were roughly met here and there. Earl Warenne bared a rusty sword, and flung it on the justices' table. "This, sirs," he said, "is my warrant. By the sword our fathers won their lands when they came over with the Conqueror, and by the sword we will keep them." But the King was far from limiting himself to the plans of Henry II.; he aimed further at neutralizing the power of the nobles by raising the whole body of landowners to the same level; and a royal writ ordered all freeholders who held land of the value of twenty pounds to receive knighthood at the King's hands. While the political influence of the baronage as a leading element in the nation mounted, in fact, the personal and purely feudal power of each individual on his estates as

CART, A. D. 1338—1344.
MS. Bodl. Misc. 264.

steadily fell. The hold which the Crown had gained on every noble family by its rights of wardship and marriage, the circuits of the royal judges, the ever narrowing bounds within which baronial justice was circumscribed, the blow dealt by scutage at their military power, the prompt intervention of the Council in their feuds, lowered the nobles more and more to the level of their fellow subjects. Much yet remained to be done. Different as the English baronage, taken as a whole, was from a feudal noblesse like that of Germany or France, there is in every military class a natural drift towards violence and lawlessness, which even the stern justice of Edward found it difficult to repress. Throughout his reign his strong hand was needed to enforce order on warring nobles. Great earls, such as those of Gloucester and Hereford, carried on private war ; in Shropshire the Earl of Arundel waged his feud with Fulk Fitz Warine. To the lesser and poorer nobles the wealth of the trader, the long wain of goods as it passed along the highway, was a tempting prey. Once, under cover of a mock tournament of monks against canons, a band of country gentlemen succeeded in introducing themselves into the great merchant fair at Boston ; at nightfall every booth was on fire, the merchants robbed and slaughtered, and the booty carried off to ships which lay ready at the quay. Streams of gold and silver, ran the tale of popular horror, flowed melted down the gutters to the sea ; " all the money in England could hardly make good the loss." Even at the close of Edward's reign lawless bands of " trail-bastons," or

SEC. V
 THE KING
 AND THE BARONAGE
 1290
 TO 1327

CART, A.D. 1338—1344.
MS. Bodl. Misc. 264.

club-men, maintained themselves by general outrage, aided the country nobles in their feuds, and wrested money and goods by threats from the great tradesmen. The King was strong enough to fine and imprison the Earls, to hang the chief of the Boston marauders, and to suppress the outlaws by rigorous commissions. During Edward's absence of three years from the realm, the judges, who were themselves drawn from the lesser baronage, were charged with violence and corruption. After a careful investigation the judicial abuses were recognized and amended ; two of the chief justices were banished from the country, and their colleagues imprisoned and fined.

1286—1289

The next year saw a step which remains the great blot upon Edward's reign. Under the Angevins the popular hatred of the

Edward
 and the Jews

SEC. V
 THE KING
 AND THE BARONAGE
 1290
 TO 1327

Jews had grown rapidly in intensity. But the royal protection had never wavered. Henry the Second had granted them the right of burial outside of every city where they dwelt. Richard had punished heavily a massacre of the Jews at York, and organized a

SATIRE ON THE JEWS OF NORWICH.
Jews' Roll, 17 Hen. III., Public Record Office.

mixed court of Jews and Christians for the registration of their contracts. John suffered none to plunder them save himself, though he once wrested from them a sum equal to a year's revenue of his realm. The troubles of the next reign brought in a harvest greater than even the royal greed could reap; the Jews grew wealthy enough to acquire estates, and only a burst of popular feeling prevented a legal decision which would have enabled them to own freeholds. Their pride and contempt of the CHURCH IN LONDON FOR CONVERTED JEWS.

 Built by Henry III. Drawn by Matthew Paris.
MS. Roy. 14 C. vii.

superstitions around them broke out in the taunts they levelled at processions as they passed their Jewries, sometimes as at Oxford in actual attacks upon them. Wild stories floated about among the people of children carried off to Jewish houses, to be circumcised or crucified, and a boy of Lincoln who was found slain in a Jewish house was canonized by popular reverence as "St. Hugh." The first work of the Friars was to settle in the Hebrew quarters and attempt their conversion, but the tide of popular fury rose too fast for these gentler means of reconciliation. When the Franciscans saved seventy Jews from death by their prayers to Henry the Third the populace angrily refused

AARON OF COLCHESTER.
Forest Roll, Essex, 5 Ed. 1.
Public Record Office.

the brethren alms. The sack of Jewry after Jewry was the sign of popular hatred during the Barons' war. With its close, fell on the Jews the more terrible persecution of the law. Statute after statute hemmed them in. They were forbidden to hold real property, to employ Christian servants, to move through the streets without the two white tablets of wool on their breasts which distinguished their race. They were prohibited from building new synagogues, or eating with Christians, or acting as physicians to them. Their trade, already crippled by the rivalry of the bankers of Cahors, was annihilated by a royal order, which bade them renounce usury under pain of death. At last persecution could do no more, and on the eve of his struggle with Scotland, Edward, eager at the moment to find supplies for his treasury, and himself swayed by the fanaticism of his subjects, bought the grant of a fifteenth from clergy and laity by consenting to drive the Jews from his realm. Of the sixteen thousand who preferred exile to apostasy few reached the shores of France. Many were wrecked, others robbed and flung overboard. One shipmaster turned out a crew of wealthy merchants on to a sandbank, and bade them call a new Moses to save them from the sea. From the time of Edward to that of Cromwell no Jew touched English ground.

No share in the enormities which accompanied the expulsion of the Jews can fall upon Edward, for he not only suffered the

SEC. V
THE KING
AND THE BARONAGE
1290
TO 1327

1290

Edward
and the Baronage

SEC. V
 THE KING
 AND THE BARONAGE
 1290
 TO 1327
 —

fugitives to take their wealth with them, but punished with the halter those who plundered them at sea. But the expulsion was none the less cruel, and the grant of a fifteenth made by the grateful Parliament proved but a poor substitute for the loss which the royal treasury had sustained. The Scotch war more than exhausted the aids granted by the Parliament. The treasury was utterly drained; the costly fight with the French in Gascony called for supplies, while the King was planning a yet costlier attack on northern France with the aid of Flanders. It was sheer want which drove Edward to tyrannous extortion. His first blow fell on the Church; he had already demanded half their annual income from the clergy, and so terrible was his wrath at their resistance, that the Dean of St. Paul's, who had stood forth to remonstrate, dropped dead of sheer terror at his feet. "If any oppose the King's demand," said a royal envoy, in the midst of the Convocation, "let him stand up that he may be noted as an enemy to the King's peace." The outraged churchmen fell back on an untenable plea that their aid was due solely to Rome, and pleaded a bull of exemption, issued by Pope Boniface VIII., as a ground for refusing to comply with further taxation. Edward met their refusal by a general outlawry of the whole order. The King's courts were closed, and all justice denied to those who refused the King aid. By their actual plea the clergy had put themselves formally in the wrong, and the outlawry soon forced them to submission, but their aid did little to recruit the exhausted treasury, while the pressure of the war steadily increased. Far wider measures of arbitrary taxation were needful to equip an expedition which Edward prepared to lead in person to Flanders. The country gentlemen were compelled to take up knighthood, or to compound for exemption from the burthensome honour. Forced contributions of cattle and corn were demanded from the counties, and the export duty on wool—now the staple produce of the country—was raised to six times its former amount. Though he infringed no positive charter or statute, the work of the Great Charter and the Barons' war seemed suddenly to have been undone. But the blow had no sooner been struck than Edward found himself powerless within his realm. The baronage roused itself to resistance, and the two greatest of the English nobles, Bohun, Earl of Hereford, and Bigod, Earl of Norfolk, placed themselves at the head of the opposition. Their protest against the war and the financial measures by which it was carried on, took the practical form of a refusal to lead a force to Gascony as Edward's lieutenants, while he himself sailed for Flanders. They availed themselves of the plea that they were not bound to foreign service save in attendance on the King. "By God, Sir Earl," swore the King to Bigod, "you shall either go or hang!" "By God, Sir King," was the cool reply, "I will neither go nor hang!" Ere the Parliament he had convened could meet, Edward had discovered his own powerlessness, and, with one of those sudden revulsions of feeling of which his nature was capable, he stood before his people in Westminster Hall and owned, with a burst of tears, that he had taken their substance without due warrant of law. His passionate appeal to their loyalty wrested a reluctant assent to the prosecution of the war, but the crisis had taught the need of further securities against the royal power. While Edward was still struggling in Flanders, the Primate, Winchelsey, joined the two Earls and the citizens of London in forbidding any further levy of supplies till Edward at Ghent solemnly confirmed the Charter with the new clauses added to it prohibiting the King from raising taxes save by general consent of the realm. At the demand of the Barons he renewed the Confirmation in 1299, when his attempt to add an evasive clause saving the rights of the Crown proved the justice of their distrust. Two years later a fresh gathering of the Barons in arms wrested from him the full execution of the Charter of Forests. The bitterness of his humiliation preyed on him; he evaded his pledge to levy no new taxes on merchandize by the sale to merchants of certain privileges of trading; and a formal absolution from his promises which he obtained from the Pope showed his intention of reopening the questions he had yielded. His hand was stayed, however, by the fatal struggle with Scotland which revived in the rising of Robert Bruce, and the King's death bequeathed the contest to his worthless son.

SEC. V
 THE KING
 AND THE BARONAGE
 1290
 TO 1327 1297

1301

1305

1307

Worthless, however, as Edward the Second morally might be, he was far from being destitute of the intellectual power which seemed hereditary in the Plantagenets. It was his settled purpose to fling off the yoke of the baronage, and the means by which he

Edward
 the Second 1307-1327

SEC. V
 THE KING
 AND THE BARONAGE
 1290
 TO 1327 designed accomplishing his purpose was the choice of a minister wholly dependent on the Crown. We have already noticed the change by which the "clerks of the king's chapel," who had been the ministers of arbitrary government under the Normans and

MUSICIANS (SHAWM AND PORTATIVE) AND AUDIENCE, A.D. 1338—1344.
MS. Bodl. Misc. 264.

Angevins, had been quietly superseded by the prelates and lords of the Continual Council. At the close of his father's reign, a direct demand on the part of the Barons to nominate the great officers of state had been curtly rejected ; but the royal choice had been practically limited in the selection of its ministers to the class of prelates and nobles, and, however closely connected with royalty, such officers always to a great extent shared the feelings and opinions of their order. It seems to have been the aim of the young King to undo the change which had been silently brought about, and to imitate the policy of the contemporary sovereigns of France by choosing as his ministers men of an inferior position, wholly dependent on the Crown for their power, and representatives of nothing but the policy and interests of their master.

VIOL AND HARP, A.D. 1338—1344.
MS. Bodl. Misc. 264.

Piers Gaveston, a foreigner sprung from a family of Guienne, had been his friend and companion during his father's reign, at the close of which he had been banished from the realm for his share in intrigues which had divided Edward from his son. At the new

SEC. V
THE KING
AND THE BARONAGE
1290
TO 1327

HORN-PLAYER, A.D. 1338—1344.

CITTERN-PLAYER, A.D. 1338—1344.

MS. Bodl. Misc. 264.

King's accession he was at once recalled, created Earl of Cornwall, and placed at the head of the administration. Gay, genial, thriftless, Gaveston showed in his first acts the quickness and audacity of Southern Gaul; the older ministers were dismissed, all claims of DRUMMER, A.D. 1338—1344.

MS. Bodl. Misc. 264.

precedence or inheritance set aside in the distribution of offices at the coronation, while taunts and defiances goaded the proud baronage to fury. The favourite was a fine soldier, and his lance unhorsed his opponents in tourney after tourney. His reckless wit flung nicknames about the Court; the Earl of Lancaster was "the Actor," Pembroke "the Jew," Warwick "the Black Dog." But taunt and defiance broke helplessly against the iron mass of the baronage. After a few months of power the demand of the 1308

1307

SEC. V
 THE KING
 AND THE BARONAGE
 1290
 TO 1327
 1309

Parliament for his dismissal could not be resisted, and he was formally banished from the realm. In the following year it was only by conceding the rights which his father had sought to establish of imposing import duties on the merchants by their own assent, that Edward procured a subsidy for the Scotch war. The firmness of the baronage sprang from their having found a head in the Earl of Lancaster, son of Edmund Crouchback. His weight proved irresistible. When Edward at the close of the Parliament recalled Gaveston, Lancaster withdrew from the royal Council, and a Parliament which met in 1310 resolved that the affairs of the realm should be entrusted for a year to a body of twenty-one "Ordainers."

The Lords Ordainers
 1311

A formidable list of "Ordinances" drawn up by the twenty-one met Edward on his return from a fruitless warfare with the Scots. By this long and important statute Gaveston was banished, other advisers were driven from the Council, and the Florentine bankers whose loans had enabled Edward to hold the baronage at bay sent out of the realm. The customs duties imposed by Edward the First were declared to be illegal. Parliaments were to be called every year, and in these assemblies the King's servants were to be brought, if need were, to justice. The great officers of state were to be appointed with the counsel and consent of the baronage, and to be sworn in Parliament. The same consent of the Barons in Parliament was to be needful ere the King could declare war or absent himself from the realm. As the Ordinances show, the baronage still looked on Parliament rather as a political organiza-

BAGPIPER, A.D. 1338—1344.
MS. Bodl. Misc. 264.

DAVID PLAYING ON BELLS.
 Early Fourteenth Century.
MS. Roy. 2 B. vii.

tion of the nobles than as a gathering of the three Estates of the realm. The lower clergy pass unnoticed; the Commons are regarded as mere tax-payers whose part was still confined to the presentation of petitions of grievances and the grant of money. But even in this imperfect fashion the Parliament was a real

SEC. V
THE KING
AND THE BARONAGE
1290
TO 1327

MORRIS-DANCE, A.D. 1338—1344.
MS. Bodl. Misc. 264.

representation of the country, and Edward was forced to assent to the Ordinances after a long and obstinate struggle. The exile of Gaveston was the sign of the Barons' triumph; his recall a few months later renewed a strife which was only ended by his capture in Scarborough. The "Black Dog" of Warwick had sworn that CHILDREN CATCHING BUTTERFLIES, A.D. 1338—1344.

MS. Bodl. Misc. 264.

the favourite should feel his teeth; and Gaveston, who flung himself in vain at the feet of the Earl of Lancaster, praying for pity "from his gentle lord," was beheaded in defiance of the terms of his capitulation on Blacklow Hill. The King's burst of grief was as fruitless as his threats of vengeance; a feigned submission of the conquerors completed the royal humiliation, and the barons

SEC. V
 THE KING
 AND THE BARONAGE
 1290
 TO 1327

1318 knelt before Edward in Westminster Hall to receive a pardon which seemed the deathblow of the royal power. But if Edward was powerless to conquer the baronage he could still, by evading the observance of the Ordinances, throw the whole realm into confusion. The six years that follow Gaveston's death are among the darkest in our history. A terrible succession of famines intensified the suffering which sprang from the utter absence of all rule during the dissension between the Barons and the King. The overthrow of Bannockburn, and the ravages of the Scots in the North, brought shame on England such as it had never known. At last the capture of Berwick by Robert Bruce forced Edward to give way, the Ordinances were formally accepted, an amnesty granted, and a small number of peers belonging to the Barons' party added to the great officers of state.

LADY AND YOUTH PLAYING DRAUGHTS.
 Early Fourteenth Century.
MS. Roy. 2 B. vii.

The Despensers

The Earl of Lancaster, by the union of the four earldoms of Lincoln, Leicester, Derby, and Lancaster, as well as by his royal blood (for like the King he was a grandson of Henry the Third), stood at the head of the English baronage, and the issue of the long struggle with Edward raised him for the moment to supreme power in the realm. But his character seems to have fallen far beneath the greatness of his position. Incapable of governing, he could do little but regard with jealousy the new advisers on whom the King now leaned, the older and the younger Hugh Le Despenser. The rise of the younger, on whom the King bestowed the county of Glamorgan with the hand of its heiress, was rapid enough to excite general jealousy, and Lancaster found little difficulty in extorting by force of arms his exile from the kingdom. But the tide of popular sympathy, already wavering, was turned to the royal cause by an insult offered to the Queen, against whom Lady Badlesmere had closed the doors of Ledes Castle, and the unexpected energy shown by Edward in avenging the insult gave fresh strength to his cause. He found himself strong enough to recall Despenser, and when Lancaster convoked the baronage to force him again into exile, the weakness of their party was shown by the treasonable negotiations into which the Earl entered with the Scots, and by his precipitate retreat to the north on the advance of the royal army. At Boroughbridge his forces were arrested and dispersed, and the Earl himself, brought captive before Edward at Pontefract, was tried and condemned to death as a traitor. "Have mercy on me, King of Heaven," cried Lancaster, as mounted on a grey pony without a bridle he was hurried to execution, "for my earthly King has forsaken me." His death was followed by that of a number of his adherents and by the captivity of others; while a Parliament at York annulled the proceedings against the Despensers, and repealed the Ordinances. It is to this Parliament however, and perhaps to the victorious confidence of the royalists, that we owe the famous provision which reveals the policy of the Despensers, the provision that all laws concerning "the estate of the Crown, or of the realm and people, shall be treated, accorded, and established in Parliaments by our Lord the King and by the consent of the prelates, earls, barons, and commonalty of the realm, according as hath been hitherto accustomed." It would seem from the tenor of this remarkable enactment that much of the sudden revulsion of popular feeling had been owing to the assumption of all legislative action by the baronage alone. But the arrogance of the Despensers, the utter failure of a fresh campaign against Scotland, and the humiliating truce for thirteen years which Edward was forced to conclude with Robert Bruce, soon robbed the Crown of its temporary popularity, and led the way to the sudden catastrophe which closed this disastrous reign. It had been arranged that the Queen, a sister of the King of France, should revisit her home to conclude a treaty between the two countries

SEC. V
 THE KING
 AND THE BARONAGE
 1290
 TO 1327
 1321

Fall of Lancaster
 1322

1323

SEC. V
THE KING
AND THE BARONAGE
1290
TO 1327

1326

whose quarrel was again verging upon war ; and her son, a boy of twelve years old, followed her to do homage in his father's stead for the duchies of Gascony and Aquitaine. Neither threats nor prayers, however, could induce either wife or child to return to his court ; and the Queen's connexion with a secret conspiracy of the baronage was revealed when the primate and nobles hurried to her standard on her landing at Orwell. Deserted by all, and repulsed by the citizens of London whose aid he implored, the King fled hastily to the west and embarked with the Despensers for Lundy Isle ; but contrary winds flung the fugitives again on the Welsh

BED AND CRADLE.
Early Fourteenth Century.
MS. Roy. 2 B. vii.

1327 Deposition of Edward

coast, where they fell into the hands of the new Earl of Lancaster. The younger Despenser was at once hanged on a gibbet fifty feet high, and the King placed in ward at Kenilworth till his fate could be decided by a Parliament summoned for that purpose at Westminster. The Peers who assembled fearlessly revived the constitutional usage of the earlier English freedom, and asserted their right to depose a king who had proved himself unworthy to rule. Not a voice was raised in Edward's behalf, and only four prelates protested when the young Prince was proclaimed King by acclamation, and presented as their sovereign to the multitudes without. The revolution soon took legal form in a bill which charged the captive monarch with indolence, incapacity, the loss of Scotland, the violation of his coronation oath, and oppression of the Church and baronage; and on the approval of this it was resolved that the reign of Edward of Caernarvon had ceased and that the crown had passed to his son, Edward of Windsor. A deputation of the Parliament proceeded to Kenilworth to procure the assent of the discrowned King to his own deposition, and Edward, "clad in a plain black gown," submitted quietly to his fate. Sir William Trussel at once addressed him in words which better than any other mark the true nature of the step which the Parliament had taken. "I, William Trussel, proctor of the earls, barons, and others, having for this full and sufficient power, do render and give back to you, Edward, once King of England, the homage and fealty of the persons named in my procuracy; and acquit and discharge them thereof in the best manner that law and custom will give. And I now make protestation in their name that they will no longer be in your fealty and allegiance, nor claim to hold anything of you as king, but will account you hereafter as a private person, without any manner of royal dignity." A significant act followed these emphatic words. Sir Thomas Blount, the steward of the household, broke his staff of office, a ceremony only used at a king's death, and declared that all persons engaged in the royal service were discharged. In the following September the King was murdered in Berkeley Castle.

SEC. V
 THE KING
 AND THE BARONAGE

1290
 TO 1327

CARVED CHEST, CHEVINGTON CHURCH, SUFFOLK.
 Temp. Edward II. or III.
 Gage, "History of Suffolk."

SEC. VI

THE SCOTCH WAR OF INDEPEND-ENCE
1306
TO 1342

Section VI.—The Scotch War of Independence, 1306—1342

[Authorities.—Mainly the contemporary English Chroniclers and state documents for the reigns of the three Edwards. John Barbour's "Bruce," the great legendary storehouse for his hero's adventures, is historically worthless. Mr. Burton's is throughout the best modern account of the time.]

The Scotch Revolt

To obtain a clear view of the constitutional struggle between the kings and the baronage, we have deferred to its close an account of the great contest which raged throughout the whole period in the north.

1305

With the Convocation of Perth the conquest and settlement of Scotland seemed complete. Edward I., in fact, was preparing for a joint Parliament of the two nations at Carlisle, when the conquered country suddenly sprang again to arms under Robert Bruce, the grandson of one of the original claimants of the crown. The Norman house of Bruce formed a part of the Yorkshire baronage, but it had acquired through intermarriages the Earldom of Carrick and the Lordship of Annandale. Both the claimant and his son had been pretty steadily on the English side in the contest with Balliol and Wallace, and Robert had himself been trained in the English court, and stood high in the King's favour. But the withdrawal of Balliol gave a new force to his claims upon the crown, and the discovery of an intrigue which he had set on foot with the Bishop of St. Andrews so roused Edward's jealousy that Bruce fled for his life across the border. In the church of the Grey Friars at Dumfries he met Comyn, the Lord of Badenoch, to whose treachery he attributed the disclosure of his plans, and after the interchange of a few hot words struck him with his dagger to the ground. It was an outrage that admitted of no forgiveness, and Bruce for very safety was forced to assume the crown six weeks after in the Abbey of Scone. The news roused Scotland again to arms, and summoned Edward to a fresh contest with his unconquerable foe. But the murder of Comyn had changed the King's mood to a terrible pitilessness; he threatened death against all concerned in the outrage, and exposed the 1306

SEC. VI
 THE SCOTCH WAR OF INDEPEND-ENCE
 1306
 TO 1342

1307

Robert Bruce

like children in their games." The play was soon turned into bitter earnest. A small English force under Aymer de Valence sufficed to rout the disorderly levies which gathered round the new monarch, and the flight of Bruce left his followers at Edward's mercy. Noble after noble was hurried to the block. The Earl of Athole pleaded kindred with royalty; "His only privilege," burst forth the King, "shall be that of being hanged on a higher gallows than the rest." Knights and priests were strung up side by side by the English justiciars; while the wife and daughter of Robert Bruce were flung into prison. Bruce himself had offered to capitulate to Prince Edward, but the offer only roused the old king to fury. "Who is so bold," he cried, "as to treat with our traitors without our knowledge?" and rising from his sick-bed he led his army northwards to complete the conquest. But the hand of death was upon him, and in the very sight of Scotland the old man breathed his last at Burgh-upon-Sands.

The death of Edward arrested only for a moment the advance of his army to the north. The Earl of Pembroke led it across the border, and found himself master of the country without a blow. Bruce's career became that of a desperate adventurer, for even the Highland chiefs in whose fastnesses he found shelter were bitterly hostile to one who claimed to be King of their foes in the Lowlands. It was this adversity that transformed the murderer of Comyn into the noble leader of a nation's cause. Strong and of commanding presence, brave and genial in temper, Bruce bore the hardships of his career with a courage and hopefulness which never failed. In the legends which clustered round his name we see him listening in Highland glens to the bay of the bloodhounds on his track, or holding single-handed a pass against a crowd of savage clansmen. Sometimes the little band which clung to him were forced to support themselves by hunting or fishing, sometimes to break up for safety as their enemies tracked them to the lair. Bruce himself had more than once to fling off his shirt of mail and scramble barefoot for very life up the crags. Little by little, however, the dark sky cleared. The English pressure relaxed, as the struggle between Edward and his barons grew fiercer.

James Douglas, the darling of Scotch story, was the first of the Lowland barons to rally again to the Bruce, and his daring gave heart to the King's cause. Once he surprised his own house, which had been given to an Englishman, ate the dinner which had been prepared for its new owner, slew his captives, and tossed their bodies on to a pile of wood gathered at the castle gate. Then he staved in the wine-vats that the wine might mingle with their blood, and set house and woodpile on fire. A terrible ferocity mingled with heroism in the work of freedom, but the revival of the country went steadily on.

SEC. VI
THE SCOTCH WAR OF INDEPEND-ENCE
1306
TO 1342

STIRLING CASTLE.
Slezer, "Theatrum Scotia," 1693.

Bruce's "harrying of Buchan" after the defeat of its Earl, who had joined the English army, at last fairly turned the tide of success. Edinburgh, Roxburgh, Perth, and most of the Scotch fortresses fell one by one into King Robert's hands. The clergy met in council and owned him as their lawful lord. Gradually the Scotch barons who still held to the English cause were coerced into submission, and Bruce found himself strong enough to invest Stirling, the last and the most important of the Scotch fortresses which held out for Edward.

1313

Stirling was in fact the key of Scotland, and its danger roused England out of its civil strife to a vast effort for the

SEC. VI
 THE SCOTCH WAR OF INDEPEND-ENCE
 1306
 TO 1342 Bannock burn
 June 24, 1314 recovery of its prey. Thirty thousand horsemen formed the fighting part of the great army which followed Edward to the north, and a host of wild marauders had been summoned from Ireland and Wales to its support. The army which Bruce had gathered to oppose the inroad was formed almost wholly of footmen, and was stationed to the south of Stirling on a rising ground flanked by a little brook, the Bannock burn which gave its name to the engagement. Again two systems of warfare were brought face to face as they had been brought at Falkirk, for Robert, like Wallace, drew up his force in solid squares or circles of spearmen. The English were dispirited at the very outset by the failure of an attempt to relieve Stirling, and by the issue of a single combat between Bruce and Henry de Bohun, a knight who bore down upon him as he was riding peacefully along the front of his army. Robert was mounted on a small hackney and held only a light battle-axe in his hand, but, warding off his opponent's spear, he cleft his skull with so terrible a blow that the handle of the axe was shattered in his grasp. At the opening of the battle the English archers were thrown forward to rake the Scottish squares, but they were without support and were easily dispersed by a handful of horse whom Bruce had held in reserve for the purpose. The body of men-at-arms next flung themselves on the Scottish front, but their charge was embarrassed by the narrow space along which the line was forced to move, and the steady resistance of the squares soon threw the knighthood into disorder. "The horses that were stickit," says an exulting Scotch writer, "rushed and reeled right rudely." In the moment of failure the sight of a body of camp-followers, whom they mistook for reinforcements to the enemy, spread panic through the English host. It broke in a headlong rout. Its thousands of brilliant horsemen were soon floundering in pits which had guarded the level ground to Bruce's left, or riding in wild haste for the border. Few however were fortunate enough to reach it. Edward himself, with a body of five hundred knights, succeeded in escaping to Dunbar and the sea. But the flower of his knighthood fell into the hands of the victors, while the Irishry and the footmen were ruthlessly cut down by the country folk as they fled. For centuries after, the rich plunder of the English camp left its traces on the treasure and vestment rolls of castle and abbey throughout the Lowlands.

Terrible as was the blow England could not humble herself to relinquish her claim on the Scottish crown. With equal pertinacity Bruce refused all negotiation while the royal title was refused to him, and steadily pushed on the recovery of his southern dominions. Berwick was at last forced to surrender,

SEC. VI
 THE SCOTCH WAR OF INDEPEND-ENCE
 1306
 TO 1342
 The Independence of Scotland

SIEGE OF CARLISLE BY THE SCOTS, A.D. 1315.
 Initial letter of Edward II.'s charter to Carlisle, 1316.
Archeological Journal.

and held against a desperate attempt at its recapture ; while barbarous forays of the borderers under Douglas wasted Northumberland. Again the strife between the Crown and the baronage was suspended to allow the march of a great English army to the north ; but Bruce declined an engagement till the wasted Lowlands starved the invaders into a ruinous retreat.
 The failure forced England to stoop to a truce for thirteen years, in the negotiation of which Bruce was suffered to take the 1318

1319

1323

SEC. VI
 THE SCOTCH WAR OF INDEPEND-ENCE
 1306
 TO 1342

royal title. But the truce ceased legally with Edward's deposition. Troops gathered on either side, and Edward Balliol, a son of the former king John, was solemnly received as a vassal-king of Scotland at the English court. Robert was disabled by leprosy from taking the field in person, but the insult roused him to hurl his marauders again over the border under Douglas and Randolph. An eye-witness has painted for us the Scotch army, as it appeared in this campaign: "It consisted of four thousand men-at-arms, knights and esquires, well mounted, besides twenty thousand men bold and hardy, armed after the manner of their country, and mounted upon little hackneys that are never tied up or dressed, but turned immediately after the day's march to pasture on the heath or in the fields. . . . They bring no carriages with them on account of the mountains they have to pass in Northumberland, neither do they carry with them any provisions of bread and wine, for their habits of sobriety are such in time of war, that they will live for a long time on flesh half-sodden without bread, and drink the river water without wine. They have therefore no occasion for pots or pans, for they dress the flesh of the cattle in their skins after they have flayed them, and being sure to find plenty of them in the country which they invade, they carry none with them. Under the flaps of his saddle each man carries a broad piece of metal, behind him a little bag of oatmeal: when they have eaten too much of the sodden flesh and their stomach appears weak and empty, they set this plate over the fire, knead the meal with water, and when the plate is hot put a little of the paste upon it in a thin cake like a biscuit which they eat to warm their stomachs. It is therefore no wonder that they perform a longer day's march than other soldiers." Against such a foe the English troops who marched under their boy-king to protect the border were utterly helpless. At one time the army lost its way in the vast border waste; at another all traces of the enemy had disappeared, and an offer of knighthood and a hundred marks was made to any who could tell where the Scots were encamped. But when found their position behind the Wear proved unassailable, and after a bold sally on the English camp Douglas foiled an attempt at intercepting him by a clever retreat. The English levies broke hopelessly up, and a fresh foray on Northumberland forced the English court to submit to peace. By the Treaty of Northampton the independence of Scotland was formally recognized, and Bruce acknowledged as its king.

The pride of England, however, had been too much aroused by the struggle to bear easily its defeat. The first result of the treaty was the overthrow of the government which concluded it, a result

SEC. VI
 THE SCOTCH WAR OF INDEPEND-ENCE
 1306
 TO 1342 Scotland
 and Edward
 the Third

WEST DOOR OF ELGIN CATHEDRAL.
 Early Fourteenth Century.

hastened by the pride of its head, Roger Mortimer, and by his exclusion of the rest of the nobles from all share in the administration of the realm. The first efforts to shake Roger's power were unsuccessful: a league headed by the Earl of Lancaster broke up without result; and the King's uncle, the Earl of Kent, was actually brought to the block, before the young King himself interfered in the struggle. Entering the Council chamber in Nottingham Castle, with a force which he had introduced through a secret passage in the rock on which it stands, Edward arrested Mortimer

SEC. VI
 THE SCOTCH WAR OF INDEPEND-ENCE
 1306
 TO 1342 with his own hands, hurried him to execution, and assumed the control of affairs. His first care was to restore good order throughout the country, which under the late government had fallen into ruin, and to free his hands by a peace with France for further enterprises in the north. Fortune, indeed, seemed at last to have veered to the English side; the death of Bruce only a year after the Treaty of Northampton left the Scottish throne to a child of but eight years old, and the internal difficulties of the realm broke out in civil strife. To the great barons on either side the border the late peace involved serious losses, for many of the Scotch houses held large estates in England, as many of the English lords held large estates in Scotland; and although the treaty had provided for their claims, they had in each case been practically set aside. It is this discontent of the barons at the new settlement which explains the sudden success of Edward Balliol in his snatch at the Scottish throne. In spite of King Edward's prohibition, he sailed from England at the head of a body of nobles who claimed estates in the north, landed on the shores of Fife, and, after repulsing with immense loss an army which attacked him near Perth, was crowned at Scone, while David Bruce fled helplessly to France. Edward had given no open aid to the enterprise, but the crisis tempted his ambition, and he demanded and obtained from Balliol an acknowledgement of the English suzerainty. The acknowledgement, however, was fatal to Balliol himself. He was at once driven from his realm, and Berwick, which he had agreed to surrender to Edward, was strongly garrisoned against an English attack. The town was soon besieged, but a Scotch army under the regent Douglas, brother to the famous Sir James, advanced to its relief, and attacked a covering force, which was encamped on the strong position of Halidon Hill. The English bowmen, however, vindicated the fame they had first won at Falkirk, and were soon to crown in the victory of Crécy; and the Scotch only struggled through the marsh which covered the English front to be riddled with a storm of arrows, and to break in utter rout. The battle decided the fate of Berwick, and from that time the town remained the one part of Edward's conquests which was preserved by the English crown. Fragment as it was, it was always viewed legally as representing the realm of which it had once formed a part. As Scotland, it had its chancellor, chamberlain, and other officers of State ; and the peculiar heading of Acts of Parliament enacted for England "and the town of Berwick-upon-Tweed" still preserves the memory of its peculiar position. Balliol was restored to his throne by the conquerors, and his formal cession of the Lowlands to England rewarded their aid. During the next three years Edward persisted in the line of policy he had adopted, retaining his hold over Southern Scotland, and aiding his sub-king Balliol in campaign after campaign against the despairing efforts of the nobles who still adhered to the house of Bruce. His

1332

1333

SEC. VI
 THE SCOTCH WAR OF INDEPEND-ENCE
 1306
 TO 1342

BERWICK-UPON-TWEED.
After J. M. W. Turner.

perseverance was all but crowned with success, when the outbreak of war with France saved Scotland by drawing the strength of England across the Channel. The patriot party drew again together. Balliol found himself at last without an adherent and withdrew to the Court of Edward, while David returned to his kingdom, and won back the chief fastnesses of the Lowlands. The freedom of Scotland was, in fact, secured. From a war of conquest and patriotic resistance the struggle died into a petty strife between two angry neighbours, which became a mere episode in the larger contest between England and France.

1337

1339

1342

CHAPTER V
THE HUNDRED YEARS' WAR

1336—1431

Section I.—Edward the Third, 1336—1360

[Authorities.—The concluding part of the chronicle of Walter of Hemingburgh or Hemingford seems to have been jotted down as news of the passing events reached its author ; it ends at the battle of Crécy. Hearne has published another contemporary account by Robert of Avesbury, which closes in 1356. A third account by Knyghton, a canon of Leicester, will be found in the collection of Twysden. At the end of this century and the beginning of the next the annals that had been carried on in the Abbey of St. Albans were thrown together by Walsingham in the "Historia Anglicana" which bears his name, a compilation whose history is given in the prefaces to the "Chronica Monasterii S. Albani" (Rolls Series). Rymer's "Fœdera" is rich in documents for this period, and from this time we have a storehouse of political and social information in the Parliamentary Rolls. For the French war itself our primary authority is the Chronicle of Jehan le Bel, a canon of S. Lambert of Liège, who had himself served in Edward's campaign against the Scots, and spent the rest of his life at the court of John of Hainault. Up to the Treaty of Brétigny, where it closes, Froissart has done little more than copy this work, making however large additions from his own inquiries, especially in the Flemish and Breton campaigns and the account of Crécy. A Hainaulter of Valenciennes, Froissart held a post in Queen Philippa's household from 1361 to 1369 ; and under this influence produced in 1373 the first edition of his well-known Chronicle. A later edition is far less English in tone, and a third version, begun by him in his old age after long absence from England, is distinctly French in its sympathies. Froissart's vivacity and picturesqueness blind us to the inaccuracy of his details ; as an historical authority he is of little value. The incidental mention of Crécy and the later English expeditions by Villani in his great Florentine Chronicle are important. The best modern account of this period is that by Mr. W. Longman, "History of Edward III." Mr. Morley ("English Writers") has treated in great detail of Chaucer.]

[Dr. Stubbs' "Constitutional History" (vol. ii.), published since this chapter was written, deals with the whole period.—Ed.]

England
under Edward III.

IN the middle of the fourteenth century the great movement towards national unity which had begun under the last of the Norman Kings seemed to have reached its end, and the perfect fusion dominus te xpi sui da inu q dignat^o qm ipi hiebur pte ai cas i tra ltor.

CORONATION OF A KING

MS. Corpus Christi College, Cambridge xx

EARLY FOURTEENTH CENTURY

of conquered and conquerors into an English people was marked by the disuse, even amongst the nobler classes, of the French tongue. In spite of the efforts of the grammar schools, and of the strength of fashion, English was winning its way throughout the reign of Edward the Third to its final triumph in that of his grandson. "Children in school," says a writer of the earlier reign, "against the usage and manner of all other nations, be compelled for to leave their own language, and for to construe their lessons and their things in French, and so they have since Normans first came into England. Also gentlemen's children be taught to speak French from the time that they be rocked in their cradle, and

SEC. I
EDWARD
THE THIRD 1336
TO 1360

SCHOOL, A. D. 1338—1344.
MS. Bodl. Misc. 264.

know how to speak and play with a child's toy ; and uplandish (or country) men will liken themselves to gentlemen, and strive with great busyness to speak French for to be more told of." "This manner," adds a translator of Richard's time, "was much used before the first murrain (the plague of 1349), and is since somewhat changed ; for John Cornwall, a master of grammar, changed the lore in grammar school and construing of French into English ; and Richard Pencrych learned this manner of teaching of him, as others did of Pencrych. So that now, the year of our Lord, 1385, and of the second King Richard after the Conquest nine, in all the grammar schools of England children leaveth French, and construeth and learneth in English." A more formal note of the change is found when English was ordered to be used in courts of law in 1362 "because the French tongue is much unknown ;" and

SEC. I
EDWARD
THE THIRD 1336
TO 1360 in the following year it was employed by the Chancellor in opening Parliament. Bishops began to preach in English, and the English tracts of Wyclif made it once more a literary tongue. This drift towards a general use of the national tongue told powerfully on literature. The influence of the French romances everywhere tended to make French the one literary language at the opening of the fourteenth century, and in England this influence had been backed by the French tone of the court of Henry the Third and the three Edwards. But at the close of the reign of CHAPEL ON WAKEFIELD BRIDGE.

Early Fourteenth Century.
Archæological Journal.

Edward the Third the long French romances needed to be translated even for knightly hearers. "Let clerks indite in Latin," says the author of the "Testament of Love," "and let Frenchmen in their French also indite their quaint terms, for it is kindly to their mouths; and let us show our fantasies in such wordes as we learned of our mother's tongue." But the new national life afforded nobler material than "fantasies" now for English literature. With the completion of the work of national unity had come the completion of the work of national freedom. Under the first Edward the Parliament had vindicated its right to the control of taxation, under the second it had advanced from the removal of ministers to the deposition of a King, under the third it gave its voice on questions of peace and war, controlled expenditure, and regulated the course of civil administration. The vigour of English life showed itself socially in the wide extension of commerce, in the rapid growth of the woollen trade, and the increase of manufactures after the settlement of Flemish weavers on the eastern coast; in the progress of the towns, fresh as they were from the victory of the craft-gilds; and in the development of agriculture through the division of lands, and the rise of the tenant farmer and the freeholder. It gave nobler signs of its activity in the spirit of national independence and moral earnestness which awoke at the call of Wyclif. New forces of thought and feeling, which were destined to tell on every age of our later history, broke their way through the crust of feudalism in the socialist revolt of the Lollards, and a sudden burst of military glory threw its glamour over the age of Crécy and Poitiers.

It is this new gladness of a great people which utters itself in the verse of Geoffrey Chaucer. Chaucer was born about 1340, the son of a London vintner who lived in Thames Street; and it was in London that the bulk of his life was spent. His family, though not noble, seems to have been of some importance, for from the opening of his career we find Chaucer in close connexion with the Court. At sixteen he was made page to the wife of Lionel of Clarence; at nineteen he first bore arms in the

SEC. I
EDWARD
THE THIRD 1336
TO 1360

WINCHESTER MARKET CROSS.
Built temp. Edward III.

Chaucer
1340-1400

CONSTANTINOPLE.
Loutrill Psalter, c. 1340.

campaign of 1359. But he was luckless enough to be made prisoner; and from the time of his release after the treaty of Brétigny he took no further share in the military enterprises of his time. He seems again to have returned to service about the Court, and it was now that his first poems made their appearance, and from this time John of Gaunt may be looked upon as his patron. He was employed in seven diplomatic missions which were probably connected with the financial straits of the Crown, and three of these, in 1372, 1374, and 1378, carried him to Italy. He visited Genoa and the brilliant court of the Visconti at Milan; at Florence, where the memory of Dante, the "great master" whom he commemorates so reverently in his verse, was still living, he may have met Boccaccio; at Padua, like his own clerk of Oxenford, he possibly caught the story of Griseldis from the lips of Petrarca. He was a busy, practical worker; Comptroller of the Customs in 1374, of the Petty Customs in 1382, a member of the Commons in the Parliament of 1386, and from 1389 to 1391 Clerk of the Royal Works, busy with building at CHAUCER.

MS. Harl. 4866.

Westminster, Windsor, and the Tower. A single portrait has preserved for us his forked beard, his dark-coloured dress, the knife and pen-case at his girdle, and we may supplement this portrait by a few vivid touches of his own. The sly, elvish face, the quick walk, the plump figure and portly waist were those of a genial and humorous man; but men jested at his silence, his love of study. "Thou lookest as thou wouldest find an hare," laughs the Host, in the "Canterbury Tales," "and ever on the ground I see thee stare." He heard little of his neighbours' talk when office work was over. "Thou goest home to thy own house

SEC. I
 EDWARD
 THE THIRD 1336
 TO 1360 anon, and also dumb as any stone thou sittest at another book till fully dazed is thy look, and livest thus as an heremite, although," he adds slyly, "thy abstinence is lite" (little). But of this abstraction from his fellows there is no trace in his verse. No poetry was ever more human than Chaucer's; none ever came

CHAUCER.

Ellesmere MS. of Canterbury Tales.

more frankly and genially home to its readers. The first note of his song is a note of freshness and gladness. "Of ditties and of songs glad, the which he for my sake made, the land fulfilled is over all," Gower makes Love say in his lifetime; and the impression of gladness remains just as fresh now that four hundred years have passed away. The historical character of Chaucer's work lies on its surface. It stands out in vivid contrast with the poetic literature from the heart of which it sprang. The long French romances were the product of an age of wealth and ease, of indolent curiosity, of a fanciful and self-indulgent sentiment. Of the great passions which gave life to the Middle Ages, that of religious enthusiasm had degenerated into the pretty conceits of Mariolatry, that of war into the extravagances of Chivalry. Love, indeed, remained; it was the one theme of troubadour and trouvère, but it was a love of refinement, of romantic follies, of scholastic discussions, of sensuous enjoyment—a plaything rather than a passion. Nature had to reflect the pleasant indolence of man; the song of the minstrel moved through a perpetual May-time; the grass was ever green; the music of the lark and the nightingale rang out from field and thicket. There was a gay avoidance of all that is serious, moral, or reflective in man's life: life was too amusing to be serious, too piquant, too sentimental, too full of interest and gaiety and chat. It was an age of talk: "mirth is none," says the Host, "to ride on by the way dumb as a stone;" and the trouvère aimed simply at being the most agreeable talker of his day. His romances, his rimes of Sir Tristram, his Romance of the Rose, are full of colour and fantasy, endless in detail, but with a sort of gorgeous idleness about their very length, the minuteness of their description of outer things, the vagueness of their touch when it passes to the subtler inner world. It was with this literature that Chaucer had till now been familiar, and it was this which he followed in his earlier work. But from the time of his visits to Milan and Genoa his sympathies drew him not to the dying verse of France, but to the new and mighty upgrowth of poetry in Italy. Dante's eagle looks at him from the sun. "Fraunces Petrark, the laureat poete," is to him one "whose rethorique sweete enlumyned al Itail of poetrie." The "Troilus" is an enlarged English version of Boccaccio's "Filostrato," the Knight's Tale bears slight traces of his Teseide. It was, indeed, the "Decameron" which suggested the very form of the "Canterbury Tales." But even while changing, as it were, the front of English poetry, Chaucer preserves his own distinct personality. If he quizzes in the rime of Sir Thopaz the wearisome idleness of the French romance, he retains all that was worth retaining of the French temper, its rapidity and agility of movement, its lightness

SEC. I
 EDWARD
 THE THIRD 1336
 TO 1360

1382

SEC. I
EDWARD
THE THIRD 1336
TO 1360 and brilliancy of touch, its airy mockery, its gaiety and good humour, its critical coolness and self-control. The French wit quickens in him more than in any English writer the sturdy sense and shrewdness of our national disposition, corrects its extravagance, and relieves its somewhat ponderous morality. If, on the other hand, he echoes the joyous carelessness of the Italian tale, he tempers it with the English seriousness. As he follows Boccaccio, all his changes are on the side of purity; and when the Troilus of the Florentine ends with the old sneer at the changeableness of woman, Chaucer bids us "look Godward," and dwells on the unchangeableness of Heaven.

The Canterbury Tales

But the genius of Chaucer was neither French nor Italian, whatever element it might borrow from either literature, but English to the core, and from 1384 all trace of foreign influence dies away. The great poem on which his fame must rest, the "Canterbury Tales," was begun after his first visits to Italy, and its best tales were written between 1384 and 1391. The last ten years of his life saw a few more tales added; but his power was lessening, and in 1400 he rested from his labours in his last home, a house in the garden of St. Mary's Chapel at Westminster. The framework—that of a pilgrimage from London to Canterbury—not only enabled him to string together a number of tales, composed at different times, but lent itself admirably to the peculiar characteristics of his poetic temper, his dramatic versatility, and the universality of his sympathy. His tales cover the whole field of mediæval poetry; the legend of the priest, the knightly romance, the wonder-tale of the traveller, the broad humour of the fabliau, allegory and apologue are all there. He finds a yet wider scope for his genius in the persons who tell these stories, the thirty pilgrims who start in the May morning from the Tabard in Southwark—thirty distinct figures, representatives of every class of English society from the noble to the ploughman. We see the "verray perfight gentil knight" in cassock and coat of mail, with his curly-headed squire beside him, fresh as the May morning, and behind them the brown-faced yeoman, in his coat and hood of green, with the good bow in his hand. A group of ecclesiastics light up for us the mediæval church—the brawny hunt-loving monk, whose bridle jingles as loud and clear as the chapel-bell —the wanton friar, first among the beggars and harpers of the country side—the poor parson, threadbare, learned, and devout (“Christ’s lore and His apostles twelve he taught, and first he followed it himself”)—the summoner with his fiery face—the pardoner with his wallet “bret-full of pardons, come from Rome all hot”—the lively prioress with her courtly French lisp, her soft little red mouth, and “Amor vincit omnia” graven on her brooch. Learning is there in the portly person of the doctor of physic, rich

SEC. I
—
EDWARD
THE THIRD 1336
TO 1360
—

KNIGHT.

SQUIRE.

Ellesmere MS. of Canterbury Tales.

with the profits of the pestilence—the busy serjeant-of-law, “that ever seemed busier than he was”—the hollow-cheeked clerk of Oxford, with his love of books, and short sharp sentences that disguise a latent tenderness which breaks out at last in the story of Griseldis. Around them crowd types of English industry; the merchant; the franklin, in whose house “it snowed of meat and drink;” the sailor fresh from frays in the Channel; the buxom wife of Bath; the broad-shouldered miller; the haberdasher,

SEC. I
EDWARD
THE THIRD 1336
TO 1360 carpenter, weaver, dyer, tapestry-maker, each in the livery of his craft ; and last, the honest ploughman, who would dyke and delve for the poor without hire. It is the first time in English poetry

MONK AND HIS DOGS.

FRIAR.

PARSON.

Ellesmere MS. of Canterbury Tales.

that we are brought face to face not with characters or allegories or reminiscences of the past, but with living and breathing men, men distinct in temper and sentiment as in face or costume or mode of speech ; and with this distinctness of each maintained throughout the story by a thousand shades of expression and

SEC. I
EDWARD
THE THIRD 1336
TO 1360

SUMMONER.

PARDONER.

PRIORESS.

WIFE OF BATH.

Ellesmere MS. of Canterbury Tales.

action. It is the first time too, that we meet with the dramatic power which not only creates each character, but combines it with

SEC. I
EDWARD
THE THIRD 1336
TO 1360 its fellows, which not only adjusts each tale or jest to the temper of the person who utters it, but fuses all into a poetic unity. It is life

MAN OF LAW.

CLERK OF OXFORD.

MERCHANT.

FRANKLIN.

Ellesmere MS. of Canterbury Tales.

in its largeness, its variety, its complexity, which surrounds us in the "Canterbury Tales." In some of the stories, indeed, composed no doubt at an earlier time, there is the tedium of the old romance or the pedantry of the schoolman ; but taken as a whole the poem

SEC. I
—
EDWARD
THE THIRD 1336
TO 1360
—

SHIPMAN

DOCTOR OF PHYSIC.

MILLER.

COOK.

Ellesmere MS. of Canterbury Tales.

is the work not of a man of letters, but of a man of action. Chaucer has received his training from war, courts, business,

SEC. I
EDWARD
THE THIRD 1336
TO 1360 travel—a training not of books, but of life. And it is life that he loves—the delicacy of its sentiment, the breadth of its farce, its laughter and its tears, the tenderness of its Griseldis or the Smollett-like adventures of the miller and the clerks. It is this largeness of heart, this wide tolerance, which enables him to reflect man for us as none but Shakspeare has ever reflected him, and to do this with a pathos, a shrewd sense and kindly humour, a

CANON'S YEOMAN.
Ellesmere MS. of Canterbury Tales.

freshness and joyousness of feeling, that even Shakspeare has not surpassed.

It is strange that such a voice as this should have awakened no echo in the singers who follow ; but the first burst of English song died as suddenly and utterly with Chaucer as the hope and glory of his age. The hundred years which follow the brief sunshine of Crécy and the "Canterbury Tales" are years of the deepest SECOND NUN.

NUN'S PRIEST.

MANCIPLE.

REEVE.

Ellesmere MS. of Canterbury Tales.

SEC. I
EDWARD
THE THIRD 1336
TO 1360 gloom ; no age of our history is more sad and sombre than the age which we traverse from the third Edward to Joan of Arc. The throb of hope and glory which pulsed at its outset through every class of English society died at its close into inaction or despair. Material life lingered on indeed, commerce still widened, but its progress was dissociated from all the nobler elements of national well-being. The towns sank again into close oligarchies ; the bondsmen struggling forward to freedom fell back into a serfage which still leaves its trace on the soil. Literature reached its lowest ebb. The religious revival of the Lollard was trodden out in blood, while the Church shrivelled into a self-seeking secular priesthood. In the clash of civil strife political freedom was all but extinguished, and the age which began with the Good Parliament ended with the despotism of the Tudors.

England
and France

The secret of the change is to be found in the fatal war which for more than a hundred years drained the strength and corrupted the temper of the English people. We have followed the attack on Scotland to its disastrous close, but the struggle, ere it ended, had involved England in a second contest, to which we must now turn back, a contest yet more ruinous than that which Edward the First had begun. From the war with Scotland sprang the hundred years' struggle with France. From the first France had watched the successes of her rival in the north, partly with a natural jealousy, but still more as likely to afford her an opening for winning the great southern Duchy of Guienne and Gascony—the one fragment of Eleanor's inheritance which remained to her descendants. Scotland had no sooner begun to resent the claims of her over-lord, Edward the First, than a pretext for open quarrel was found by France in the rivalry between the mariners of Normandy and those of the Cinque Ports, which culminated at the moment in a great sea-fight that proved fatal to 8,000 Frenchmen. So eager was Edward to avert a quarrel with France, that his threats roused the English seamen to a characteristic defiance. "Be the King's Council well advised," ran the remonstrance of the mariners, "that if wrong or grievance be done them in any fashion against right, they will sooner forsake wives, children, and all that they have, and go seek through the seas where they shall think to make their profit." In spite, therefore, of Edward's efforts the contest continued, and Philip found an opportunity to cite the King before his court at Paris for wrongs done to him as suzerain. Again Edward endeavoured to avert the conflict by a formal cession of Guienne into Philip's hands during forty days, but the refusal of the French sovereign to restore the province left no choice for him but war. The refusal of the Scotch barons to answer his summons to arms, and the revolt of Balliol, proved that the French outrage was but the first blow in a deliberate and long-planned scheme of attack; Edward had for a while no force to waste on France, and when the first conquest of Scotland freed his hands, his league with Flanders for the recovery of Guienne was foiled by the strife with his baronage. A truce with Philip set him free to meet new troubles in the north; but even after the victory of Falkirk Scotch independence was still saved for six years by the threats of France and the intervention of its ally, Boniface the Eighth; and it was only the quarrel of these two confederates which allowed Edward to complete its subjection. But the rising under Bruce was again backed by French aid and by the renewal of the old quarrel over Guienne—a quarrel which hampered England through the reign of Edward the Second, and which indirectly brought about his terrible fall. The accession of Edward the Third secured a momentary peace, but the fresh attack on Scotland which marked the opening of his reign kindled hostility anew; the young King David found refuge in France, and arms, money, and men were despatched from its ports to support his cause. It was this intervention of France which foiled Edward's hopes of the submission of Scotland at the very moment when success seemed in his grasp; the solemn announcement by Philip of Valois that his treaties bound him to give effective help to his old ally, and the assembly of a French fleet in the Channel drew the King from his struggle in the north to face a storm which his negotiations could no longer avert.

From the first the war took European dimensions. The weakness of the Empire, the captivity of the Papacy at Avignon, left France without a rival among European powers. In numbers, in wealth, the French people far surpassed their neighbours over the Channel. England can hardly have counted four millions of inhabitants, France boasted of twenty. Edward could only bring

SEC. I
EDWARD THE THIRD 1336
TO 1360 1294 1296 1304 1305
1332 1335
The Opening of the War 1337

SEC. I
EDWARD
THE THIRD 1336
TO 1360 eight thousand men-at-arms into the field. Philip, while a third of his force was busy elsewhere, could appear at the head of forty thousand. Edward's whole energy was bent on meeting the strength of France by a coalition of powers against her; and his plans were helped by the dread which the great feudatories of the Empire who lay nearest to him felt of French annexation, as well as by the quarrel of the Empire with the Papacy. Anticipating DRINKING-HORN GIVEN BY QUEEN PHILIPPA OF HAINAULT TO QUEEN'S COLLEGE, OXFORD.

Skelton, "Oxonia Antiqua Restaurata."

the later policy of Godolphin and Pitt, Edward became the paymaster of the poorer princes of Germany; his subsidies purchased the aid of Hainault, Gelders, and Jülich; sixty thousand crowns went to the Duke of Brabant, while the Emperor himself was induced by a promise of three thousand gold florins to furnish two thousand men-at-arms. Negotiations and profuse expenditure, however, brought the King little fruit save the title of Vicar-General of the Empire on the left of the Rhine; now the Emperor hung back, now the allies refused to move; and when the host at last crossed the border, Edward found it impossible to bring the French king to an engagement. But as hope from the Imperial alliance faded away, a fresh hope dawned on the King from another quarter. Flanders was his natural ally. England was the great wool-producing country of the west, but few woollen fabrics

1338

1339

SEC. I
EDWARD
THE THIRD 1336
TO 1360

SPINNING AND BLOWING FIRE.
Early Fourteenth Century.
MS. Roy. 10 E. iv.

were woven in England. The number of weavers' gilds shows that the trade was gradually extending, and at the very outset of his reign Edward had taken steps for its encouragement. He invited Flemish weavers to settle in his country, and took the new BOAT WITH RUDDER, A. D. 1338—1344.

MS. Bodl. Misc. 264.

immigrants, who chose the eastern counties for the seat of their trade, under his royal protection. But English manufactures were still in their infancy, and nine-tenths of the English wool went to the looms of Bruges or of Ghent. We may see the rapid growth of this export trade in the fact that the King received in a single

SEC. I
EDWARD
THE THIRD 1336
TO 1360

1340 year more than £30,000 from duties levied on wool alone. A stoppage of this export would throw half the population of the great Flemish towns out of work ; and Flanders was drawn to the English alliance, not only by the interest of trade, but by the democratic spirit of the towns which jostled roughly with the feudalism of France. A treaty was concluded with the Duke of Brabant and the Flemish towns, and preparations were made for a new campaign. Philip gathered a fleet of two hundred vessels at Sluys to prevent his crossing the Channel, but Edward with a far smaller force utterly destroyed the French ships, and marched to invest Tournay. Its siege however proved fruitless ; his vast army broke up, and want of money forced him to a truce for a year. A quarrel of succession to the Duchy of Brittany, which broke out in

(Obverse.)

(Reverse.)

GOLD NOBLE OF EDWARD III., 1344, COMMEMORATING THE VICTORY AT SLUYS.

1341, and in which of the two rival claimants one was supported by Philip and the other by Edward, dragged on year after year. In Flanders things went ill for the English cause, and the death of the great statesman Van Arteveldt in 1345 proved a heavy blow to Edward's projects. The King's difficulties indeed had at last reached their height. His loans from the great bankers of Florence amounted to half a million of our money ; his overtures for peace were contemptuously rejected ; the claim which he advanced to the French crown found not a single adherent save among the burghers of Ghent. To establish such a claim, indeed, was difficult enough. The three sons of Philip the Fair had died without male issue, and Edward claimed as the son of Philip's daughter Isabella. But though her brothers had left no sons, they had left daughters ; and if female succession were admitted, these daughters of Philip's sons would precede a son of Philip's daughter. Isabella met this difficulty by contending that though females could transmit the right of succession they could not themselves possess it, and that her son, as the nearest living male descendant of Philip, and born in his lifetime, could claim in preference to females who were related to Philip in as near a degree. But the bulk of French jurists asserted that only male succession gave right to the throne. On such a theory the right inheritable from Philip was exhausted; and the crown passed to the son of his brother Charles of Valois, who in fact peacefully mounted the throne as Philip the Sixth. Edward's claim seems to have been regarded on both sides as a mere formality; the King, in fact, did

SEC. I
EDWARD
THE THIRD 1336
TO 1360
1330

1331

MEETING OF EDWARD III. AND PHILIP OF FRANCE, 1331.

MS. Roy. 20 C. vii.

French, late Fourteenth Century.

full and liege homage to his rival for his Duchy of Guienne; and it was not till his hopes from Germany had been exhausted, and his claim was found to be useful in securing the loyal aid of the Flemish towns, that it was brought seriously to the front.

The failure of his foreign hopes threw Edward on the resources of England itself, and it was with an army of thirty thousand men that he landed at La Hogue, and commenced a march which was to change the whole face of the war. The French forces were engaged in holding in check an English army which had landed in Guienne; and panic seized the French King as Edward now marched through Normandy, and finding the bridges on the lower Seine broken, pushed straight on Paris, rebuilt the bridge of Poissy

Crécy

SEC. I
 EDWARD
 THE THIRD 1336
 TO 1360 and threatened the capital. At this crisis, however, France found an unexpected help in a body of German knights. The Pope having deposed the Emperor Lewis of Bavaria, had crowned as his successor a son of King John of Bohemia, the well-known Charles IV. of the Golden Bull. But against this Papal assumption of a right to bestow the German Crown, Germany rose as one man, and Charles, driven to seek help from Philip, now found himself in France with his father and a troop of five hundred knights. Hurrying to Paris this German force formed the nucleus of an army which assembled at St. Denys ; and which was soon reinforced by 15,000 Genoese cross-bowmen who had been hired from among the soldiers of the Lord of Monaco on the sunny Riviera, and arrived at this hour of need. The French troops too were called from Guienne to the rescue. With this host rapidly gathering in his front Edward abandoned his march on Paris, and threw himself across the Seine to join a Flemish force gathered at Gravelines, and open a campaign in the north. But the rivers in his path were carefully guarded, and it was only by surprising the ford of Blanche-Taque on the Somme, that Edward escaped the necessity of surrendering to the vast host which was now hastening in pursuit. His communications, however, were no sooner secured than he halted at the village of Crécy, in Ponthieu, and resolved to give battle. Half of his army, now greatly reduced in strength by his rapid marches, consisted of the light-armed footmen of Ireland and Wales ; the bulk of the remainder was composed of English bowmen. The King ordered his men-at-arms to dismount, and drew up his forces on a low rise sloping gently to the south-east, with a windmill on its summit from which he could overlook the whole field of battle. Immediately beneath him lay his reserve, while at the base of the slope was placed the main body of the army in two divisions, that to the right commanded by the young Prince of Wales, Edward the Black Prince as he was called, that to the left by the Earl of Northampton. A small ditch protected the English front, and behind it the bowmen were drawn up "in the form of a harrow," with small bombardars between them "which, with fire, threw little iron balls to frighten the horses"—the first instance of the use of artillery in field warfare. The halt of the English army took Philip by surprise, and he attempted for a time

Crécy
 August 26, 1346

to check the advance of his army, but the disorderly host rolled on to the English front. The sight of his enemies, indeed, stirred the King's own blood to fury, "for he hated them," and at vespers the fight began. The Genoese crossbowmen were ordered to begin the attack, but the men were weary with the march; a sudden storm wetted and rendered useless their bowstrings; and the loud shouts with which they leapt forward to the encounter were met with dogged silence in the English ranks. Their first arrow-flight however, brought a terrible reply. So rapid was the English shot, "that it seemed as if it snowed." "Kill me these scoundrels," shouted Philip, as the Genoese fell back; and his men-at-arms plunged butchering into their broken ranks, while the Counts of Alençon and Flanders, at the head of the French knighthood, fell hotly on the Prince's line. For the instant his small force seemed lost, but Edward refused to send him aid. "Is he dead or unhorsed, or so wounded that he cannot help himself?" he asked the envoy. "No, Sir," was the reply, "but he is in a hard passage of arms, and sorely needs your help." "Return to those that sent you, Sir Thomas," said the King, "and bid them not send to me again so long as my son lives! Let the boy win his spurs; for if God so order it, I will that the day may be his, and that the honour may be with him and them to whom I have given it in charge." Edward could see, in fact, from his higher ground, that all went well. The English bowmen and men-at-arms held their ground stoutly, while the Welshmen stabbed the French horses in the mêlée, and brought knight after knight to the ground. Soon the French host was wavering in a fatal confusion. "You are my vassals, my friends," cried the blind King John of Bohemia, who had joined Philip's army, to the German nobles around him: "I pray and beseech you to lead me so far into the fight that I may strike one good blow with this sword of mine!" Linking their bridles together, the little company plunged into the thick of the conflict to fall as their fellows were falling. The battle went steadily against the French: at last Philip himself hurried from the field, and the defeat became a rout: 1,200 knights and 30,000 footmen—a number equal to the whole English force—lay dead upon the ground.

"God has punished us for our sins," cries the chronicler of St.

SEC. I
EDWARD
THE THIRD 1336
TO 1360

Calais

SEC. I
 EDWARD
 THE THIRD 1336
 TO 1360

Denys, in a passion of bewildered grief, as he tells the rout of the great host which he had seen mustering beneath his abbey walls. But the fall of France was hardly so sudden or so incomprehensible as the ruin at a single blow of a system of warfare, and of the political and social fabric which rested on it. Feudalism depended on the superiority of the mounted noble to the unmounted churl; its fighting power lay in its knighthood. But the English yeomen and small freeholders who bore the bow in the national fyrd had raised their weapon into a terrible engine of war; in the English archers Edward carried a new class of soldiers to the fields of France. The churl had struck down the noble; the ycoman proved more than a match in sheer hard fighting for the knight.

SHOOTING AT BUTTS, C. A.D. 1340.
Loutrèll Psalter.

From the day of Crécy feudalism tottered slowly but surely to its grave. To England the day was the beginning of a career of military glory, which, fatal as it was destined to prove to the higher sentiments and interests of the nation, gave it for the moment an energy such as it had never known before. Victory followed victory. A few months after Crécy a Scotch army which had burst into the north was routed at Neville's Cross, and its King, David Bruce, taken prisoner; while the withdrawal of the French from the Garonne enabled the English to recover Poitou. Edward meanwhile turned to strike at the naval superiority of France by securing the mastery of the Channel. Calais was a great pirate-haven; in one year alone, twenty-two privateers had sailed from its port; while its capture promised the King an easy base of communication with Flanders, and of operations against

*Neville's Cross
 Oct. 1346*

France. The siege lasted a year, and it was not till Philip had failed to relieve it that the town was starved into surrender. Mercy was granted to the garrison and the people on condition that six of the citizens gave themselves unconditionally into the King's hands. "On them," said Edward, with a burst of bitter hatred, "I will do my will." At the sound of the town bell, Jehan le Bel tells us, the folk of Calais gathered round the bearer of these terms, "desiring to hear their good news, for they were all mad with hunger. When the said knight told them his news, then began they to weep and cry so loudly that it was great pity. Then stood up the wealthiest burgess of the town, Master Eustache de S. Pierre by name, and spake thus before all: 'My masters, great grief and mishap it were for all to leave such a people as this is to die by famine or otherwise; and great charity and grace would he win from our Lord who could defend them from dying. For me, I have great hope in the Lord that if I can save this people by my death, I shall have pardon for my faults, wherefore will I be the first of the six, and of my own will put myself barefoot in my shirt and with a halter round my neck in the mercy of King Edward.'" The list of devoted men was soon made up, and the six victims were led before the King. "All the host assembled together; there was great press, and many bade hang them openly, and many wept for pity. The noble king came with his train of counts and barons to the place, and the Queen followed him, though great with child, to see what there would be. The six citizens knelt down at once before the King, and Master Eustache said thus: 'Gentle King, here be we six who have been of the old bourgeoisie of Calais and great merchants; we bring you the keys of the town and castle of Calais, and render them to you at your pleasure. We set ourselves in such wise as you see purely at your will, to save the remnant of the people that have suffered much pain. So may you have pity and mercy on us for your high nobleness' sake.' Certes, there was then in that place neither lord nor knight that wept not for pity, nor who could speak for pity; but the King had his heart so hardened by wrath, that for a long while he could not reply; then he commanded to cut off their heads. All the knights and lords prayed him with tears, as much as they could, to have pity on them, but he would not hear. Then

SEC. I
 EDWARD
 THE THIRD 1336
 TO 1360 1347

SEC. I
EDWARD
THE THIRD 1336
TO 1360 spoke the gentle knight, Master Walter de Maunay, and said, 'Ha, gentle sire! bridle your wrath; you have the renown and good fame of all gentleness; do not a thing whereby men can speak any villany of you! If you have no pity, all men will say that you have a heart full of all cruelty to put these good citizens to death that of their own will are come to render themselves to you to save the remnant of their people.' At this point the King changed countenance with wrath, and said, 'Hold your peace, Master Walter! it shall be none otherwise. Call the headsman! They of Calais have made so many of my men die, that they must die themselves!' Then did the noble Queen of England a deed of noble lowliness, seeing she was great with child, and wept so tenderly for pity, that she could no longer stand upright; therefore she cast herself on her knees before her lord the King, and spake on this wise: 'Ah, gentle sire! from the day that I passed over sea in great peril, as you know, I have asked for nothing: now pray I and beseech you, with folded hands, for the love of our Lady's Son, to have mercy upon them.' The gentle King waited for a while before speaking, and looked on the Queen as she knelt before him bitterly weeping. Then began his heart to soften a little, and he said, 'Lady, I would rather you had been otherwise; you pray so tenderly, that I dare not refuse you; and though I do it against my will, nevertheless take them, I give them to you.' Then took he the six citizens by the halters and delivered them to the Queen, and released from death all those of Calais for the love of her; and the good lady bade them clothe the six burgesses and make them good cheer."

Poitiers

Edward now stood at the height of his renown. He had won the greatest victory of his age. France, till now the first of European states, was broken and dashed from her pride of place at a single blow. A naval picture of Froissart sketches Edward for us as he sailed to meet a Spanish fleet which was sweeping the narrow seas. We see the King sitting on deck in his jacket of black velvet, his head covered by a black beaver hat "which became him well," and calling on Sir John Chandos to troll out the songs he had brought with him from Germany, till the Spanish ships heave in sight and a furious fight begins which ends in a victory that leaves Edward "King of the Seas." But peace with France was as far off as ever. Even the truce which for seven years was forced on both countries by sheer exhaustion became at last impossible. Edward prepared three armies to act at once in Normandy, Brittany, and Guienne, but the plan of the campaign broke down. The Black

1347-1355

SEC. I
EDWARD
THE THIRD 1336
TO 1360

SEA FIGHT.
Early Fourteenth Century.
MS. Roy. 10 E. iv.

Prince, as the hero of Crécy was called, alone won a disgraceful success. Unable to pay his troops, he staved off their demands by a campaign of sheer pillage. Northern and central France had by this time fallen into utter ruin; the royal treasury was empty, the fortresses unoccupied, the troops disbanded for want of pay, the TILTING ON THE WATER.

Early Fourteenth Century.
MS. Roy. 2 B. vii.

country swept by bandits. Only the south remained at peace, and the young Prince led his army of freebooters up the Garonne into "what was before one of the fat countries of the world, the people good and simple, who did not know what war was; indeed, no war had been waged against them till the Prince came. The English

SEC. I
EDWARD
THE THIRD 1336
TO 1360 and Gascons found the country full and gay, the rooms adorned with carpets and draperies, the caskets and chests full of fair jewels. But nothing was safe from these robbers. They, and especially the Gascons, who are very greedy, carried off everything." The capture of Narbonne loaded them with booty, and they fell back to Bordeaux, "their horses so laden with spoil that they could hardly

ENGLISH SOLDIERS SCALING A FORTRESS IN GASCONY.

A Fifteenth Century picture (from a Flemish MS. of Froissart's Chronicle) of the Wars of Edward III.

1356 move." The next year a march of the Prince's army on the Loire pointed straight upon Paris, and a French army under John, who had succeeded Philip of Valois on the throne, hurried to check his advance. The Prince gave orders for a retreat, but as he approached Poitiers he found the French, who now numbered 60,000 men, in his path. He at once took a strong position in the fields

Poitiers
Sept. 19,
1356 of Maupertuis, his front covered by thick hedges, and approachable only by a deep and narrow lane which ran between vineyards. The Prince lined the vineyards and hedges with bowmen, and drew up his small body of men-at-arms at the point where the lane opened upon the higher plain where he was encamped. His force numbered only 8,000 men, and the danger was great enough to force him to offer the surrender of his prisoners and of the places he had taken, and an oath not to fight against France for seven years, in exchange for a free retreat. The terms were rejected, and three hundred French knights charged up the narrow lane. It was soon choked with men and horses, while the front ranks of the advancing army fell back before a galling fire of arrows from the hedgerows. In the moment of confusion a body of English horsemen, posted on a hill to the right, charged suddenly on the French flank, and the Prince seized the opportunity to fall boldly on their front. The English archery completed the disorder produced by this sudden attack; the French King was taken, desperately fighting; and at noontide, when his army poured back in utter rout to the gates of Poitiers, 8,000 of their number had fallen on the field, 3,000 in the flight, and 2,000 men-at-arms, with a crowd of nobles, were taken prisoners. The royal captive entered London in triumph, and a truce for two years seemed to give healing-time to France. But the miserable country found no rest in itself. The routed soldiery turned into free companies of bandits, while the captive lords procured the sums needed for their ransom by extortion from the peasantry, who were driven by oppression and famine into wild insurrection, butchering their lords, and firing the castles; while Paris, impatient of the weakness and misrule of the Regency, rose in arms against the Crown. The "Jacquerie," as the peasant rising was called, had hardly been crushed, when Edward again poured ravaging over the wasted land. Famine, however, proved its best defence. "I could not believe," said Petrarch of this time, "that this was the same France which I had seen so rich and flourishing. Nothing presented itself to my eyes but a fearful solitude, an utter poverty, land uncultivated, houses in ruins. Even the neighbourhood of Paris showed everywhere marks of desolation and conflagration. The streets are deserted, the roads overgrown with weeds, the whole is a vast solitude." The misery of the land at

SEC. I
 EDWARD
 THE THIRD 1336
 TO 1360

SEC. II
 THE GOOD
 PARLIA-MENT
 1360
 TO 1377 *Treaty of Brétigny
 May 1360*

last bent Charles to submission, and in May a treaty was concluded at Brétigny, a small place to the eastward of Chartres. By this treaty the English King waived his claims on the crown of France and on the Duchy of Normandy. On the other hand, his Duchy of Aquitaine, which included Gascony, Poitou, and Saintonge, the Limousin and the Angoumois, Périgord and the counties of Bigorre and Rouergue, was not only restored but freed from its obligations as a French fief, and granted in full sovereignty with Ponthieu, Edward's heritage from the second wife of Edward the First, as well as with Guisnes and his new conquest of Calais.

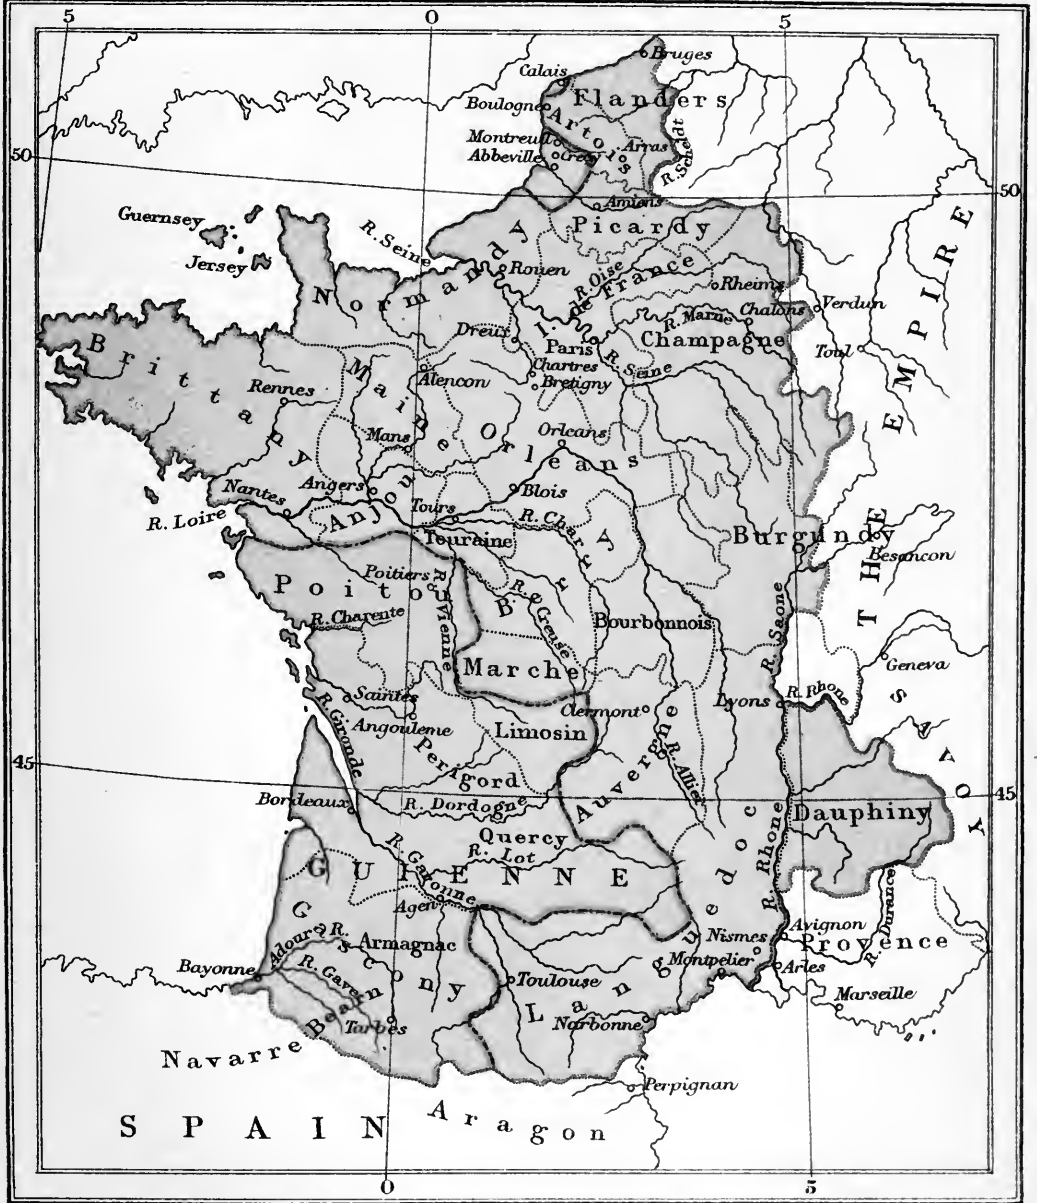

Section II.—The Good Parliament, 1360—1377

[Authorities.—As in the last period. An anonymous chronicler whose work is printed in the "Archæologia" (vol. 22) gives the story of the Good Parliament; another account is preserved in the "Chronica Angliæ from 1328 to 1388" (Rolls Series), and fresh light has been recently thrown on the time by the publication of a Chronicle by Adam of Usk from 1377 to 1404.]

The Two Houses

If we turn from the stirring but barren annals of foreign warfare to the more fruitful field of constitutional progress, we are at once struck with a marked change which takes place during this period in the composition of Parliament. The division, with which we are so familiar, into a House of Lords and a House of Commons, formed no part of the original plan of Edward the First; in the earlier Parliaments, each of the four orders of clergy, barons, knights, and burgesses met, deliberated, and made their grants apart from each other. This isolation, however, of the Estates soon showed signs of breaking down. While the clergy, as we have seen, held steadily aloof from any real union with its fellow-orders, the knights of the shire were drawn by the similarity of their social position into a close connexion with the lords. They seem, in fact, to have been soon admitted by the baronage to an almost equal position with themselves, whether as legislators or counsellors of the Crown. The burgesses, on the other hand, took little part at first in Parliamentary proceedings, save in those which related to the taxation of their class. But their position was

FRANCE AT THE TREATY OF BREITIGNY

London; Macmillan & Co Ltd

Stanford's Geographical Estab.

raised by the strifes of the reign of Edward the Second, when their aid was needed by the baronage in its struggle with the Crown ; and their right to share fully in all legislative action was asserted in the famous statute of 1322. Gradually too, through

SEC. II
THE GOOD
PARLIA-MENT
1360
TO 1377

THE ENGLISH HOUSE OF LORDS UNDER EDWARD I.
Pinkerton, "Iconographia Scotica;" from a drawing temp. Edward IV.

causes with which we are imperfectly acquainted, the knights of the shire drifted from their older connexion with the baronage into so close and intimate a union with the representatives of the towns that at the opening of the reign of Edward the Third the two orders are found grouped formally together, under the name of "The 1332

SEC. II
 THE GOOD
 PARLIA-MENT
 1360
 TO 1377

Commons"; and by 1341 the final division of Parliament into two Houses was complete. It is difficult to over-estimate the importance of this change. Had Parliament remained broken up into its four orders of clergy, barons, knights, and citizens, its power would have been neutralized at every great crisis by the jealousies and difficulty of co-operation among its component parts. A permanent union of the knighthood and the baronage, on the other hand,

BRASS OF SIR JOHN HARSYCK AND KATHERINE, HIS WIFE, 1384.
Boutell, "Monumental Brasses."

would had converted Parliament into a mere representative of an aristocratic caste, and would have robbed it of the strength which it has drawn from its connexion with the great body of the commercial classes. The new attitude of the knighthood, their social connexion as landed gentry with the baronage, their political union with the burgesses, really welded the three orders into one, and gave that unity of feeling and action to our Parliament on which its power has ever since mainly depended. From the moment of this change, indeed, we see a marked increase of parliamentary activity. The need of continual grants during the war brought about an assembly of Parliament year by year; and with each supply some step was made to greater political influence. A crowd of enactments for the regulation of trade, whether wise or unwise, and for the protection of the subject against oppression or injustice, as well as the great ecclesiastical provisions of this reign, show the rapid widening of the sphere of parliamentary action. The Houses claimed an exclusive right to grant supplies, and asserted the principle of ministerial responsibility to Parliament. But the Commons long shrank from meddling with purely administrative matters. Edward in his anxiety to shift from his shoulders the responsibility of the war with France, referred to them for counsel on the subject of one of the numerous propositions of peace. "Most dreaded lord," they replied, "as to your war and the equipment necessary for it, we are so ignorant and simple that we know not how, nor have the power, to devise : wherefore we pray your Grace to excuse us in this matter, and that it please you, with advice of the great and wise persons of your Council, to ordain what seems best to you for the honour and profit of yourself and of your kingdom ; and whatsoever shall be thus ordained by assent and agreement on the part of you and your lords we readily assent to, and will hold it firmly established." But while shrinking from so wide an extension of their responsibility, the Commons wrested from the Crown a practical reform of the highest value. As yet their petitions, if granted, were often changed or left incomplete in the statute or ordinance which professed to embody them, or were delayed till the session had closed. Thus many provisions made in Parliament had hitherto been evaded or set aside. But the Commons now met this abuse by a demand that on the royal assent being given their petitions should be turned without change into statutes of the realm, and derive force of law from their entry on the rolls of Parliament.

The political responsibility which the Commons evaded was at last forced on them by the misfortunes of the war. In spite of quarrels in Brittany and elsewhere, peace was fairly preserved in the nine years which followed the treaty of Brétigny ; but the shrewd eye of Charles the Fifth, the successor of John, was watching keenly for the moment of renewing the struggle. He had cleared his kingdom of the freebooters by despatching them into Spain, and the Black Prince had plunged into the revolutions of that country only to return from his fruitless victory of Navarete in broken health, and impoverished by the expenses of the campaign. The anger caused by the taxation which this necessitated was

SEC. II
THE GOOD
PARLIA-MENT
1360
TO 1377

BRASS OF ROBERT ATTELATHE, MAYOR
OF LYNN, d. 1376.
Taylor, "Antiquities of Lynn."

The Loss of Aquit-taine 1360-1369

1366

1367

SEC. II
 THE GOOD
 PARLIA-MENT
 1360
 TO 1377 1369

1372

fanned by Charles into revolt. He listened, in spite of the treaty, to an appeal from the lords of Aquitaine, and summoned the Black Prince to his Court. "I will come," replied the Prince, "but helmet on head, and with sixty thousand men at my back." War, however, had hardly been declared before the ability with which Charles had laid his plans was seen in his seizure of Ponthieu, and in a rising of the whole country south of the Garonne. The Black Prince, borne on a litter to the walls of Limoges, recovered the town, which had been surrendered to the French, and by a merciless massacre sullied the fame of his earlier exploits; but sickness recalled him home, and the war, protracted by the caution of Charles, who forbade his armies to engage, did little but exhaust the energy and treasures of England. At last, however, the error of the Prince's policy was seen in the appearance of a Spanish fleet in the Channel, and in a decisive victory which it won over an English convoy off Rochelle. The blow was in fact fatal to the English cause; it wrested from Edward the mastery of the seas, and cut off his communication with Aquitaine. Charles was roused to new exertions. Poitou, Saintonge, and the Angoumois yielded to his general Du Guesclin, and Rochelle was surrendered by its citizens. A great army under the King's third son, John of Gaunt, Duke of Lancaster, penetrated fruitlessly into the heart of France. Charles had forbidden any fighting. "If a storm rages over the land," said the King, coolly, "it disperses of itself; and so will it be with the English." Winter, in fact, overtook the Duke in the mountains of Auvergne, and a mere fragment of his host reached Bordeaux. The failure was the signal for a general defection, and ere the summer of 1374 had closed the two towns of Bordeaux and Bayonne were all that remained of the English possessions in southern France.

It was a time of shame and suffering such as England had never known. Her conquests were lost, her shores insulted, her fleets annihilated, her commerce swept from the seas; while within she was exhausted by the long and costly war, as well as by the ravages of pestilence. In the hour of distress the eyes of the hard-pressed nobles and knighthood turned greedily on the riches of the Church. Never had her spiritual or moral hold on the nation been less; never had her wealth been greater. Out of a population of some three millions, the ecclesiastics numbered between

CROZIER OF WILLIAM OF WYKEHAM, AT NEW COLLEGE, OXFORD.

a new stage in the character of the national opposition to the misrule of the Crown. Till now the task of resistance had twenty and thirty thousand. Wild tales of their riches floated about. They were said to own in landed property alone more than a third of the soil, their "spiritualities" in dues and offerings amounting to twice the King's revenue. The throng of bishops round the council-board was still more galling to the feudal baronage, flushed as it was with a new pride by the victories of Crécy and Poitiers. On the renewal of the war the Parliament prayed that the chief offices of state might be placed in lay hands. William of Wykeham, Bishop of Winchester, resigned the Chancellorship, another prelate the Treasury, to lay dependents of the great nobles; and the panic of the clergy was seen in large grants which they voted in Convocation. The baronage found a leader in John of Gaunt; but even the promise to pillage the Church failed to win for the Duke and his party the goodwill of the lesser gentry and of the burghesses; while the corruption and the utter failure of the new administration and the calamities of the war left it powerless before the Parliament of 1376. The action of this Parliament marks

SEC. II
—
THE GOOD
PARLIA-MENT
1360
TO 1377
—

1371

*The Good Parliament
April 1376*

SEC. II
THE GOOD
PARLIA-MENT
1360
TO 1377 devolved on the baronage, and had been carried out through risings of its feudal tenantry; but the misgovernment was now that of a main part of the baronage itself in actual conjunction with the Crown. Only in the power of the Commons lay any adequate means of peaceful redress. The old reluctance of the Lower House to meddle with matters of State was roughly swept away therefore by the pressure of the time. The Black Prince, sick as he was to death and anxious to secure his child's succession by the removal of John of Gaunt, the prelates with William of Wykeham at their head, resolute again to take their place in the royal councils and to check the projects of ecclesiastical spoliation, alike found in it a body to oppose to the Duke's administration. Backed by powers such as these, the action of the Commons showed none of their old timidity or self-distrust. The knights of the shire united with the burgesses in a joint attack on the royal council. "Trusting in God, and standing with his followers before the nobles, whereof the chief was John, Duke of Lancaster, whose doings were ever contrary," their speaker, Sir Peter de la Mare, denounced the mismanagement of the war, the oppressive taxation, and demanded an account of the expenditure. "What do these base and ignoble knights attempt?" cried John of Gaunt. "Do they think they be kings or princes of the land?" But even the Duke was silenced by the charges brought against the government, and the Parliament proceeded to the impeachment and condemnation of two ministers, Latimer and Lyons. The King himself had sunk into dotage, and was wholly under the influence of a mistress named Alice Perrers; she was banished, and several of the royal servants driven from the Court. One hundred and forty petitions were presented which embodied the grievances of the realm. They demanded the annual assembly of Parliament, and freedom of election for the knights of the shire, whose choice was now often tampered with by the Crown; they protested against arbitrary taxation and Papal inroads on the liberties of the Church; petitioned for the protection of trade, the enforcement of the statute of labourers, and the limitation of the powers of chartered crafts. At the death of the Black Prince his little son Richard was brought into Parliament and acknowledged as heir. But the Houses were no sooner dismissed than Lancaster resumed his power. His haughty will flung aside all restraints of law. He dismissed the new lords and prelates from the Council. He called back Alice Perrers and the disgraced ministers. He declared the Good Parliament no parliament, and did not suffer its petitions to be enrolled as statutes. He imprisoned Peter de la Mare, and confiscated the possessions of William of Wykeham. His attack on this prelate was an attack on the clergy at large. Fresh projects of spoliation were openly canvassed, and it is his support of these plans of confiscation which now brings us across the path of John Wyclif.

EFFIGY OF WILLIAM OF WYKEHAM ON HIS TOMB IN WINCHESTER CATHEDRAL.

SEC. II

THE GOOD PARLIAM-
MENT

1360

TO 1377

June 8July 6

SEC. III

JOHN
WYCLIF

Section III.—John Wyclif.

[Authorities.—The “Fasciculi Zizaniorum” in the Rolls Series, with the documents appended to it, is a work of primary authority for the history of Wyclif and his followers. A selection from his English tracts has been made by Mr. T. Arnold for the University of Oxford, which has also published his “Trias.” The version of the Bible that bears his name has been edited with a valuable preface by Rev. J. Forshall and Sir F. Madden. There are lives of Wyclif by Lewis and Vaughan; and Milman (“Latin Christianity,” vol. vi.) has given a brilliant summary of the Lollard movement.]

Wyclif

1324[?]-1361

Nothing is more remarkable than the contrast between the obscurity of Wyclif's earlier life and the fulness and vividness of our knowledge of him during the twenty years which preceded its close. Born in the earlier part of the fourteenth century, he had already passed middle age when he was appointed to the mastership of Balliol College in the University of Oxford, and recognized as first among the schoolmen of his day. Of all the scholastic doctors those of England had been throughout the keenest and the most daring in philosophical speculation; a reckless audacity and love of novelty was the common note of Bacon, Duns Scotus, and Ockham, as against the sober and more disciplined learning of the Parisian schoolmen, Albert and Aquinas. But the decay of the University of Paris during the English wars was transferring her intellectual supremacy to Oxford, and in Oxford Wyclif stood without a rival. From his predecessor, Bradwardine, whose work as a scholastic teacher he carried on in the speculative treatises he published during this period, he inherited the tendency to a predestinarian Augustinianism which formed the groundwork of his later theological revolt. His debt to Ockham revealed itself in his earliest efforts at Church reform. Undismayed by the thunder and excommunications of the Church, Ockham had not shrunk in his enthusiasm for the Empire from attacking the foundations of the Papal supremacy or from asserting the rights of the civil power. The spare, emaciated frame of Wyclif, weakened by study and by asceticism, hardly promised a Reformer who would carry on the stormy work of Ockham; but within this frail form lay a temper quick and restless, an immense energy, an immovable conviction, an unconquerable pride. The personal charm which ever accompanies real greatness only deepened the influence he derived from the spotless purity of his life. As yet indeed even Wyclif himself can hardly have suspected the immense range of his intellectual power. It was only the struggle that lay before him which revealed in the dry and subtle schoolman the founder of our later English prose, a master of popular invective, of irony, of persuasion, a dexterous politician, an audacious partisan, the organizer of

SEC. III

JOHN WYCLIF

JOHN WYCLIF.
Portrait at Knole.

a religious order, the unsparing assailant of abuses, the boldest and most indefatigable of controversialists, the first Reformer who dared, when deserted and alone, to question and deny the creed of the Christendom around him, to break through the tradition of the past, and with his last breath to assert the freedom of religious thought against the dogmas of the Papacy.

The attack of Wyclif began precisely at the moment when the Church of the middle ages had sunk to its lowest point of spiritual

England
and the Papacy

SEC. III
 JOHN WYCLIF

decay. The transfer of the papacy to Avignon robbed it of half the awe in which it had been held by Englishmen, for not only had the Popes sunk into creatures of the French King, but their greed and extortion produced almost universal revolt. The claim of first fruits and annates from rectory and bishoprick, the assumption of a right to dispose of all benefices in ecclesiastical patronage, the direct taxation of the clergy, the intrusion of foreign priests into English livings, the opening a mart for the disposal of pardons, dispensations, and indulgences, and the encouragement of appeals to the Papal court produced a widespread national irritation which never slept till the Reformation. The people scorned a "French Pope," and threatened his legates with stoning when they landed. The wit of Chaucer flouted the wallet of "pardons hot from Rome." Parliament vindicated the right of the State to prohibit any questioning of judgements rendered in the King's courts, or any prosecution of a suit in foreign courts, by the Statute of Præmunire; and denied the Papal claim to dispose of benefices by that of Provisors. But the effort was practically foiled by the treacherous diplomacy of the Crown. The Pope waived indeed his alleged right to appoint foreigners; but by a compromise, in which Pope and King combined for the enslaving of the Church, bishopricks, abbacies, and livings in the gift of Churchmen still continued to receive Papal nominees who had been first chosen by the Crown, so that the treasuries of King and Pope profited by the arrangement. The protest of the Good Parliament is a record of the ill-success of its predecessors' attempts. It asserted that the taxes levied by the Pope amounted to five times the amount of those levied by the King, that by reservation during the life of actual holders the Pope disposed of the same bishoprick four or five times over, receiving each time the first fruits. "The brokers of the sinful city of Rome promote for money unlearned and unworthy caitiffs to benefices of the value of a thousand marks, while the poor and learned hardly obtain one of twenty. So decays sound learning. They present aliens who neither see nor care to see their parishioners, despise God's services, convey away the treasure of the realm, and are worse than Jews or Saracens. The Pope's revenue from England alone is larger than that of any prince in Christendom. God gave his sheep to be pastured, not to be shaven and shorn." The grievances were no trifling ones. At this very time the deaneries of Lichfield, Salisbury and York, the archdeaconry of Canterbury, which was reputed the wealthiest English benefice, together with a host of prebends and preferments, were held by Italian cardinals and priests, while the Pope's collector from his office in London sent twenty thousand marks a year to the Papal treasury.

POPE AND CARDINALS.

Late Fourteenth Century.

MS. Add. 23923; Decretals of Boniface VIII.

SEC. III
 JOHN
 WYCLIF

If extortion and tyranny such as this severed the English clergy from the Papacy, their own selfishness severed them from the nation at large. Immense as was their wealth, they bore as little as they could of the common burthens of the realm. They were still resolute to assert their exemption from the common justice of the land, and the mild punishments of the ecclesiastical courts carried little dismay into the mass of disorderly clerks. Privileged as they were against all interference from the lay world without, the clergy penetrated by their control over wills, contracts, divorce, by the dues they exacted, as well as by directly

England
 and the Church

SEC. 111

JOHN WYCLIF

religious offices, into the very heart of the social life around them. No figure was better known or more hated than the summoner who enforced the jurisdiction and levied the dues of their courts. On the other hand, their moral authority was rapidly passing away; the wealthiest churchmen, with curled hair and hanging sleeves, aped the costume of the knightly society to which they really belonged. We have already seen the general impression of their worldliness in Chaucer's picture of the hunting monk and the courtly prioress with her love-motto on her brooch. Over the vice of the higher classes they exerted no influence whatever; the King paraded his mistress as a Queen of Beauty through London, the nobles blazoned their infamy in court and tournament. "In those days," says a chronicler of the time, "arose a great rumour and clamour among the people, that wherever there was a tournament there came a great concourse of ladies of the most costly and beautiful, but not of the best in the kingdom, sometimes forty or fifty in number, as if they were a part of the tournament, in diverse and wonderful male apparel, in parti-coloured tunics, with short caps and bands wound cord-wise round their head, and girdles bound with gold and silver, and daggers in pouches across their body, and then they proceeded on chosen coursers to the place of tourney, and so expended and wasted their goods and vexed their bodies with scurrilous wantonness that the rumour of the people sounded everywhere; and thus they neither feared God nor blushed at the chaste voice of the people." They were not called on to blush at the chaste voice of the Church. The clergy were in fact rent by their own dissensions. The higher prelates were busy with the cares of political office and severed from the lower priesthood by the scandalous inequality between the revenues of the wealthier ecclesiastics and the "poor parson" of the country. A bitter hatred divided the secular clergy from the regular; and this strife went fiercely on in the Universities. Fitz-Ralf, the Chancellor of Oxford, attributed to the Friars the decline in the number of academical students, and the University checked by statute their admission of mere children into their orders. The older religious orders in fact had sunk into mere landowners, while the enthusiasm of the Friars had in great part died away and left a crowd of impudent mendicants behind it.

RIDING TO A TOURNAMENT.

A TOURNAMENT.
MS. Roy. 19 C. 2.
Provençal, Fourteenth Century.

SEC. III

JOHN
WYCLIF

Wyclif could soon with general applause denounce them as sturdy beggars, and declare that "the man who gives alms to a begging friar is ipso facto excommunicate."

Wyclif
and Church Reform

Without the ranks of the clergy stood a world of earnest men who, like "Piers the Ploughman," denounced their worldliness and vice, sceptics like Chaucer laughing at the jingling bells of their hunting abbots, and the brutal and greedy baronage under John of Gaunt, eager to drive the prelates from office and to seize on their wealth. Worthless as the last party seems to us, it was with John of Gaunt that Wyclif allied himself in his effort for the reform of the Church. As yet his quarrel was not with the doctrines of Rome but with its practice, and it was on the principles of Ockham that he defended the Parliament's indignant refusal of the "tribute" which was claimed by the Papacy. But his treatise on "The Kingdom of God" (De Dominio Divino) shows how different his aims really were from the selfish aims of the men with whom he acted. In this, the most famous of his works, Wyclif bases his action on a distinct ideal of society. All authority, to use his own expression, is "founded in grace." Dominion in the highest sense is in God alone; it is God who, as the suzerain of the

TOMB OF ARCHBISHOP PECKHAM (1313), IN CANTERBURY CATHEDRAL.

SEC. III
—
JOHN WYCLIF
—

c. 1368

RUINS OF HALL, MAYFIELD, SUSSEX.

Built by Archbishop Islip, c. 1350.

Drawing by S. H. Grimm, 1783. MS. Add. Burrell, 5671.

universe, deals out His rule in fief to rulers in their various stations on tenure of their obedience to Himself. It was easy to object that in such a case "dominion" could never exist, since mortal sin is a breach of such a tenure, and all men sin. But, as Wyclif urged it, the theory is a purely ideal one. In actual practice he distinguishes between dominion and power, power which the wicked may have by God's permission, and to which the Christian must submit from motives of obedience to God. In his own scholastic phrase, so strangely perverted afterwards, here on earth "God

SEC. III
JOHN WYCLIF

must obey the devil." But whether in the ideal or practical view of the matter, all power or dominion was of God. It was granted by Him not to one person, His Vicar on earth, as the Papacy alleged, but to all. The King was as truly God's Vicar as the Pope. The royal power was as sacred as the ecclesiastical, and as complete over temporal things, even the temporalities of the Church, as that of the Church over spiritual things. On the question of Church and State therefore the distinction between the ideal and practical view of "dominion" was of little account. Wyclif's application of the theory to the individual conscience was of far higher and wider importance. Obedient as each Christian might be to king or priest, he himself, as a possessor of "dominion," held immediately of God. The throne of God Himself was the tribunal of personal appeal. What the Reformers of the sixteenth century attempted to do by their theory of Justification by Faith, Wyclif attempted to do by his theory of "dominion." It was a theory which in establishing a direct relation between man and God swept away the whole basis of a mediating priesthood on which the mediæval Church was built; but for a time its real drift was hardly perceived. To Wyclif's theory of Church and State, his subjection of their temporalities to the Crown, his contention that like other property they might be seized and employed for national purposes, his wish for their voluntary abandonment and the return of the Church to its original poverty, the clergy were more sensitive. They were bitterly galled when he came forward as the theological bulwark of the Lancastrian party at a time when they were writhing under the attack on Wykeham by the nobles; and in the prosecution of Wyclif, they resolved to return blow for blow. He was summoned before Bishop Courtenay of London to answer for his heretical propositions concerning the wealth of the Church. The Duke of Lancaster accepted the challenge as really given to himself, and stood by Wyclif's side in the Consistory Court at St. Paul's. But no trial took place. Fierce words passed between the nobles and the prelate; the Duke himself was said to have threatened to drag Courtenay out of the church by the hair of his head, and at last the London populace, to whom John of Gaunt was hateful, burst in to their Bishop's rescue, and Wyclif's life was saved with difficulty by the aid of the soldiery. But his courage only grew with the danger. A Papal bull which was procured by the bishops, directing the University to condemn and arrest him, extorted from him a bold defiance. In a defence circulated widely through the kingdom and laid before Parliament, Wyclif broadly asserted that no man could be excommunicated by the Pope "unless he were first excommunicated by himself." He denied the right of the Church to exact or defend temporal privileges by spiritual censures, declared that a Church might justly be deprived by the King or lay lords of its property for defect of duty, and defended the subjection of ecclesiastics to civil tribunals. Bold as the defiance was, it won the support of the people and of the Crown. When he appeared at the close of the year in Lambeth Chapel to answer the Archbishop's summons, a message from the Court forbade the Primate to proceed, and the Londoners broke in and dissolved the session.

1377

SEC. III
—
JOHN WYCLIF
—

Wyclif was still working hand in hand with John of Gaunt in advocating his plans of ecclesiastical reform, when the great insurrection of the peasants, which we shall soon have to describe, broke out under Wat Tyler. In a few months the whole of his work was undone. Not only was the power of the Lancastrian party on which Wyclif had relied for the moment annihilated, but the quarrel between the baronage and the Church, on which his action had hitherto been grounded, was hushed in the presence of a common danger. His "poor preachers" were looked on as missionaries of socialism. The Friars charged him with being a "sower of strife, who by his serpent-like instigation has set the serf against his lord," and though Wyclif tossed back the charge with disdain, he had to bear a suspicion which was justified by the conduct of some of his followers. John Ball, who had figured in the front rank of the revolt, was claimed as one of his adherents, and was alleged to have denounced in his last hour the conspiracy of the "Wyclifites." His most prominent scholar, Nicholas Herford, was said to have openly approved the brutal murder of Archbishop Sudbury. Whatever belief such charges might gain, it is certain that from this moment all plans for the reorganization of the Church were confounded in the general odium which attached to the projects of the peasant leaders, and that any hope of ec-

The First Protestant

1381

SEC. III
 JOHN
 WYCLIF

clesiastical reform at the hands of the baronage and the Parliament was at an end. But even if the Peasant Revolt had not deprived Wyclif of the support of the aristocratic party with whom he had hitherto co-operated, their alliance must have been dissolved by the GATEWAY OF THORNTON ABBEY, LINCOLNSHIRE.

 Built c. 1382.

new theological position which he had already taken up. Some months before the outbreak of the insurrection, he had by one memorable step passed from the position of a reformer of the discipline and political relations of the Church to that of a protester against its cardinal beliefs. If there was one doctrine upon which the supremacy of the Mediæval Church rested, it was the doctrine of Transubstantiation. It was by his exclusive right to the performance of the miracle which was wrought in the mass that the lowliest priest was raised high above princes. With the formal denial of the doctrine of Transubstantiation which Wyclif issued in the spring of 1381 began that great movement of revolt which ended, more than a century after, in the establishment of religious freedom, by severing the mass of the Teutonic peoples from the general body of the Catholic Church. The act was the bolder that he stood utterly alone. The University, in which his influence had been hitherto all-powerful, at once condemned him. John of Gaunt enjoined him to be silent. Wyclif was presiding as Doctor of Divinity over some disputations in the schools of the Augustinian Canons when his academical condemnation was publicly read, but though startled for the moment he at once challenged Chancellor or doctor to disprove the conclusions at which he had arrived. The prohibition of the Duke of Lancaster he met by an open avowal of his teaching, a confession which closes proudly with the quiet words, "I believe that in the end the truth will conquer." For the moment his courage dispelled the panic around him. The University responded to his appeal, and by displacing his opponents from office tacitly adopted his cause. But Wyclif no longer looked for support to the learned or wealthier classes on whom he had hitherto relied. He appealed, and the appeal is memorable as the first of such a kind in our history, to England at large. With an amazing industry he issued tract after tract in the tongue of the people itself. The dry, syllogistic Latin, the abstruse and involved argument which the great doctor had addressed to his academic hearers, were suddenly flung aside, and by a transition which marks the wonderful genius of the man the schoolman was transformed into the pamphleteer. If Chaucer is the father of our later English poetry, Wyclif is the father of our later English prose. The rough, clear, homely English of his tracts, the speech of the ploughman and the trader of the day, though coloured with the picturesque phraseology of the Bible, is in its literary use as distinctly a creation of his own as the style in which he embodied it, the terse vehement sentences, the stinging sarcasms, the hard antitheses which roused the dullest mind like a whip. Once fairly freed from the trammels of unquestioning belief, Wyclif's mind worked fast in its career of scepticism. Pardons, indulgences, absolutions, pilgrimages to the shrines of the saints, worship of their images, worship of the saints

SEC. III

JOHN WYCLIF

1381

SEC. III
JOHN
WYCLIF

themselves, were successively denied. A formal appeal to the Bible as the one ground of faith, coupled with an assertion of the right of every instructed man to examine the Bible for himself, threatened the very groundwork of the older dogmatism with ruin. Nor were these daring denials confined to the small circle of the scholars who still clung to him ; with the practical ability which is so marked a feature of his character, Wyclif had organized some few years before an order of poor preachers, " the Simple Priests," PREACHING IN THE OPEN AIR, A.D. 1338—1344.

MS. Bodl. Misc. 264.

whose coarse sermons and long russet dress moved the laughter of the clergy, but who now formed a priceless organization for the diffusion of their master's doctrines. How rapid their progress must have been we may see from the panic-struck exaggerations of their opponents. A few years later they complained that the followers of Wyclif abounded everywhere and in all classes, among the baronage, in the cities, among the peasantry of the country-side, even in the monastic cell itself. " Every second man one meets is a Lollard."

Oxford
and the Lollards

" Lollard," a word which probably means " idle babbling," was the nickname of scorn with which the orthodox Churchmen chose to insult their assailants. But this rapid increase changed their scorn into vigorous action. Courtenay, now become Archbishop, summoned a council at Blackfriars, and formally submitted twenty-four propositions drawn from Wyclif's works. An earthquake in the midst of the proceedings terrified every prelate but the resolute Primate ; the expulsion of ill humours from the earth, he said, was of good omen for the expulsion of ill humours from the Church ; and the condemnation was pronounced. Then the Archbishop turned fiercely upon Oxford as the fount and centre of the new heresies. In an English sermon at St. Frideswide's, Nicholas Herford had asserted the truth of Wyclif's doctrines, and Courtenay ordered the Chancellor to silence him and his adherents on pain of being himself treated as a heretic. The Chancellor fell back on the liberties of the University, and appointed as preacher another Wyclifite, Repyngdon, who did not hesitate to style the Lollards "holy priests," and to affirm that they were protected by John of Gaunt. Party spirit meanwhile ran high among the students; the bulk of them sided with the Lollard leaders, and a Carmelite, Peter Stokes, who had procured the Archbishop's letters, cowered panic-stricken in his chamber while the Chancellor, protected by an escort of a hundred townsmen, listened approvingly to Repyngdon's defiance. "I dare go no further," wrote the poor Friar to the Archbishop, "for fear of death;" but he soon mustered courage to descend into the schools where Repyngdon was now maintaining that the clerical order was "better when it was but nine years old than now that it has grown to a thousand years and more." The appearance, however, of scholars in arms again drove Stokes to fly in despair to Lambeth, while a new heretic in open Congregation maintained Wyclif's denial of Transubstantiation. "There is no idolatry," cried William James, "save in the Sacrament of the Altar." "You speak like a wise man," replied the Chancellor, Robert Rygge. Courtenay however was not the man to bear defiance tamely, and his summons to Lambeth wrested a submission from Rygge which was only accepted on his pledge to suppress the Lollardism of the University. "I dare not publish them, on fear of death," exclaimed the Chancellor when Courtenay handed him his letters of condemnation. "Then is your University an open fautor of heretics," retorted the Primate, "if it suffers not the Catholic truth to be proclaimed within its bounds." The royal council supported the Archbishop's injunction, but the publication of the decrees at once set Oxford on fire. The scholars threatened death against the Friars, "crying that they wished to destroy the University." The masters suspended Henry Crump from teaching, as a troubler of the public peace, for calling the Lollards "heretics." The Crown however at last stepped roughly in to Courtenay's aid, and a royal writ ordered the instant banishment of all favourers of Wyclif, with the seizure and destruction of all Lollard books, on pain of for-

SEC. III
 JOHN WYCLIF
 1382

SEC. III

JOHN
WYCLIF.

feiture of the University's privileges. The threat produced its effect. Herford and Repyngdon appealed in vain to John of Gaunt for protection; the Duke himself denounced them as heretics against the Sacrament of the Altar; and after much evasion they were forced to make a formal submission. Within Oxford itself the suppression of Lollardism was complete, but with the death of religious freedom all trace of intellectual life suddenly disappears. The century which followed the triumphs of Courtenay is the most barren in its annals, nor was the sleep of the University broken till the advent of the New Learning restored to it some of the life and liberty which the Primate had so roughly trodden out.

The Death of Wyclif

Nothing marks more strongly the grandeur of Wyclif's position as the last of the great schoolmen, than the reluctance of so bold a man as Courtenay even after his triumph over Oxford to take extreme measures against the head of Lollardy. Wyclif, though summoned, had made no appearance before the "Council of the Earthquake." "Pontius Pilate and Herod are made friends to-day," was his bitter comment on the new union which proved to have sprung up between the prelates and the monastic orders who had so long been at variance with each other; "since they have made a heretic of Christ, it is an easy inference for them to count simple Christians heretics." He seems indeed to have been sick at the moment, but the announcement of the final sentence roused him to life again. "I shall not die," he is said to have cried at an earlier time when in grievous peril, "but live and declare the works of the Friars." He petitioned the King and Parliament that he might be allowed freely to prove the doctrines he had put forth, and turning with characteristic energy to the attack of his assailants, he asked that all religious vows might be suppressed, that tithes might be diverted to the maintenance of the poor and the clergy maintained by the free alms of their flocks, that the Statutes of Provisors and Præmunire might be enforced against the Papacy, that churchmen might be declared incapable of secular offices, and imprisonment for excommunication cease. Finally, in the teeth of the council's condemnation, he demanded that the doctrine of the Eucharist which he advocated might be freely taught. If he appeared in the following year before the Convocation at Oxford, it was to perplex his opponents by a display of scholastic logic which permitted him to retire without any retractation of his sacramental heresy.

NEW COLLEGE, OXFORD, AND ITS ONE HUNDRED CLERKS, c. 1453.
MS. New Coll. Oxford, cclxxviii.

SEC. III

JOHN WYCLIF

1383

For the time his opponents seemed satisfied with his expulsion from the University, but in his retirement at Lutterworth he was forging during these troubled years the great weapon which, wielded by other hands than his own, was to produce so terrible an effect on the triumphant hierarchy. An earlier translation of the Scriptures, in part of which he was aided by his scholar Herford, was being revised and brought to the second form, which is better known as "Wyclif's Bible," when death drew near. The appeal of the prelates to Rome was answered at last by a brief ordering him to appear at the Papal Court. His failing strength exhausted itself in the cold sarcastic reply which explained that his refusal to comply with the summons simply sprang from broken health. "I am always glad," ran the ironical answer, "to explain my faith to any one, and above all to the Bishop of Rome; for I take it for granted that if it be orthodox he will confirm it, if it be erroneous he will correct it. I assume, too, that as chief Vicar of Christ upon earth the Bishop of Rome is of all mortal men most bound to the law of Christ's Gospel, for among the disciples of Christ a majority is not reckoned by simply counting heads in the fashion of this world, but according to the imitation of Christ on either side. Now Christ during His life upon earth was of all men the poorest, casting from Him all worldly authority. I deduce from these premisses, as a simple counsel of my own, that the Pope should surrender all temporal authority to the civil power and advise his clergy to do the same." The boldness of his words sprang perhaps from a knowledge that his end was near. The terrible strain on energies enfeebled by age and study had at last brought its inevitable result, and a stroke of paralysis while Wyclif was hearing mass in his parish church of Lutterworth was followed on the next day by his death.

Dec. 31,
1384

DA 30 .G7 1901 v.1

SMC

GREEN, JOHN RICHARD, 1837-1883.

A SHORT HISTORY OF THE ENGLISH PEOPLE /
AZF-4395 (MCIH)

